amalgamation. In addition thereto we estimate that the amount of $58,941 can be saved in the operating expenses of the Indianapolis Gas Company by reduction of duplication of work and other wasteful expenses caused by competition. At the same time, it is estimated that $19,050 can be saved in the operation of the Citizens Gas Company by cutting off the duplication of service. These figures are based on the operating expenses of the two companies in 1912, and the savings must correspondingly increase as the volume of business becomes greater. It thus appears that by cutting off the New York office and eliminating certain known wastes of competition, there may be effected a saving of $99,991 per year in the operation of the gas business in this city. All of these economies, together with the saving in reduced capital charges on account of stoppage of duplicate construction, inure immediately to the benefit of the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company and ultimately, under your Franchise, to the benefit of the community generally.

Profits to the Citizens Gas Company.

Your Directors have ever felt that they were serving this community best by conducting your business in a businesslike manner and securing for you the return on your investment which your Franchise authorized, and which you had a reason to expect because of the subscriptions to the stock of this Company which made 60-cent gas possible in Indianapolis. They have therefore carefully considered the interests of the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company under the operation of the proposed lease, and they have concluded that there will be a large profit therefrom which will enable your Company more quickly to reach the maximum dividend authorized and to pay off the accrued back dividends authorized, and to reduce the price of gas still further in this community.

In addition to the saving of $80,941 in the operation of the Indianapolis Gas Company, as explained above, your Company would receive from the Indianapolis Company all other net profits after payment of rent. The net profits of that company in 1912 amounted to over $90,000. The company sold over 1,300,000,000 cubic feet of gas. The new plant now nearing completion will reduce the cost of gas in the holder from 22 cents to 10 or 11 cents, meaning a saving on last year's volume of business of about $150,- 000. This would make a total net profit for the Indianapolis Gas Company of $320,000, from which a rental of $140,000 would be deducted, leaving a net profit to your Company of $180,000 from the lease on the basis of last year's business. This is a conservative estimate since the gas sales of the Indianapolis Gas Company have been increasing annually at the rate of about 12½ per cent., so that the sales from the Indianapolis lines for the year 1914 will amount to about 1,700,000,000 cubic feet instead of 1,300,000,000 cubic feet as here given. But this conservative estimate is made still more conservative in the following statement, which has been presented to the Public Service Commission:

Estimate of Profits to Citizens Gas Company from Joint Operation of Citizens and Indianapolis Properties, Assuming No Increase in Business Over That of 1912 and Assuming a Saving in Manufacturing Costs of the Indianapolis Plant of Only 8.27 Cents.

Net earnings Indianapolis Gas Company, 1912.	$299,507.69
Savings on 1,329,179,000 cubic feet gas @ 8.27 cents	109,923.18
Saving from cutting off New York office	22,000.00
Saving from eliminating wastes	58,941.00
Net earnings on same volume of business	$490,371.87
Interest on $4,833,000 bonds @ 5%	241,650.00
Net profits	$248,721.87
Rent	140,000.00
Net gain to Citizens Gas Company	$108,721.87
Add net earnings Citizens Gas Company, 1912.	167,512.65
Add elimination of waste by Citizens Gas Company	19,050.00
Total Net Earnings for Citizens Gas Company	$295,284.52
Interest on $1,020,000 Citizens Bonds	51,000.00
Total Net Profits of Citizens Gas Company.	$244,284.52

Note—The profits to the Citizens Gas Company from operating the Indianapolis property as shown above would be equal to over 8½% on $1,250,000 of stock; and the combined profits, after all fixed charges, would be equal to over 19% on the Citizens stock.

In view of the fact that the business of both companies is increasing rapidly and that your Company will reap material benefits from the completion of its new By-Product Coke Ovens, as well as from the operation of the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, it is more reasonable to assume that the net profits to the Citizens Company for the calendar year 1914, after paying all bond interest and the rental of the Indianapolis property, would amount to $318,944. This estimate has been carefully worked out with the assumption that the total gas sales of the two companies in that year will amount to 2,214,273,000 cubic feet and that the gas will be sold at an average of 53 cents per thousand, and it is still estimated that the saving in manufacturing cost at the Indianapolis plant will be 8½ cents instead of 10 or 11 cents, as seems probable. This estimate also provides for some slight increase in bond interest for bonds sold to pay for gas main extensions.

For the year 1915, it is our belief, based on careful estimates, that the net profits to your Company, after paying all interest and rental charges, would amount to $326,323; and it is assumed, in our estimates, that the gas sales for that year will amount to 2,435,700,000 cubic feet and that the price of gas will average 50 cents per thousand cubic feet.

It will be observed that even on the most conservative of these estimates, your Company would be amply justified in renting and operating the other property, for the large surplus over dividend requirements would be ample to provide for unforeseen contingencies or for such reserves as might be considered wise by your Directors or required by the Public Service Commission. It is the belief of your Directors that the business will continue to show increasing earnings from year to year in the face of a continuance of our policy of reducing the price of gas for the benefit of the whole community. Your Company, after taking over the other property, would start with 51,000 consumers.

Profits to the Community.

Your Directors and Trustees have never lost sight of the purpose for which your Company was organized, namely the reduction in the price of gas, and it is their desire that this reduction from the present unparalleled low price of 60 cents may be made as rapidly as possible. But aside from the desires of the Management of your Company, its organization is such that any improvement in its earning capacity must work to the benefit of the community, for the Directors must either reduce the price of gas and thus continue the corporation's existence, or they must apply surplus earnings to the return of the principal of your investment, after which the property would pass by law to the ownership of the City of Indianapolis. It therefore follows that the showing of profits which is made above, while immediately indicating advantage to the Stockholders of this Company, must ultimately work to the advantage of the entire community. It will be the policy of your Directors to absorb these profits by reducing the price of gas rather than by extinguishing your stock, for it is believed that this policy would meet the wishes of this community.

Terms of the Proposed Lease.

It was agreed by your Company, before Indianapolis capital purchased the control of the Indianapolis Gas Company, that if such control should be acquired your Company would lease the property, subject to approval of the Public Service Commission, at a rental at the rate of $60,000 for the last half of 1913 and of $140,000 per year thereafter, with the further provision that after the dividends of the Citizens Company shall reach 8%, the rental shall advance to $160,000, but in the event that the Citizens Company should not earn 8% in any year, the rental should drop back to $140,000. In addition to the payment of such rental, the Citizens Gas Company would take care of the interest on the outstanding bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company, amounting to $4,833,000. While it was and is the desire of your Directors to obtain this property on the lowest rental possible, it was only on these terms that the investors could be induced to purchase the control of the Indianapolis Gas Company. The advantages to your Company from this lease are so great, as shown in the foregoing statements, that your Directors consider your Company easily justified in paying the rental agreed upon, although they would be glad to save at that point as at any other.

While the reproduction value of the property and business connections of the Indianapolis Gas Company is not a matter of prime importance in considering this lease, since the earning value of the lease to your Company is so clearly established, your Company has a safe knowledge of the physical property which it is proposed to lease, and considers it an extremely valuable addition to the physical property controlled by you. The Indianapolis Gas Company has over 375 miles of mains, mostly under paved streets, some 50,000 services, likewise largely under paved streets, and over 40,000 meters now in use. In addition to the distributing system the Indianapolis Company has a large manufacturing plant to which it is now adding By-Product Coke Ovens of modern type, to be paid for by the present owners. The very large Water Gas Plant of the old company is in perfect condition and will be permanently valuable for the purpose of giving elasticity to the manufacturing departments of the two companies, thus removing many of the dangers from emergencies which have confronted your Company with its much smaller Water Gas Plant. The By-Product Coke Ovens, the By-Product Recovery Plant and the Coal and Coke Handling Equipment, will be of the most modern type and will be entirely new when they come into the possession of your Company. The old Coal Gas Manufacturing Plant will not itself be operated, but the Purifier Plants, the Power Plants and the Compressor Plants of the company will be in perfect condition when turned over to your Company. In addition to the foregoing, the Indianapolis Company owns large new Shops, Stables and Warehouses on West Pratt Street, together with equipment and stores, all of which will come to this Company. By tying together the two systems of mains, a much more perfect distribution of gas can be obtained than has ever been possible heretofore, and the complete connection of the two manufacturing plants, located on opposite sides of the city would seem to remove forever the possibility of cutting off the city's supply under any emergencies whatever.

While it is undoubtedly true that the capitalization of the Indianapolis Gas Company was greatly inflated at the time of its reorganization twenty-three years ago, it must be remembered that the company has distributed no dividends since one amounting to 2 per cent. in the year 1900, and that prior to that time the dividends had been small for several years. Since that reorganization, all of the earnings of the company have been put back into the property and over 200 miles of mains have been laid, in addition to many other improvements. During that period no new bonds have been issued except to cover 90 per cent. of the actual cost of improvements on which the proceeds have been used, so that any bond discount allowed during that period has been paid out of earnings. Therefore, taking into consideration the present condition of the physical property, the large going-value represented by over 40,000 meters, and the fact that large earnings during a great many years were put back into the property, your Company does not regard the interest and rental charges assumed by it as excessive from the valuation point alone; but, as stated above, the main consideration at the present time is what the property can earn for the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company with gas selling at 60 cents or less.

It has been publicly stated that the present owners of the Indianapolis Gas Company acquired control in the interest of the Citizens Gas Company and were obliged to tie up nearly $2,000,000 in the purchase of stock, which in no case cost them less than 90 and in some cases more than par, and also to meet their obligation to complete payments on the new plant which is being constructed by their company. While the rent which it is proposed to pay will make their investment a good one, it must be said in justice to these gentlemen that they will reap no large speculative profits from the transaction. It must be remembered that your Company was not legally qualified to purchase this stock at the only time when it could be secured; and that if it had been legally possible to purchase the stock, your Company could not finance the transaction by the sale of its own stock and bonds, during the present period of tight money, without causing a tremendous fall in the values of both classes of securities. While, therefore, your Directors and Trustees would have been glad to obtain this property at lower charges, the rental is not considered excessive, in view both of the investment and risk of the present owners of the property, and of the very great advantages to you and to the community. The property was secured by a syndicate headed by Mr. Volney T. Malott, of the Indiana National Bank, and consisting of some six gentlemen, none of whom are Directors or Trustees of your Company. Although the stock of the Indianapolis Gas Company had a nominal quotation on the Indianapolis Exchange much lower than the price paid by this syndicate, there were no sales at the quoted prices; and you can readily understand that the purchase of not less than 30,000 shares of stock held by a few owners, none of whom were residents of Indianapolis, as was necessary in this case, could not be made on the basis of quotations for a few shares. The syndicate, in order to reap any benefit from its investment, must continue to hold the stock for a considerable period; and at the present time there are few groups of capitalists in this or any other community, that could be formed for the purpose of tying up so large an amount of money.

While the ownership of over three-fourths of the stock of the Indianapolis Gas Company will thus be held by about six persons, the absolute control of that property under the lease would be vested in your Company, which now represents 3,000 stockholders. Out of this number only one person holds as much as $25,000 of your stock. That amount is held by the broker who purchased $200,000 of it in January, and represents his entire holdings at the present time. Three persons hold between $20,000 and $25,000 of your stock. Fourteen persons held between $10,000 and $20,000 of your stock. Thirty-four persons hold from $5,000 to $10,000 of your stock. All of the balance is in the possession of persons whose respective individual holdings are under $5,000 each. It thus appears that both the control and the larger share of the profits from the Indianapolis Gas Company will be vested in this popular Company, under the Trusteeship established in your Franchise.

Report of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis Six Months Ending June 30, 1913

To the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company:

The Company presents herewith its report for the first half of the year 1913. The Spencer-Shively Public Utilities Act having fixed June 30th as the close of the fiscal year for all public utility corporations in the State of Indiana, the fiscal year of this Company hereafter will date from July 1st instead of January 1st.

Relations With Indianapolis Gas Company.

As you have been advised, your Company on February 27, 1913, after careful investigation and negotiations, entered into a contract with a syndicate organized by Mr. V. T. Malott, for the lease of all of the operating property and business of The Indianapolis Gas Company, over three-quarters of the stock of which the syndicate had acquired. After careful study of the business of The Indianapolis Gas Company, your Directors and Trustees were convinced that there would be large surplus profits for the Citizens Gas Company from the operation of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company under the proposed lease, thus making possible not only the earlier payment of accumulated dividends to which you are entitled, but also bringing nearer the day when a further reduction in the price of gas could be made. It was further believed that by acquiring permanent control of the opposition company, the position of the Citizens Gas Company and the perpetuation of cheap gas in Indianapolis could be assured as in no other way. A petition for the approval of said lease was submitted to the Public Service Commission, after the organization of the same. This matter is still pending before the Public Service Commission which has indicated that certain conditions would have to be met before the lease would be approved. The owners of The Indianapolis Gas Company have consented to a reduction of rental below that to which they would agree prior to the purchase of the stock of that Company by them, thus making the lease still more desirable from the point of view of this Company. It is hoped that the negotiations between the Commission and your Company will result in the approval of the lease, which is believed by your Directors and Trustees to be very favorable for you and the gas consumers of Indianapolis. Opponents of the proposed lease have made many criticisms based on partial or false information, but the prolonged consideration of the subject has only tended to convince your Directors of the advantages which the lease would secure for all of the interests for which the Citizens Gas Company has always stood.

Meanwhile competition between the two companies continues with much attendant waste to both and considerable hampering of the development of your Company; but many of the more unreasonable elements of competition were eliminated when the competing company passed into the hands of friends of the Citizens Gas Company. One of the first effects of the change of ownership was seen at the time of the floods which inundated the plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company and completely stopped operations there. The Citizens Gas Company immediately made a connection with the mains of The Indianapolis Gas Company and from March 25th to 28th sent to that Company 6,431,000 cubic feet of gas, supplying the entire amount consumed by the citizens of Indianapolis on some of the days named. Had The Indianapolis Gas Company been in the hands of its former owners, they would rather have had their consumers deprived of gas, thus vastly increasing the suffering caused by the flood, than to have accepted gas from the Citizens Gas Company, thus acknowledging obligation to your Company and recognizing its ability to supply the entire city. Since that time and pending the completion of the by-product coke ovens of The Indianapolis Gas Company, your Company has been supplying it with a large amount of gas. Permanent connections have been made between the lines of the respective companies, thus safeguarding the city in the event of an emergency at the plant of either. Your Company has never yet received gas from the other Company, but in the past there have been many occasions when there would have been large economies from the purchase of gas from it instead of operating your water gas plant, and at times there would likewise have been a complete avoidance of danger to your Company.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT NO. 93.

Report of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis Year Ending December 31, 1913.

To the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company:

The Company presents herewith its report for the year 1913, showing the results of operation for the entire year and also the report of receipts and disbursements for the two half year periods as required by the franchise.

Manufacturing Plants.

On October 1, 1913, your Company took over the operating property and business of The Indianapolis Gas Company. The operations for the year therefore include three months' operation of the Langsdale Avenue manufacturing plant and the entire Distribution System which had formerly been controlled by The Indianapolis Gas Company. Twenty-five of the new coke ovens at the Prospect Street plant were put into operation in June and the remaining 25 near the end of October. The operation of the Prospect St. Plant until very near the end of the year was considerably hampered by construction work which was in progress, and was therefore accompanied by unusual expenses at many times. That construction work was not entirely completed until after the close of the year. The new by-product coke ovens at the Langsdale Avenue Plant were at an advanced stage at the time the plant was taken over from The Indianapolis Gas Company, but the plant could not be put into operation at all until February 13th of this year, when a few of the ovens were first charged. At that date the old coal gas retorts were abandoned, and the work of dismantling began, in order to make room in the same buildings for auxiliary equipment for the new coke oven plant. The completion of this last part of the new construction at the Langsdale Avenue Plant was necessarily delayed in order to keep the coal gas retorts in operation until the ovens could be started. The construction work at both plants was very greatly delayed by inability to secure prompt deliveries of material and equipment. However, all of these difficulties are now in the past, and your Company is in possession of two manufacturing plants which, both singly and in combination, probably constitute the finest gas producing equipment in the United States. The by-product coke ovens at the Prospect St. Plant have a producing capacity in excess of 3,500,000 cubic feet of gas per day. Those at the Langsdale Avenue Plant, when the auxiliary equipment shall be completed and the coke ovens can be heated by producer gas instead of by oven gas, will have a producing capacity in excess of 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day. The Water Gas Plant at Prospect Street has a capacity of about 2,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day. That at Langsdale Avenue has a capacity close to 6,000,000 cubic feet per day. As you have been advised heretofore, it is not practicable to manufacture water gas and sell it at the low price established by your Company in this city, but these water gas plants are of very great importance to the City of Indianapolis to provide for emergencies in the operation of the by-product coke ovens, possibly to increase the heat value of the Langsdale oven gas, and to supplement the latter when the peak loads of consumption rise above their capacity and before the average consumption of the city has reached a point where additional coke ovens can be constructed. The provision for heating the Langsdale ovens with producer gas will enable that plant, when operating conditions require, to send all of its oven gas into the city, while the provision for heating the ovens with their own gas will enable your Company to operate them more economically when the demand for gas does not necessitate the operation of the producers. While gas can be produced at your Prospect plant at a lower cost per thousand cubic feet in the holder, that plant has little elasticity except by the manufacture of water gas which is enormously expensive. The new coke ovens at your Langsdale plant provide an element of elasticity of very great advantage both for economical operation and in facility for rendering the city the service which it requires; while the complete water gas plant at Langsdale Avenue affords a still greater element of elasticity for meeting emergencies and for producing an adequate supply of gas when the coke ovens of both plants would otherwise be over-taxed. No other gas company in the United States enjoys the advantages for economy and certain gas production that are furnished by these two plants when operated in combination.

Distribution System.

At the close of the year 1912 your Company had in use 174.96 miles of mains. The system of The Indianapolis Gas Company was appraised as of July 1, 1913 had a total of 376.34 miles. The Indianapolis Gas Company between July 1st and October 1st had laid 6.81 miles of additional mains. The total extensions made by your Company to its own system amounted to 9.56 miles during the year 1913, and its extensions to the system of The Indianapolis Gas Company between October 1st and December 31st amounted to 4.19 miles. Therefore the total distribution system operated by your Company at the close of the year amounted to 571.86 miles.

Immediately after taking charge of the leased property we made several emergency connections between the two systems, whereby gas could be transferred quickly from one to the other. These connections have been very useful and have enabled us to improve the service materially in the eastern and southwestern sections of the city. The engineers of the Company have worked out a comprehensive plan for tying the two systems together, so that they may be made substantially a common system. This work will be carried on as rapidly as possible, and when completed will give the gas consumers of the city the most uniform possible gas pressure. In addition to improving the service, the complete combination of the two systems will result in substantial economies by reducing the very heavy pumping expenses which have heretofore been necessary at the Langsdale Avenue Plant, and by enabling the two manufacturing plants to work in more complete unison for the supply of the city's requirements.

Your Company had in use on December 31, 1912, 10,698 meters. On September 30, 1913, this number had increased to 11,165, and The Indianapolis Gas Company had in use on that 41,541 meters. The total number in use at the end of the year was 52,738.

Lease of the Indianapolis Gas Company.

On September 30, 1913, the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved a contract of lease between your Company and The Indianapolis Gas Company, whereby all of the property and business of the latter passed under the control of your Company for a period of ninety-nine years. Under the terms of the lease your Company pays as rental the interest on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company outstanding at the time of the lease, which amounted to $4,833,000; and any additional bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company which your Company may use for the purpose of extensions and betterments t the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company will likewise be guaranteed as to interest charges by your Company. Your Company also pays an annual rental of $120,000 so long as the price of gas to the general consumers in the city shall be not less than 55 cents per thousand cubic feet. If the price shall be reduced to 50 cents per thousand cubic feet, the rental will be increased to $130,000, and if the price of gas shall be reduced to 45 cents per thousand cubic feet, the annual rental shall be $135,000. In addition to all of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company at the date when the lease became effective, that Company was required by the lease to expend, without increase of bonded indebtedness, a total of $600,000 on the construction of the by-product coke ovens which was then in progress at the Langsdale Avenue Plant.

By this merger your Company has established on a much firmer basis the very low price of gas which it introduced in this city, and makes possible the introduction of very great economies in carrying on the gas business of this community. Your Company has been strengthened in every way, and its finacial position has been rendered much more secure by the removal of conditions which made it impossible to obtain capital outside of the City of Indianapolis. The profits to your Company from this merger cannot begin to be very great until after the middle of the year 1914, because it will be necessary to operate the water gas plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company on a large scale up to about the first of April. However, it was possible to begin certain important economies soon after the merger became effective, and these have already resulted in some net increase in your Company's profits, after payment of all rental charges as well as your own bond interest. The net profits of your Company, after meeting all such fixed charges, amounted to $37,865.96 for the first quarter of combined operation, ending December 31, 1913. These figures compare with net profits of $35,775.22 for the quarter ending September 30, 1913, and with $31,652.78 for the last quarter of the year 1912. The gain in net profits for the first quarter of 1914 will be considerably larger than that for the last quarter of 1913. However, the full advantages of the merger in this direction will not be felt until a reasonable time has elapsed after putting the new and modern manufacturing plant into operation.

PLAINTIFFS' EXHIBIT 94.

Report of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis
Six Months Ending June 30, 1914

To the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company:

The Company presents herewith its report for the first half of the year 1914.

Operation Under Merger.

During the entire period covered by this report, your Company was operating the plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company, which was taken over under lease, October 1, 1914. However, it was necessary to operate the water gas and old coal gas plants for nearly two months of the period, because delays in obtaining delivery of materials held back the completion of the new coke ovens. Since the latter have been in operation they have been giving as good results as were anticipated.

When it is considered that the Company's estimates for 1914 were based on 60 cent gas and average business conditions and that a reduction in income amounting to $52,819.25 was brought about by the reduction in the price of gas, and that the business depression has resulted in a much lower price for coke than the Company has ever been obliged to take in the past, the operation of your Company under the merger appears fully to justify all that was anticipated at the time the estimates were made.

Since the changed conditions, with minor exceptions, could no more have been taken into account than the present European war, it may be claimed for your Company that it has, thus far, fulfilled its promises of a year ago. In addition, it has avoided by means of this merger, the immeasurable disadvantages of a gas and coke war with its competitor after the completion of the new coke ovens. Most of the unfavorable conditions indicated above would have worked much greater disadvantage to the Citizens Gas Company in competition with The Indianapolis Gas Company than they have done to your Company in control of the entire field.

Respectfully submitted,

Citizens Gas Co. of Indianapolis.—Incorporated under Indiana laws, May 23, 1906, and in October, 1907, acquired the distribution system formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Co., a natural gas company which had been placed in liquidation by order of the Courts. The company immediately constructed a water gas plant with a capacity of about 2,000,000 cubic feet of gas daily, which was placed in operation in April, 1909. It also constructed fifty by-product coke ovens, which were first put into commission in November, 1909. It has since constructed fifty additional coke ovens of the same type. On October 1, 1913, the company acquired by 99-year lease the plant and distributing system of the Indianapolis Gas Co., which company had a well equipped water gas plant having a capacity of over 4,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day, and had undertaken the construction of by-product coke ovens for its regular supply of gas. The Citizens Gas Co. completed the ovens and put them into commission about the middle of February, 1914. Under ordinary conditions the entire supply of gas for the city of Indianapolis is derived from the by-product coke-ovens, the water gas plants being operated only in times of emergency, or when there is a sudden increase in the demand for gas. Both the owned and the leased plants are operated regularly, and the entire business is conducted as a unit. The total owned and leased distribution system consists of 587.40 miles, and the company has over 53,000 meters in use. The population served is about 275,000, and this company conducts the entire gas business for the city and suburbs.

Citizens Gas Co. of Indianapolis.—Inc. May 23, 1906, in Ind. and on Oct. 31, 1907, acquired the distributing system and property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Co., a natural gas company which had been placed in liquidation by order of the courts. The Company immediately constructed a water gas plant with a capacity of about 2,000,000 cu. ft. of gas per day, which was placed in operation in April, 1909. It also constructed 50 by-product coke ovens, which were first put into commission in Nov., 1909. It has since constructed 50 additional coke ovens of the same type. On Oct. 1, 1913, the company acquired by 99-year lease the plant and distribution system of the Indianapolis Gas Co., which company had a well-equipped water gas plant having a capacity of over 4,000,000 cu. ft. of gas per day, and had undertaken the construction of by-product coke ovens for its regular supply of gas. The Citizens Gas Co. completed the ovens and put them into commission about the middle of Feb., 1914. Under ordinary conditions the entire supply of gas for the city of Indianapolis is derived from the by-product coke ovens, the water gas plants being operated only in times of emergency, or when there is a sudden increase in the demand for gas. Both the owned and the leased plants are operated regularly, and the entire business is conducted as a unit. The population served is about 335,000, and this company conducts the entire gas business for the city and suburbs. No. of customers, 66,000.

By the terms of the merger the Citizens Gas Co. leases the property of The Indianapolis Gas Co. for a period of 99 years and pays the interest on $4,833,000 Consolidated Mortgage bonds, and will pay the interest on such additional bonds as may be issued from time to time for extensions to the leased property. The lessee also pays a rental equivalent to 6% per annum on the $2,000,000 of capital stock of The Indianapolis Gas Co. If the price of gas is reduced to 50 cents per thousand cu. ft. this rental is increased to 6½%, and if the price is reduced to 45 cts. per thousand cu. ft. the rental will be increased to 6¾% per annum, beyond which rate there will be no increase.

PLAINTIFFS' EXHIBIT 98-A.

Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis

History: Incorporated under Indiana laws, May 23, 1906, and in October, 1907, acquired the distributing system and property formerly owned by the Consumers' Gas Trust Co. Company owns a water gas plant with a capacity of 2,000,000 cubic feet per day, serving a population of about 335,000. Franchises of company extend until 1930. Owns the entire capital stock of the Milburn By-Products Coal Co. Gas sales: 1918, 2,513,774,000 cu. ft.; 1919, 2,698,589,000 cu. ft.; 1920, 3,051,634,000 cu. ft ; 1921, 2,792,228,000 cu. ft.; 1922, 2,632,060,000 cu. ft.

Lease of Indianapolis Gas Co.: On October 1, 1913, the company leased for 99 years the property and business of the Indianapolis Gas Co., and is now in control of the entire gas business of the City of Indianapolis and the environs, having a population in excess of 250,000. The Indianapolis Gas Co. had at the date of lease a complete water gas plant, having a capacity of 6,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day. It had been operating coal gas retorts from which it supplied about one-third of its total output of gas, but had begun the construction of a by-product coke oven plant with a capacity of about 5,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day. Under the terms of the lease, the lessor was required to complete the construction of these ovens, and they were put into commission in February, 1914. At the date of the lease the Indianapolis Gas Co. had 383.15 miles of mains in its distributing system, which were increased to 387.34 miles by the end of the year. The combined manufacturing capacity of the plant now controlled by the Citizens Gas Co. is therefore 8,500,000 cubic feet of coke oven gas and 8,000,000 cubic feet of water gas. It is the purpose of the company to furnish only coke oven gas except in emergencies or for the purpose of making up deficiencies in its supply. The combined system of mains at the close of 1922 comprised 650 miles. The company had at that date 67,561 meters in use.

By the terms of the lease, the Citizens' Gas Co. leases the property of the Indianapolis Gas Co. for a period of 99 years and pays the interest on $4,833,000 Consolidated

Mortgage bonds, and will pay the interest on such additional bonds as may be issued from time to time for extensions to the leased property. The lessee also pays a rental equivalent to 6% per annum on the $2,000,000 of capital stock of the Indianapolis Gas Co. If the price of gas is reduced to 50 cents per thousand cubic feet this rental is increased to 6½%, and if the price of gas is reduced to 45 cents per thousand cubic feet, the rental will be increased to 6¾% per annum, beyond which rate there will be no increase.

History: Incorporated under Indiana laws, May 23, 1906, and in Oct., 1907, acquired the distributing system and property formerly owned by the Consumers' Gas & Trust Co. In 1905, company entered into a contract with the City of Indianapolis which provided that at the expiration of 25 years the city may assume possession of the company and its properties by payment of the face value of the common stock plus interest not to exceed 10% per annum. This contract was part of franchise granted to the company in that year. In 1921 company surrendered its franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit from the Public Service Commission of Indiana. Owns entire capital stock of the Milburn By-Products Coal Co.

Lease of Indianapolis Gas Co.: On October 1, 1913, the company leased for 99 years the property and business of the Indianapolis Gas Co. By the terms of the lease the Citizens Gas Co. pays (a) the interest on the consolidated mortgage bonds outstanding, and will pay the interest on such additional bonds as may be issued for future extensions to the leased property; (b) a rental equivalent to 6% on outstanding capital stock of the Indianapolis Gas Co. (with a possible increase of $15,000 if the price of gas to the consumer does not exceed 45 cents per M cu. ft.); (c) $300 annually for organization expense; and (d) such amounts equal to the taxes levied against the property including Federal income tax.

Company controls the entire gas business of the City of Indianapolis and the environs having a population in excess of 425,000. Number of employees, Dec. 31, 1934, 718.

Properties: As of Jan. 1, 1935, the owned property of Citizens Gas Co. consisted of a coke oven plant, known as Prospect Street Station, comprising three batteries of forty 14-ton Wilputte ovens with a total daily capacity of 11,000,000 cu. ft. and two 8′ 6″ water gas sets having a total daily capacity of 1,800,000 cu. ft. and 9,000,000 cu. ft. of holder capacity. The distribution system consisted of approximately 336 miles of cast iron and steel mains. The leased property, owned by Indianapolis Gas Co., consisted of a coke oven plant of one battery of forty-one 15-ton Semet-Solvay coke ovens with a daily capacity of 3,500,000 cu. ft., also two 11′ 0″ and two 7′ 6″ water gas sets, with a total daily capacity of 6,000,000 cu. ft. and holder capacity of 3,000,000 cu. ft. The distribution system consisted of approximately 531 miles of cast iron and steel mains. It is the purpose of the company to furnish only coke oven gas except in emergencies or for the purpose of making up deficiencies in its supply. The combined system of mains at the close of 1934 comprised 867 (1933, 865) miles. On Dec. 31, 1934, company had 75,259 meters in use (1933, 73,370).

City's Demand for Possession Under 1905 Franchise: The basis of the move to bring this company under municipal ownership is the 1905 contract (see above) entered into between the company and the City of Indianapolis. In Mar., 1929, a formal demand was made by the city to the trustees and directors of the company for the transfer of the title and assets. Company's directors in Apr., 1929, acknowledged the city's right to take over the properties after the preferred and common stocks had been redeemed. In June, 1929, common stock certificate holders of the company filed suits alleging that public charitable trust in favor of inhabitants of the city and gas consumers was broken when city franchise was surrendered in 1921. On Feb. 26, 1930, Federal Judge Baltzell of the U. S. District Court at Indianapolis upheld the validity of the 1905 contract which permits the city to take possession of the property before Aug. 30, 1930, and administer it for the benefit of the citizens, ruling that city had not given up any of its rights through surrender of the company's franchise. In final decision on May 29, 1930, Federal Judge Baltzell dismissed stockholders suit. No action in regard to the transfer of title of the properties was taken, however, as the litigation was carried to the U. S. Circuit of Appeals. The latter court in Jan., 1931, affirmed the decision entered May 29, 1930, by the lower court. Both the district and the circuit courts held that holders of beneficial certificates of common stock would receive everything for which they had contracted in subscribing for the stock whenever they should be repaid the face value of their shares together with 10% annual cumulative dividend. On May 18, 1931, the U. S. Supreme Court at Washington stated that it would not review the right of the city to take over the company as no Federal question was involved. Under a bill signed early in 1933 by Governor P. V. McNutt, the city was empowered to issue 50-year 6% bonds, to provide the purchase price for the company's properties. In Dec., 1933, the City of Indianapolis applied to the Public Works Administration for a $10,000,000 loan to acquire company's properties, but in Jan., 1934, it was explained that the PWA could make loans only for projects having a primary object of creating jobs.

City Sells Bonds to Acquire Properties: Under a resolution adopted May 7, 1935, by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, the city authorized the issuance of $8,000,000 of gas plant revenue bonds for the purpose of obtaining funds to exercise its franchise rights to acquire the properties and business of Citizens Gas Co. of Indianapolis and for improvements and extensions to such properties.

The Indianapolis City Utilities District (see below) on May 29, 1935, sold to Otis & Co., Cleveland and Halsey, Stuart & Co., Inc., New York, the issue of $8,000,000 gas plant revenue bonds, on a bid of 96.0625 for 4½s. Proceeds of the bond sale were to be used to acquire the Citizens Gas properties and for extensions and improvements thereof. The obligations that will be retired from the proceeds of this bond issue, in order to acquire company's properties, include company's $2,000,000 in $25 par common stock with accrued dividends of $500,000; $1,000,000 $100 par preferred plus dividends of $12,500 and a premium of $50,000 together with $2,800,000 in bonds. Upon retirement of these securities company's property will pass to the city, as provided by charter. Proceeds of the sale not used for retirement of company obligations will be used for working capital to make all necessary adjustment for supplying mixed gas to local consumers.

As of July 1, 1935, acquisition of company's properties had not been consummated.

Note: The entire outstanding common stock was called for redemption July 1, 1935 at $31.25 per share, plus dividends at the rate of 10% up to July 1, 1935 at the company's office. Such retirement is to be made through funds provided by the City of Indianapolis, as a step in the taking over of the company's property pursuant to the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation (see details above). As of July 23, 1935, over 75% of common stock was retired.

Liquidating Dividend Rescinded: Action of directors with reference to payment of a liquidating dividend of $5.00 per share on May 15, 1929 and the payment of a cash dividend of 1¼% on said stock on the same day, was rescinded, inasmuch as several stockholders brought suit in the United States District Court at Indianapolis, enjoining the directors from making the partial payment ordered to be made May 15. Trial was held in the United States District Court

May 5, 1930. Decision rendered May 29, 1930 upheld previous ruling that Citizens of Indianapolis are the real owners and beneficiaries of this company. Unless further litigation is brought forth it will fall the duty of the Gas Co. trustees and directors to carry out the refunding of common stock certificates by part payment.

Dear Sirs:

Would you kindly inform me as to whether the Cities Utilities District of Indianapolis, which has acquired the assets of the Citizens Gas Company, has legally assumed the lease of the Indianapolis Gas Company? I am requesting this information of you inasmuch as I believe that you would have official notice as the trustee for the Indianapolis Gas First Mortgage 5's of 1952.

Kindly direct your reply to the attention of the undersigned.

Gentlemen:

Your letter of July 17th addressed to The Chase National Bank has been referred to us. We have delayed our reply in the expectation that we could give you a more definite answer to your question that we are at present able to do.

The City of Indianapolis through its Utilities District is arranging to take over the operation of the gas properties in Indianapolis through the exercise of its established right to acquire the property of the Citizens Gas Company who hold a ninety-nine year lease for our plant and system. Inasmuch as the Utilities District has provided several million dollars for the purpose of perfecting its title to the property of the Citizens Gas Company and the greater portion of the common stock of the Citizens Gas Company has been acquired through this fund, we presume that the City has an equitable though not a legal title to the property at the present time. Until the City has a legal title it could not legally assume the lease, but we are advised that this should follow as a matter of course when the other property is transferred.

Yours very truly,
The Indianapolis Gas Company

Gentlemen:

We are in hopes that your bank as Trustee of the Indianapolis Gas Company 5s of 1952 will be above to furnish us with an accurate statement of the present status of the Indianapolis Gas Company bonds, since the properties of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis were acquired by the City of Indianapolis. Will the servicing of these bonds constitute an operating charge against the gas properties prior in lien to the Indianapolis Gas bonds recently sold to the public? Has the City of Indianapolis considered the formal assumption of these bonds, in which case I presume they will acquire the tax-free status of municipal bonds? From what source will the Indianapolis Gas Company bonds be paid at maturity? What is the status of the 99-Year lease from the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis?

Any information you can give us on this matter will be greatly appreciated as the services do not seem to contain very accurate information on the subject.

In re: The Indianapolis Gas Company Deed of Trust Dated October 1, 1902

Gentlemen:

Pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of The Indianapolis Gas Company, the following facts relative to the property and business of the Company are sent to you as Trustee of our First Mortgage 5% Bonds.

Assuming to act under legislative authority and pursuant to provisions of the city franchise and articles of incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, the City of Indianapolis has taken over the property of that Company, and is now operating the same by its Board of Directors for Utilities, and is assuming to enter upon the discharge of the obligations of the Citizens Gas Company to its bondholders and stockholders. The City of Indianapolis, however, has refused to accept an assignment of the ninety-nine year lease, executed on September 30, 1913, by this Company to the Citizens Gas Company, by which all the property of this Company was leased to the Citizens Gas Company.

Under the circumstances, this Company though action of its Board of Directors, entered into a stipulation with the said City of Indianapolis, by which it was provided that the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, will continue the operation of the property of this Company for a period of six months pending negotiations, and that they will pay an amount for rental for said period equal to the amount of rental payable according to the terms of the lease. Preliminary meetings between representatives of this Company and representatives of the City have resulted in nothing definite.

Our Board of Directors is attempting to safeguard the legal position of both the bondholders and stockholders of the Company and have retained Hon. Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, Ohio, as additional counsel. The Indianapolis Gas Company will be pleased to receive any suggestions you desire to make in the premises.

Very truly yours,
The Indianapolis Gas Company

Re: Indianapolis Gas Company Mortgage
Dated October 1, 1902

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, as Trustee under The Indianapolis Gas Company
Mortgage dated October 1, 1902
11 Broad Street
New York, New York

Dear Sirs:

The undersigned are the owners and holders of $265,000 principal amount of Indianapolis Gas Company First and Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds due October 1, 1952 and outstanding under the above described Mortgage.

It is our understanding that a default in the payment of interest on the above described bonds is threatened by the reason of a refusal of the City of Indianapolis through the medium of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis to recognize the validity of the lease made by the Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 30, 1913, which provided for a lease of all of the property of Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, in consideration, among other things, of the covenant of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis to pay to the Trustee under the above described Mortgage the interest on all of the above described bonds outstanding thereunder and to refund said bonds at maturity or provide for their extension.

In view of this threatened default, we hereby request you, as Trustee under the said Mortgage, to request the opinion of the firm of Messrs. Baker, Hostetler, Sidlo & Patterson in Cleveland, Ohio, on the following points:

1. Whether the lease above referred to belongs in law and equity to the body of the trust created by the above described Mortgage and forms part of the security for the above described bonds.

2. Whether you, as Trustee, upon our request, have the right under the said Mortgage, prior to a default in payment of interest on said bonds, to proceed, as plaintiff in a civil suit, either in law or equity, against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indianapolis Gas Company, the City of Indianapolis, the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, and any other appropriate parties to such a suit, seeking an adjudication of the validity of the said lease and the establishment of the same as a part of the body of the trust created by said Mortgage for the security and protection of said bonds.

3. Whether the reasonable compensation and expense of your counsel and attorneys in any such suit 1255 would be a proper and legal charge against the body of the trust created by said Mortgage.

4. Whether such a suit could be maintained in the United States District Court for the District of Indiana.

We further request you, if the opinion of Messrs. Baker, Hostetler, Sidlo & Patterson to all the questions listed above is in the affirmative, to institute a suit of the kind above referred to in the United States District Court for the District of Indiana through Messrs. Baker, Hostetler, Sidlo & Patterson, and such other local attorneys in Indianapolis as may be mutually satisfactory to you and said firm, and upon such other conditions as you may reasonably deem desirable, and to take such other appropriate legal or equitable remedies as you being advised by said firm shall determine to be most effectual to protect and enforce your rights and those of the holders of said bonds.

Stipulation of Facts in the Todd Case.

This stipulation is copied on pages 186-248, inclusive, of the Record in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 for Identification, which original exhibit is included in this transcript by order of the Court.

PLAINTIFFS' EXHIBIT 139.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

For the Southern District of Indiana

Indianapolis Division.

Newton Todd, Plaintiff,
vs.
Citizens Gas Company, et al.,
Defendants.

In Equity
No. 1191.

STIPULATION OF FACTS.

The parties hereto agree that for the purpose of the trial and final hearing of this case, the following facts, in addition to those admitted in the answers, are true. All parties reserve the right to object to the introduction of any part of this stipulation on any ground other than that the facts therein contained have not been established by the best evidence.

(2) (d). Plaintiff, Newton Todd, brought and has maintained this suit on behalf of himself and other holders of certificates issued by said Board of Trustees who may wish to join in this suit and contribute to the expense thereof, and plaintiff, Newton Todd, in this suit, is asserting what he claims are corporate rights and immunities of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. At the time of the commencement of this action and now, there were and are approximately 1400 persons who were the owners and holders of such Certificates issued by said Board of Trustees, and in whose name stock certificates were issued by Citizens Gas Company as aforesaid. Plaintiff, Newton Todd, asserts in this suit that rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to Citizens Gas Company and to him and other holders of certificates issued by said Board of Trustees, are being violated by acts of the defendants, under color of certain statutes of the State of Indiana, and seek to enjoin such acts and asks for a decree quieting title of the Citizens Gas Company to certain real and personal property situated within the Southern District of Indiana. The claims of the plaintiff, Newton Todd, with respect to the violation of his constitutional rights and those of other holders of Certificates issued by said Board of Trustees and of the Citizens Gas Company are denied by the defendants.

4. Defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, during its corporate existence, has acquired title to and is now the owner of certain real estate, together with the buildings, fixtures, machinery and equipment used and useful for the manufacture, storage and distribution of artificial gas and the by-products thereof, together with pipe lines, mains and other equipment necessary for distributing artificial gas in the City of Indianapolis, and also a manufacturing plant and ovens for the production, manufacture and sale of commercial coke. Said real estate is situated in the City of Indianapolis, Marion County, State of Indiana, and within the jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division, and said property, so situated, is correctly described in Paragraph IV of the Bill of Complaint.

Defendant Company owns all of the capital stock of Milburn By-Products Coal Company, a corporation, which has acquired title to and now owns certain leasehold rights in coal lands located in the Counties of Raleigh and Fayette, in the State of West Virginia, used and useful for the purpose of mining and producing therefrom coal for use in the operation of the business of defendant Company which leaseholds are those referred to in Paragraph VI of the bill of complaint. Defendant Company also is the owner of a certain leasehold estate in and to the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, as created by a certain contract of lease for ninety-nine years dated September 30, 1913, and recorded in Miscellaneous Record 78, pages 257-278, inclusive, of the records in the Recorder's office of Marion County, State of Indiana.

Said Indianapolis Gas Company was organized as an Indiana corporation for the purpose of furnishing artificial gas in the City of Indianapolis on the 10th day of January, 1881, and continued actively in business, until the execution of the lease aforesaid, under a franchise granted to its predecessor in title by ordinance of the City of Indianapolis on the 3rd day of April, 1876. On the 7th day of October, 1913, said Indianapolis Gas Company surrendered said Franchise in accordance with the provisions of the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act described in Stipulation 10 hereof, and in lieu thereof accepted an Indeterminate Permit. Said Indianapolis Gas Company now owns, subject to said lease, the legal title in 518.10 miles of gas mains and pipes in the central portion of the city, and said Citizens Gas Company now owns 328.85 miles of gas mains and pipes within such city.

5. This suit is not a collusive one to confer jurisdiction on a court of the United States of a suit of which it would otherwise not have cognizance.

6. On the 25th day of August, 1905, the Common Council of the City of Indianapolis passed an ordinance ratifying, confirming and approving a certain Franchise Contract executed on the 25th day of August, 1905 by and between the Board of Public Works of said City, and Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker and Lorenz Schmidt, contracting for themselves and their associates and assigns, which said ordinance was approved by the Mayor of said City and became effective on the 30th day of August, 1905. Said Franchise Contract and Ordinance ratifying the same are correctly set out in Paragraph VI of the Bill of Complaint.

8. On the 24th day of May, 1906, the said Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker, and Lorenz Schmidt, who were the parties named in the Franchise set out in Stipulation 6 hereof, assigned and transferred to the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, all of their rights in the aforesaid Franchise Contract, which assignment was accepted by the defendant company, and said defendant company continuously thereafter operated under said Franchise until it surrendered the same as hereinafter stated, and said defendant has had no other franchise granted by the City of Indianapolis.

* * * * * *

Said company is to be formed on the plans set forth in said franchise for the protection of the public interests, with authority to pay its stockholders dividends of 10% per annum payable semi-annually.

(9. (a)) Said company is to accept and operate under said franchise, and may acquire, through the city or by purchase, the pipe lines and other property lately operated by the Consumers Gas Trust Company in said City.

(d) Some subscriptions were also received in consideration of making extensions of the gas mains to reach the property of certain subscribers, which subscriptions were accepted on condition that enough subscriptions be obtained to warrant the proposed extensions. Such subscriptions were taken on a form which is as follows:

"Subscription to Stock of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. Temporary Office 1201 Law Building. New Phone 361.

I hereby subscribe for and agree to take ..... shares (par value $25.00 each) of the capital stock of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and to pay for the same at the rate of $25.00 per share to the Union Trust Company of Indianapolis, Trustee for said Citizens Gas Company as follows: 10 per cent on demand, and 20 per cent on the 10th day of each month thereafter (except that the last payment shall be 30 per cent) until the full amount of said subscription shall have been paid.

All money paid on this subscription shall be held by the Union Trust Company, Trustee, until the first installment of 10 per cent shall have been paid on not less than $500,000 of subscriptions; but if for any reason such installment shall not be paid by October 31, 1906, then the full amount of money paid on this subscription shall be returned to subscriber by said Union Trust Company Trustee.

"I hereby agree that the stock above subscribed shall be issued to a board of five trustees, named in the articles of incorporation of said company, in perpetual and irrevocable trust, in the manner and according to the terms and conditions of the articles of incorporation under which said company is formed; and that when the indebtedness of said company is fully paid, and the subscribers shall have received an amount equal to the amount by them subscribed and paid, with dividends equal to 10% per annum, then the trustees and directors shall execute proper instruments transferring all the property of said company of every kind and description, to the city of Indianapolis: and that thereupon all my interest in said company and all its property shall thereby be cancelled, released and extinguished."

"A Bill for an Act relating to corporations organized before May 1, 1913, for the purpose of furnishing gas for fuel or illuminating purposes or electric lights or water, or light, heat and power to any town or city or the citizens or inhabitants thereof, and the articles of incorporation of which provide for the transfer of the property of such corporations to such town or city, legalizing certain provisions in the articles of incorporation thereof and authorizing the conveyance of the property of such corporations to such towns or cities and authorizing such towns or cities to accept such conveyance, repealing all laws in conflict therewith and declaring an emergency."

Said bill prepared by the legal department and special counsel of the City of Indianapolis employed for the purpose of bringing about a transfer of the plant and property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, to the City of Indianapolis; said bill was introduced in the House of Representatives of the General Assembly by members residing in the City of Indianapolis and elected from Marion County and was passed in the exact form prepared and submitted by said counsel for the defendant City without change or amendment of any kind or character. Said bill contained an emergency clause providing for its taking effect immediately upon its passage, was approved on the 11th day of March, 1929, and, so far as it was valid, became a law on said day.

14. On the 20th day of March, 1929, the defendant City of Indianapolis, acting only by and through its Board of Public Works, but without any action thereon by its Common Council and without an election thereon by the qualified voters of said City, passed a resolution asserting a right to acquire the plant and property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. Said resolution is correctly set out in Paragraph XIV of the Bill of Complaint. Defendant City of Indianapolis served said resolution upon the defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its directors and trustees, on said 20th day of March, 1929. Defendant City of Indianapolis through its agents and employees, on said 20th day of March, 1929, served a copy of said resolution upon the defendants Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its officers, the members of its Board of Directors and the members of its Board of Trustees.

19. After the passage of the ordinance of August 30, 1905 and the incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company on May 23, 1906, the City of Indianapolis took no affirmative steps in its own behalf in connection with the taking over of the property of the Citizens Gas Company until the 20th day of March, 1929. Defendant City of Indianapolis has not proceeded under the terms of said Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act in making its aforesaid demand, and the Public Service Commission of Indiana has neither ordered nor approved the acquisition by defendant City of said plant and property nor determined the value of said plant and property nor fixed the terms and conditions of said acquisition.

20. At no time has the question of the acquisition of the plant and property of defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, by defendant City been submitted to the qualified voters of said City at a special or general election.

pany, including plaintiff; said resolutions Nos. 1 and 2 have been published in the newspapers of Indianapolis and elsewhere and said directors have publicly expressed their intention of acceding to the demands of the defendant City and of conveying the plant and property of the defendant company to the City in accordance with the notice, resolution and demand set out in Stipulation 14 hereof. The directors and trustees of the Citizens Gas Company intend to and will carry out their expressed intention and will convey said plant and property of the defendant company pursuant to said demand by the defendant City unless enjoined and restrained from such action.

* * * * * *

By agreeing to the statements contained in the above stipulations, the parties hereto are not agreeing as to any legal rights resulting therefrom, and in particular are not agreeing as to the rights flowing to plaintiff and other holders from the issuance of the certificates in the forms set forth in Stipulations 2(b) and 2(c) hereof, nor as to the relation to the Citizens Gas Company of plaintiff and others to whom such certificates were issued; but said legal rights and relation are to be determined by the facts set forth in these stipulations and the facts proved at the trial and the law applicable thereto. Any party to this cause shall have the right at the final hearing to introduce any additional or further evidence in this cause, providing that the same is not in contradiction of any of the facts herein stated.

APPELLEES' BRIEF.

The ninety-eight pages of mingled argument and discursive statement following the title "Nature of the Action" in appellant's brief invite and justify the following re-statement of the Nature of the Action.

This is a suit whereby appellant suing as an inhabitant and taxpayer of the City of Indianapolis on behalf of himself and other inhabitants and taxpayers of the city asks that it be decreed that a public charitable trust exists in the property of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis; alleges that a conspiracy was formed in 1913 to destroy the public charitable trust existing in the property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and alleges as the overt acts in this conspiracy the enactment of the Shively-Spencer Act creating the Public Service Commission of Indiana, the approval by that Commission of a lease of property of the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company, the payment of millions of dollars under such lease, the surrender by the Citizens Gas Company of its franchise and its acceptance of an indeterminate permit, its obtaining various orders from the Public Service Commission of Indiana, and its obtaining a decree from the United States District Court at Indianapolis enjoining the enforcement of confiscatory rates. The relief sought is not only a declaration that a public charitable trust exists in the property of the Citizens Gac Company, but an adjudication that the Shively-Spencer Act is void and that every order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana affecting in any manner the Citizens Gas Company is void; that the lease between the Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company is void notwithstanding its approval by the Public Service Commission; that the Indianapolis Gas Company be declared insolvent and the Citizens Gas Company be declared insolvent or in imminent danger of insolvency and a receiver appointed for such companies; that the several millions of dollars paid by Citizens Gas Company under such lease be repaid to it; that the assets of the Citizens Gas Company be administered by such receiver; that the public charitable trust on behalf of the inhabitants and taxpayers of said city of Indianapolis be preserved and enforced; that the directors and trustees of the utility district of Indianapolis be enjoined from acting as such; and that the Mayor, the defendants, city officials, Gas Company officers and others be enjoined from conspiring to "defeat said public charitable trust."

Propositions, Points, And Authorities By Which Appellant's Alleged Errors Are Met Or Obviated And The Judgment Sustained.

A and B.

No Reversible Error Can Be Predicated on the Ruling of the Lower Court in Striking Out From the Complaint Averments With Respect to an Alleged Conspiracy for The Enactment of the Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act for the Reason That Such Averments Are Irrelevant Beyond Possibility of Amendment Because There Is Not In Law Any Such Thing as a Conspiracy to Bring About the Enactment of a Valid Statute.

• • • • • •

The Demurrer of Appellees Citizens Gas Company et al. to Appellant's Complaint Was Correctly Sustained by the Lower Court for the Reason That the Complaint Is Insufficient for Want of Facts in That Appellant as an Individual Member of the Public or as a Taxpayer Has No Right as Such to Maintain an Action to Enforce a Public Charitable Trust and No Right to Injunctive Relief Is Shown, No Right to a Receivership, and No Clouds Upon the Title of the Public Charitable Trust Appear.

• • • • • •

This Suit Is of Such Nature That It Cannot Be Maintained by an Individual Member of the Public.

3. Appellant sues only as an "inhabitant and taxpayer" of appellee City of Indianapolis, and on behalf of himself and of other inhabitants and taxpayers of the city, but neither he nor any other inhabitant has any separate or divisible interest in the public charitable trust that is the subject matter of this suit; he is not seeking to assert rights that public officers have refused to assert; and he has no right to maintain this suit.

State ex rel. v. Holt, 163 Ind. 198, 200.

6. A public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company was created by its organization under conditions that when the subscribers to its stock have been repaid par plus interest, its property should be conveyed to the city. That the trust is a charitable one appears from the fact that the public will receive the property of the Gas Company without having to purchase it. That the trust is a public one is manifested from the fact that the beneficiaries, i. e., the inhabitants of the City of Indianapolis, are an indefinite and unascertained class.

Todd v. Citizens Gas Co.,

Cotter v. Same,

42 Fed. (2nd) 85, (C. C. A. 7).

7. A suit to enforce a public charitable trust can not be maintained by an individual member of the public such as appellant. The exclusive right to maintain such a suit is in the appropriate law officer of the public. The reasons are clear: not only has an individual no definite or separable interest in the trust, but for an individual either as sole plaintiff or in the guise of a class suit, to assume the duty of litigating on behalf of the public would infallibly subject the trust to embarrassment, confusion, loss and damage.

Wemme v. Noyes, 294 Pac. 602 (Oregon).

• • • • • •

15. The lease between said companies is alleged to be invalid. But it was approved by the Public Service Commission of Indiana, under express authorization of Section 95 of the Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act. After this very lease had been so approved, an action was brought by a taxpayer to vacate the order of approval; judgment was entered against such plaintiff; and an appeal therefrom was dismissed: Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282. This approval of this lease cannot now be collaterally attacked.

Public Service Commission v. Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37.

• • • • • •

18. A lessee of property of which it has held possession and from which it has taken the income as such lessee for seventeen years cannot, nor can anybody claiming through or under such lessee, attack the validity of the lease under which it took and has continued to hold the same, without surrendering such possession, and without accounting for nor offering to account for and restore the income so received. Even if appellant had the right to maintain an action to set aside the lease of the Indianapolis Gas Company's property (which is denied) because of fraud, and even if facts alleging actionable fraud were alleged (and they are not), the action must fail for want of an offer to surrender the leased premises and to restore the consideration received thereunder.

Ashmead v. Hurt, 125 Ind. 566, 568;

Callahan v. Dunker, 51 Ind. App. 436, 445;

Deford v. Urbain, 48 Ind. 219, 221;

Anchor Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 61 Ind. App. 35, 41;

Westhafer v. Patterson, 120 Ind. 459, 462;

South Bend, etc., Gas Co. v. Jensen, 182 Ind. 557, 560.

19. The lapse of seventeen years without action by the inhabitants and taxpayers of Indianapolis to challenge the validity of the lease is such laches as to preclude the granting of the relief here prayed.

Sinclair v. Guzenhouser, 179 Ind. 78, 131;

Ryason v. Dunten, 164 Ind. 85, 94-97;

Turpie v. Lowe, 158 Ind. 314, 320, 322.

No Clouds Upon Title of Property in the Public Charitable Trust Are Shown.

20. The facts alleged as basis for the appointment of a receiver for the property of appellee Citizens Gas Company are also alleged to be clouds upon the title of the property subject to the public charitable trust existing in that property. For the same reason they are not and cannot be clouds upon title. It is additionally alleged that the surrender of its franchise by the Citizens Gas Company is a cloud upon title of such trust. But this contention is forever quieted by the final judgments in the cases of Todd and Cotter, et al. v. Citizens Gas Company, City of Indianapolis, et al., hereinbefore referred to, which have finally established the existence and validity of the public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company notwithstanding the surrender of its franchise.

Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., Cotter v. Stone, 46 Fed (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7; Cert. den. 283 U. S. 852).

• • • • • •

22. Appellant also asserts that the Federal Court proceedings were void as to the public charitable trust because the trust was not represented. But the Citizens Gas Company was the Trustee of the public charitable trust. Its presence in that litigation and its action therein was not in derogation of the trust, but on behalf of the trust. Beneficiaries of an express trust are in court whenever the trustee is in court.

Hord, Trustee, v. Bradbury, 156 Ind. 30, 33.

The Demurrer of Appellees Indianapolis Gas Company, Ferdinand Winter, and Trust Company of America, Was Correctly Sustained to Appellant's Complaint for the Reason That the Complaint Is Insufficient for Want of Facts in That Appellant as an Inhabitant or Taxpayer Is Not a Real Party in Interest, No Right to Injunctive Relief Is Shown, and No Right to a Receiver Appears.

E.

The Demurrer of Appellees John W. McCardle et al. as the Public Service Commission of Indiana Was Correctly Sustained to Appellant's Complaint for the Reason That the Complaint Was Insufficient for Want of Facts in That Their Official Acts Were Performed in Good Faith Within the Scope of Valid Statutes and Cannot Here Be Collaterally Attacked.

Appellant's Motion to Vacate the Rulings to Strike Out Parts of the Complaint, etc., Presents No Reversible Error Because Error Has Been Assigned Directly Upon the Rulings Themselves; and the Basis Asserted for the Motion, viz., the Pendency of Demurrers, Is Contradicted by the Record.

* * * * * *

ARGUMENT.

Appellant, suing as an inhabitant and taxpayer of the City of Indianapolis, on behalf of himself and other inhabitants and taxpayers of the City, seek a decree declaring that a public charitable trust exists . he property of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, notwithstanding the final adjudication to that effect in Todd and Cotter cases against the City and the Gas Company (46 Fed. 2nd, 855; 283 U. S. 852); that the Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act creating the Public Service Commission of Indiana is void, notwithstanding the repeated recognition this Court has given to the validity of that statute; that the lease between the Citizens Gas Company and the Indianapolis Gas Company is void, notwithstanding its approval both by the Commission and in litigation (Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282); that all the moneys paid by the Citizens Gas Company under such lease should be repaid to it, irrespective of the benefits the Citizens Gas Company obtained by such payments; that because of such payments the Citizens Gas Company is insolvent or in imminent danger of insolvency and a receiver should be appointed for it and its assets administered by such receiver "that said public charitable trust in behalf of the inhabitants and taxpayers of said city of Indianapolis may be preserved and enforced," notwithstanding the fact that no public officer has been requested to bring such a suit.

* * * * * *

This Suit Is of Such Nature That It Can Not Be Maintained by Appellant as an Individual Member of the Public.

The conspicuous feature of this litigation is that appellant as plaintiff, an individual inhabitant and taxpayer, has constituted himself the sole vindicator of the rights of the public in a public charitable trust to the exclusion of the public officials charged with such duty.

The facts pleaded in the complaint show that a public charitable trust exists in the property of appellee Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. Suffice it to say that a public charitable trust was thus created by the organization of the Citizens Gas Company with provisions in its articles of association that all rights of that company and of the subscribers to its capital stock should terminate when the latter had been repaid par plus specified interest and that thereupon the property should be conveyed to the city. The trust res is the plant and property of the Citizens Gas Company. The settlors of the trust were the subscribers to its capital stock, as well as the individuals who obtained and assigned a franchise to the Company. Their charitable purpose is manifest from the express limitation of all participation by certificate holders in profits and assets to such repayment of par plus interest, with the result that the public will receive the plant and property without the necessity of purchasing the same. The indefinite and unascertained class of beneficiaries—typical feature of a public charitable trust—consists of the inhabitants of Indianapolis.

This is not a case where moneys paid by appellant for taxes have been or are about to be expended in a matter considered by him to be illegal. He asserts that he is one of the class "who furnished the funds with which to repay the persons who supplied the money used in the construction and acquisition of the trust property". (Appellant's Brief, pp. 257, 259.) But the complaint refutes this assertion. Appellant is not shown to be a consumer of gas. The pleaded franchise contract shows conclusively that the subscribers to the capital stock of the Gas Company (often referred to as certificate holders because the stock was assigned to trustees who issued trustee's certificates to the subscribers) are to be repaid the par value of their stock plus stipulated interest out of earnings, and if not out of earnings, then out of the proceeds of a mortgage to be placed upon the property. No taxes are to be used for the acquisition of such property by the public. Indeed, as the Circuit Court of Appeals stated, 46 Fed. (2nd) 855, 866, the franchise

"could not be regarded as a purchase in 1905 or a contract for a purchase. It was an agreement by which the city obtained an interest in the plant subject to the charge in favor of the certificate holders. No funds of the city were paid or contracted to be paid for the plant."

It follows that the cases relied upon by appellant, which pertain to proceedings by taxpayers to enjoin the expenditure of taxes about to be illegally expended, or to recover taxes illegally diverted, are not in point. Nor can it be any proper ground of apprehension by appellant that moneys to be raised by taxation may be expended for debts of the Citizens Gas Company. No such intent is alleged. None is apparent. The right of the City of Indianapolis to accept public trusts (Clause 6, paragraph 53 of Section 10284, Burns' 1926) is not limited to unencumbered property. That a city takes property subject to debts does not make those debts the city's debts.

Fox v. City of Bicknell, 193 Ind. 537.

The unescapable truth is that appellant solely as an individual member of the public arrogates to himself the right by litigation to control the management of such trust to the exclusion of the officials of the public. But the rule is thoroughly settled that an individual member of the public has no right as such to maintain an action to enforce or protect a public charitable trust.

* * * * * *

We submit that the Attorney General of Indiana and/or the Prosecuting Attorney for the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit at all times had and have the exclusive right as against individual inhabitants such as appellant, to bring suit to enforce and protect the public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis; from which it follows that appellant had no standing in court to maintain this action and his complaint is insufficient for want of facts.

Even if appellant as a private citizen, taxpayer, or inhabitant, having no separate or divisible interest in the subject matter of the public charitable trust, nevertheless could maintain an action to enforce it without respect to the rights or duties of the public officers, yet his complaint is in no respect sufficient to state a cause of action.

1. But the complaint does not allege that plaintiff is a stockholder or a creditor of either the lessor Indianapolis Gas Company or the lessee Citizens Gas Company, or that either company owes a debt to anybody not amply secured, or owes any debt at all to the City of Indianapolis, of which city he is an inhabitant and taxpayer; there is no averment as to the value at this time of the property leased by the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company, nor of its value at any time since the year 1913, when the lease was executed, seventeen years before suit was commenced.

2. The complaint does not allege that the Citizens Gas Company ever acquired or owned any plant or gas mains or property other than the plant, real estate and 375 miles of gas mains leased to it by the Indianapolis Gas Company (Appellant's Brief, pp. 158, 161 to 168), with extensions of and betterments to the same, paid for by the sale of mortgage bonds of said lessor (Appellant's Brief, p. 192), except only as an inference might be drawm that it acquired 100 miles of gas mains in 1906, to comply with the condition in its city franchise that it have that amount of mains (Appellant's Brief, p. 120), which franchise was assigned to it in 1906 (Appellant's Brief, p. 137); and does not intimate that the Citizens Gas Company had any source of income from which to make the alleged payments of rentals, interest and taxes except out of such income from operation of the leased property.

3. The complaint does not allege that the stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company nor any off them have ever been repaid, from savings or otherwise, amounts equal to the face value of their certificates of stock, with interest thereon at the rate of 10% per annum, as provided in the franchise and articles of association (Appellant's Brief, pp. 119, 135, 136), to give any right to a conveyance of its property to the city "to be owned and operated or leased by it"; nor does it even aver that any dividends whatever ever were paid by said lessee company to its stockholders, or that it ever earned any income whatever from which to pay dividends. The averments that the lessee, Citizens Gas Company, took subscriptions for and sold its capital stock (Appellant's Brief, pp. 138, 145), that its franchise was amended so as to authorize the mortgage of its property to secure bonds it might issue (Appellant's Brief, pp. 149-151), and that it "acquired property of great value" (Appellant's Brief, pp. 151, 152), are not supplemented by the suggestion that it ever had any earnimgs or income, or ever repaid anything to investors, either of dividends or amounts invested; the averred conclusion of law "that there has been a substantial performance of all conditions precedent to the changing of said inchoate trusteeship into an active trusteeship on the part of said municipal city of Indianapolis" (Appellant's Brief, p. 144), and the fact that the Citizens Gas Company "has laid out and expended of the moneys, funds and property of the taxpayers of said city (of Indianapolis) * * * a large sum" (Appellant's Brief, p. 200), not amounting to allegations that the company earned an income from property other than what was leased—or from it, either—or that it paid dividends or repaid its mortgage loans, or reimbursed investors, so as to require a conveyance to the city as trustee.

4. The complaint does not allege anything as to the income which the lessee has drawn from the leased gas plant embracing 375 miles of gas mains and extensions (now totalling in excess of 500 miles) during the 17 years it had held possession and operated same when this action was commenced, and had paid the rentals, interest and taxes complained of.

5. The complaint does not deny that the provisions of the lease authorizing the lessee Citizens Gas Company to take down and sell bonds of the lessor secured by the mortgage attacked, in such amount that the proceeds when sold at 85% of the face will pay "the total cost of such extensions or betterments" (Appellant's Brief, p. 192), has been fully carried out as to all extensions and betterments made, the only averment in relation thereto being that "the said Citizens Gas Company has well and truly performed all the obligations imposed upon it by said pretended lease" (Appellant's Brief, p. 200).

6. The complaint does not allege that the lessee had surrendered possession of the leased property, nor returned the income which it received therefrom during the seventeen years that possession was held, nor contain any offer to surrender possession or to pay for the use of the leased property during those seventeen years, nor any offer to return or to account for such income or any part of it.

7. The complaint, filed in March, 1930, does not allege facts tending to constitute any cause for challenging the validity of the mortgage given by the Indianapolis Gas Company October 1, 1902 (Appellant's Brief, pp. 173, 203), to secure $7,500,000.00 of bonds, nor the lease by that company to the Citizens Gas Company of September 13, 1913 (Appellant's Brief, p. 165), expressly made subject to said mortgage (Appellant's Brief, pp. 173, 192, 193), which has not existed during the entire seventeen years that the Citizens Gas Company has continued to hold and occupy under the lease.

It is elementary that any suit seeking rescission of an executed contract must involve at least an offer to restore the received consideration, or to account for it. But appellant ignores the transactions of seventeen years during which the Citizens Gas Company has openly held possession of the leased property and seeks to wipe out the very existence of the lease without any regard to the equities of the interested parties. Yet that lapse of time constitutes such laches as to preclude equitable relief.

The lease is fair upon its face. There is no suggestion that the agreed rental is disproportionate. The lease was made as a result of proper corporate action. It had the considered approval of the Public Service Commission of Indiana. It follows that this suit, to adopt the words of this Court in Public Service Commission v. City of Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 42-43,

> "is a collateral attack upon the action of the commission, and can only succeed in case the order was wholly void, either because of fraud which entered into it, or because the commission was without jurisdiction or exceeded its jurisdiction in making such order."

There is not a single fact alleged in the complaint showing that fraud induced or vitiated the order of the Commission. There was no excess of jurisdiction, because Section 95 of the Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act is an express grant of authority to the Commission for the approval of leases of such nature. Appellant vigorously attacks the constitutionality and validity of the Act. There is no need to debate such questions at this time. This Court has repeatedly recognized the Act as legal. The action of the Commission upon this very lease has been upheld judicially: Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282.

It thus appears that the alleged insolvency that is the apparent basis of the request for the appointment of receivers rests in appellant's conception that practically everything that has occurred from the organization of the Indianapolis Gas Company to and including the passage of the legalizing Act of 1929 is null and void: and particularly that there must be a repayment by the Indianapolis

Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of moneys paid as rental under a lease lawfully approved by a legally constituted tribunal and sanctioned by the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction with respect to property of which the Citizens Gas Company has had the continuous benefit for some seventeen years. In short, appellant desires to substitute his opinion as to the validity of the lease for that of the two companies, of the Commission, and of the Court. In other words, no ground whatever is shown for the appointment of a receiver.

The first prayer of the complaint is that the existence of a public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company for the benefit of the inhabitants of Indianapolis be adjudged. (Appellant's Brief, p. 221.) Prayer and suit are unnecessary. There has been a final decision by a court of competent jurisdiction forever establishing the existence of such a public charitable trust: Todd v. Citizens Gas Company et al.; Cotter v. same; 46 Fed. 2nd. 855, 283 U. S. 852. The City of Indianapolis was a party to such litigation, and therefore every one of its citizens and inhabitants is bound thereby. Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 445, 56 L. ed. 820, 833. The existence and validity of the public charitable trust having thus been finally adjudicated, neither appellant nor any other inhabitant of the City may relitigate these questions in this or any other court. Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195. The effect of these decisions cannot be avoided by characterizing the demurrers to the complaint as "speaking demurrers." Appellant himself by his supplemental complaint refers to the decisions and shows that he was restrained from litigating during the pendency of such cases. His statement that the final disposition by the Supreme Court of the United States of those cases absolves him of any restraint is of course a conclusion of law and of no effect. Appellant's assertions of what the law is are of no weight; the court knows and takes judicial notice of the law without the necessity of pleading. The allegations of the complaint pertaining to the alleged conspiracy to defeat the establishment of the public charitable trust are therefore stultified, and appellant's prayer for a declaration of the existence of such trust and equitable aid in support thereof are to be disregarded.

Conclusion.

Appellant's suit professes to be in the public interest. But no one is helped, and nothing is proved, by vague though voluminous accusations of fraud and conspiracy to defeat the very public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis whose existence and validity have been fully, fairly, and finally determined by a court of competent jurisdiction. It is hardly in the public interest to seek to wrest from public officials by means of private receivership proceedings the control of a public charitable trust with which they are charged. It would be a most mischievous precedent that a public charitable trust is to be enforced according to the views, not of the law officers of the public, but of any private individual who desires to arrogate his opinion over that of the public. And certainly it is not in the public interest to hinder and delay the performance of such trust by litigation such as this; and this suit could have no other effect.

We ask that the judgment of the lower court be forthwith affirmed.

Gentlemen:

By request of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, we hand you herewith certified copies of two resolutions today adopted by such Board, viz: one for rejection by the city of assignment of lease between your company and the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and the other for temporary use of such property. We also hand you copy of a rejection of such assignment which has today been recorded in the office of the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen,—

Herewith we tender you the sum of $171,575.00; which we understand is equivalent to the amount of interest due and payable upon your First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent. Bonds on October 1, 1935.

This sum is tendered you as a payment on account of temporary use and occupancy of your property by the City of Indianapolis pursuant to the certain resolution, entitled "Resolution for Temporary Use of Property of The Indianapolis Gas Company" adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, on September 9, 1935;

a copy of which resolution was that day transmitted to you.

This sum is not tendered you under or on account of the certain lease between you and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis dated September 30, 1913, or any assignment thereof. The City of Indianapolis is not acting under said lease, or any assignment thereof, and has not recognized and does not recognize said lease as an obligation in any respect, either binding upon the City or upon any property acquired by the City from said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

Herewith we tender you the sum of $4780.80, which we understand is equivalent to the amount of your third instalment of Federal Income tax for the year 1934 payable in 1935.

This sum is tendered you as a payment on account of temporary use and occupancy of your property by the City of Indianapolis pursuant to the certain resolution, entitled "Resolution for Temporary Use of Property of The Indianapolis Gas Company" adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, on September 9, 1935; a copy of which resolution was that day transmitted to you.

This sum is not tendered you under or on account of the certain lease between you and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis dated September 30, 1913, or any assignment thereof. The City of Indianapolis is not acting under said lease, or any assignment thereof, and has not recognized and does not recognize said lease as an obligation in any respect, either binding upon the City or upon any property acquired by the City from said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

Gentlemen:

We have had no response from you to our repeated requests for an opportunity to negotiate a lease for the use of your property by the City of Indianapolis.

That there may be no misunderstanding of our position, we desire to obtain from you an agreement for the use of your property by the City of Indianapolis in connection with its operation of property acquired from Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and upon terms that are both appropriate and fair. Therefore we have asked, and we now ask, that you inform us whether you are willing to undertake to negotiate such an agreement.

This is a matter not merely of private interest, but of public concern. While you have responsibilities to your security holders, we have responsibilities to our citizens. We seek no unfair advantage, and will take no arbitrary action; but we are determined that the interests of the community shall be protected so long as the service of gas is here confided to our care.

You have returned without explanation or comment checks that we sent you by way of compensation for temporary use of your property since September 9, 1935, the date upon which the City acquired the property owned by Citizens Gas Company; and we understand that by so doing you incur the risk of non-payment of your bond interest on October 1st as well as non-payment of certain taxes, with the consequent danger of a default in your mortgage bond obligations.

1282 To avoid such an unnecessary misfortune, we again offer you these sums, viz. $171,575.00 and $4780.80. We waive no rights by making this offer; but we ask you to waive no rights of yours by an acceptance. You may take these payments without prejudice to your position and without qualification, save only that the City be not precluded, upon the ground that by making these payments it has recognized as binding upon it the obligations of your lease with Citizens Gas Company.

We consider the terms of your lease with the Citizens Gas Company are inappropriate and unfair to the City and to consumers of gas. We are willing to undertake to negotiate the terms of a new lease from you to the City that will be both appropriate and fair.

Are you willing to do the same?

Gentlemen:

We tender you herewith two checks, one in the sum of $171,575 and the other in the sum of $4780.80 which equal the amount of the interest on the mortgage bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company for October 1, 1935, and its third instalment of Federal Income Taxes. In making this tender we do not agree that the lease executed between The Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company under date of September 30th, 1913, is valid or enforceable against the City of Indianapolis, nor do we waive any rights by making this tender and payment, but we ask you to waive no rights of yours by accepting; and you shall be at full liberty to assert, as we understand you do, that said lease is an obligation binding on the City of Indianapolis.

We likewise offer to make all other payments stipulated in said lease for a period of six months from the 9th day of September, 1935, (the day upon which the property of the Citizens Gas Company was transferred to the City of Indianapolis) upon the same terms and conditions. We will make these payments without prejudice to our position or rights and you may accept the same without prejudice to your position or rights and without qualification save only that it is agreed that by making all such payments the city has not recognized as valid or binding upon it the obligations of your lease with the Citizens Gas Company.

Gentlemen:

We are in receipt of your favor of today, September 30, 1935, enclosing two checks, with a stipulation which you expect us to join in, the substance of which we understand to be as follows:

That neither you nor we are waiving any rights which any of us may have previously had, or may claim, concerning the lease executed between The Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company under date of September 30, 1913, you making these or future payments referred to without prejudice to your position or rights and we accepting the same without prejudice to our position or rights under said lease or in any relation thereto.

We expect to deposit said checks early tomorrow morning and if we have in any way misinterpreted your letter, please notify us immediately.

Indianapalis, Indiana.

Gentlemen:

At a preliminary conference held Tuesday at the Columbia Club between representatives of your company and the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, at the request of that Board, I stated the principal objections which the City of Indianapolis has to the terms of the 99 year lease executed by your Company and the Citizens Gas Company on September 30, 1913. As I advised you, the objections stated are not to be considered as inclusive, because undoubtedly, if a new lease is to be executed, there are many provisions of the old lease, not discussed, which would need thorough consideration and substantial revision.

At your request, we sumarize below the provisions of the lease of September 30, 1913, which in the opinion of the Board of Directors of the Utility Department are particularly burdensome:

1st. Subdivision 7 requires the Citizens Gas Company to refund the bonds secured by the mortgage executed by The Indianapolis Gas Company during the entire term of the lease. That section further provides:

"Should such refunding bonds be sold below par then the lessee shall pay any additional sum necessary to complete the payment of the outstanding bonds, and shall have no lien upon the property or charge against the lessor therefor * * *"

1286 It is then provided that if the refunding bonds should be sold at a premium, the premium should belong to the Citizens Gas Company.

In substance, this is a guaranty that for a period of 99 years from September 30, 1913, the debt of The Indianapolis Gas Company will be refunded without expense to it.

It is probable that the mortgage debt would have to be refunded twice during the remaining 77 years of this lease and if, as is likely, the bonds should be sold below par this agreement imposes a very heavy financial responsibility.

2nd. Subdivision 14 of the lease requires the lessee during the entire continuance of the lease to pay all taxes of every nature and description not only on the property covered by the lease, but upon its earnings and the rental reserved "so far as the same may constitute the basis for an income tax." Under this provision of the lease, the Citizens Gas Company not only paid the local property taxes amounting to $95,543.91 for the year 1934, but also Federal Income taxes and Indiana Gross Income taxes upon the rent. The amounts paid in 1934 for income taxes were slightly in excess of $25,000 and if the present trend of taxation is continued this covenant would impose an increasing burden throughout the unexpired term of the lease.

3rd. Subdivision 15 of the lease contains a covenant that the Citizens Gas Company will, during the term of the lease, "renew, repair, replace and extend the same, so as to maintain and keep the demised premises in as good order, repair and condition as the same are now or may be put upon the completion of the construction contract hereinabove referred to, and in their present state of efficiency."

There are additional provisions of the lease authorizing the abandonment of the coal gas plant of the lessor, making certain provisions with respect to mains affected by electrolysis, and also providing for the sale of obsolete plant under certain conditions.

The agreement with respect to renewals and replacements is so broad as to place a heavy and undetermined burden upon the lessee with respect to renewals.

4th. Sudbdivision 21 requires an increase in the annual rental of $10,000 a year when gas is sold at a price of less than 50c per 1000 cubic feet but more than 45c 1287 and an additional increase of $5,000 in the annual rental when gas is sold at 45c per 1000 cubic feet or less. The clear tendency of this provision of the lease is to penalize the lessee if it reduces the price of gas. The purpose of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis is to make reductions in the price of gas furnished whenever that is possible. Any contract which increases the rent to be paid, when and if the price of gas is reduced is, in the Board's opinion, objectionable.

5th. The lease contains a provision that the lessee will perform and observe all of the covenants and agreements of the lessor (except those as to the payment of the principal of the bonds) contained in its mortgage. Under this provision of the lease The Indianapolis Gas Company has submitted to the Citizens Gas Company a bill for services rendered to it by its attorneys.

6th. The rent (exclusive of taxes) now payable under the terms of this lease is as follows:

Interest on bonded debt	$343,150
Dividends to stockholders	120,000
Organization expense Indianapolis Gas Company	300
Total	$463,450

The Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities regards this rent as burdensome and out of proportion to the value of the use of the property. If a satisfactory arrangement is to be concluded there must be a substantial reduction in this rent, the amount of which reduction can only be determined by an investigation of the cost and value of the property and its usefulness to the Utility District.

As we have already notified you, the position of the Utility District is that this lease is not binding on the City of Indianapolis or enforceable against it or the property acquired by it from Citizens Gas Company.

We have pointed out above what we believe to be the most burdensome features of the lease in order that in any negotiation you may understand our position.

Very truly yours,
Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson.

The following resolution was then offered, considered, and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, on the 9th day of September, 1935, this Board adopted a resolution for the temporary use of property of The Indianapolis Gas Company for a period of six months from such date, pending negotiations for an agreement for the continued use of such property but not under an assignment of the certain lease from The Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, dated September 30, 1913; and

Whereas, negotiations have been commenced but have not been concluded nor have they progressed; and

Whereas, this Board does not desire to continue after March 9, 1936, payments in amounts equivalent to those specified in said lease, for the use of said property:

Be It Resolved, by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, That the arrangement for payments for temporary use and occupancy of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company as specified in the resolution of this Board adopted September 9, 1935, be not continued after March 9, 1936; and

Be It Further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to said The Indianapolis Gas Company."

Gentlemen:

The City of Indianapolis through its Department of Utilities desires from time to time to lay and use mains and pipes to be connected and used with mains and pipes of The Indianapolis Gas Company.

May it be understood:

(1) That pending an agreement between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company settling the controversy between them as to the validity and binding effect on the City or its Department of Utilities of the certain lease dated September 30, 1913, between The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, or pending the final determination in a litigated case whether such lease is a valid and binding obligation upon the City of Indianapolis or the Department of Utilities of said City or any of the property of either, the City or its Department of Utilities may from time to time lay and use mains and pipes in connection with the mains and pipes of The Indianapolis Gas Company without prejudice to the position or rights of either the City or its Department of Utilities or of The Indianapolis Gas Company;

(2) That pipes and mains so laid and used by the City or its Department of Utilities shall not be considered as laid or used under or by reason of said lease, nor as becoming the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company, unless or until an agreement upon that subject is made between The Indianapolis Gas Company and the City or its Department of Utilities, or unless and until such subject is finally determined by litigation between the City of Indianapolis or its Department of Utilities and The Indianapolis Gas Company.

Please let us hear from you.

Gentlemen:

I am directed by the Board of Directors of The Indianapolis Gas Company to acknowledge your letter of March 20, 1936, and to advise you that this Company grants your request made therein as to the future laying of pipes and mains to be connected with and extensions of the pipes and main which this Company now owns, upon the terms and conditions outlined in your letter, upon, however, the following and additional terms and conditions, viz:

1. That the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis shall advise this Company in writing before beginning actual construction of any such mains and pipes, of the location and extent of said additions or extensions to existing mains and pipes belonging to this Company, and of the estimated cost thereof to the Citizens Gas and Coke Utility or the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis.

2. That The Indianapolis Gas Company shall have the right and option to purchase and acquire said means and pipes so laid and constructed by the Citizens Gas and Coke Utility or the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis upon the payment to either said Utility or the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis such sum or moneys as shall equal the entire cost to said Citizens Gas and Coke Utility or Depart-1293 ment of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis of the purchase, laying and installing of said mains and pipes.

The option and right to acquire said mains and pipes to continue for a period of three years from this date and exercisable upon ninety (90) days written notice to the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis.

3. The consent granted by this letter may be cancelled and annulled upon sixty (60) days written notice to the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis as to any additional mains and pipes, the construction or laying of which shall not have been commenced at the time of receipt of said notice of cancellation. Provided that said notice of cancellation, if the same should be given, would not in any wise end or terminate the option and right of this Company to purchase any pipes and mains laid or constructed prior to said cancellation under the consent of this letter all as provided for in Clause No. 2.

We shall be pleased if you will advise us of the acceptance of the terms of this granting of your request.

Gentlemen:

This will acnowledge receipt of your letter of April 6th, 1936, with respect to main extensions.

This letter has been submitted to the Board of Directors for the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis. No objection was expressed to the 1st and 3rd conditions stated in your letter, but we are asked to make this inquiry about the 2nd condition:

Would it be agreeable with you, in lieu of such 2nd condition, to provide that if the lease of September 30, 1913, be held binding upon the City, any such extensions be considered as made under its provisions; but that if such lease is held not binding, you agree, not by way of option, but positively, to acquire such extension at cost?

Please let us hear from you.

Gentlemen:

In reply to your letter of April 8, 1936, relative to the subject of extensions of mains belonging to this Company, we desire to state:

It is entirely agreeable to us that in event lease of September 30, 1913, is held binding upon the City of Indianapolis and its Department of Utilities, such extensions as you hereafter make to our mains be considered as made under and pursuant to the terms and provisions of said lease.

We cannot agree, in event the lease is held not binding, to purchase said extensions at their cost as you requested in your letter.

We will, however, in such event agree to purchase such extensions as shall hereafter be made to our mains at the appraised value thereof, not to exceed cost, upon the following terms and conditions:

1. Before any extensions are actually started, you submit to us, for examination by us and our engineers, a full and complete statement and plan of such proposed extension or extensions with such information as to territory to be served and services to be rendered as we may request, together with a statement of the cost of the same.

2. Upon approval by us of such proposed extension or extensions, and the construction by you of the same in accordance with said approval, when and as it is given, we shall then undertake definitely to purchase from you said extension or extensions, said purchase to be consummated within a reasonable time after the settlement of the controversy now existing between us as to the effect and validity of the lease above referred to. The approval or rejection by us of any proposed extensions is to be made in writing.

Very truly yours,
The Indianapolis Gas Company,
By Wm. J. Yule,
Secretary.

The Indianapolis Gas Company,
Indianapolis.

Gentlemen,—

Confirming our conversation today with Mr. A. V. Brown and Judge Ewbank:

Your letter of May 12th referred to an appraised price or value for such extensions of your mains as should be made, but omitted to state how or by whom such appraisement was to be made—a material point.

Will you agree that such appraisement is to be made jointly by an engineer to be selected by you and by an engineer to be selected by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, or by Citizens Gas & Coke Utility, each to pay the expense of its own engineer; and in the event of their disagreement, i. e. the disagreement of such engineers, they to select a third engineer, whose valuation is to be binding upon both parties, and whose expense is to be paid half by each party; the valuation to be made upon notice by either party to the other that a valuation is desired.

And will you let us hear from you as quickly as possible, preferably Monday?

Very truly,
Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson.

Gentlemen:

In reply to your letter of May 23rd which has reference to our letter of May 12th in respect to extensions which may hereafter be made to our mains, we desire to say the method and procedure which you propose for the appraisal of such extensions is satisfactory to those of our officers and directors to whom it has been possible to submit your suggestion. It seems reasonable to assume that there will be no objection on the part of other officers and directors when they can be consulted.

Very truly yours,

Indianapolis, Indiana,
September 30, 1936.

The Indianapolis Gas Company,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

Gentlemen:

On February 10th, 1936, at your suggestion, we submitted to you a proposition containing the terms on which we were willing to acquire the plant and property of The Indianapolis Gas Company. This proposition was submitted with a clear understanding that it was requested by the directors of the Company and by a substantial number of both the stockholders and bondholders of the Company. It was likewise stated to you before the proposition was submitted that no purchase would be consummated merely on the action of the Company through its stockholders but that such a purchase must have the approval of the bondholders.

We understand that the terms of the proposition submitted do not meet with your approval.

In addition, an action has been commenced in the United States District Court in Indianapolis by the Trustee under the deed of trust securing mortgage bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company in which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of the validity and binding effect of the lease of September 30, 1913, against the City of Indianapolis as successor trustee.

We procured an extension for filing our answer in this case until October 1st, but the plaintiff has been unwilling to grant a further extension of time and it is necessary for us to file our answer not later than Thursday of this week.

In view of these circumstances the offer which we made to you to purchase your property is hereby withdrawn.

Very truly yours,
Board of Directors for Utilities of
The City of Indianapolis,
By Henry L. Dithmer, Its President.

(Here appear (pp. 358-361) the contract of March 2, 1936 between the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis and The Indianapolis Gas Company and a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of The Indianapolis Gas Company ratifying said contract. A copy of said contract and of said resolution appears as Exhibit E to the answer and counterclaim of the City of Indianapolis, et al. (I R. 205-208))

The following resolution was thereupon offered and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, By the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis:

That the certain written agreement dated March 2, 1936, by and between The Indianapolis Gas Company, an Indiana corporation, and the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, with respect to continued temporary use by the City of Indianapolis of property belonging to said The Indianapolis Gas Company, is hereby approved and adopted by this Board for and on behalf of the City of Indianapolis; and the act of Henry L. Dithmer in executing said agreement for this Board as its President is hereby ratified and confirmed; and

That the officers of said Board and of Citizens Gas & Coke Utility are hereby authorized and directed to take all steps necessary and proper to carry into effect the said agreement.

A discussion as to the cost of gas then followed.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

INTERROGATORIES PROPOUNDED TO THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY BY THE DEFENDANT, CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS AND THE INDIVIDUAL DEFENDANTS WHO ARE MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES AND DIRECTORS FOR UTILITIES OF THE CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS.

1319 Interrogatory No. 23.

Were you advised for the first time on or about July 10, 1935, that the City of Indianapolis was denying the validity of and the enforceability against it of said lease of September 30, 1913?

Interrogatory No. 24.

At any time prior to July 10, 1935, did you know of any controversy existing between the Indianapolis Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis as to the validity or enforceability against the City of Indianapolis of said lease of September 30, 1913?

Interrogatory No. 25.

Did you, through any officer, agent or attorney of yours, advise said Chase National Bank of New York prior to March 2, 1936, that your company was proposing to enter into an agreement with the City of Indianapolis for the payment into the Th Indiana National Bank of Indan-apolis of certain sums of money pending the final determination of this controversy?

Interrogatory No. 26.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 25 in the affirmative, then state what officers, agent, attorney or representative of yours gave such information to said Chase National Bank of New York and to what officer, agent or attorney of said Chase National Bank of New York such information was communicated?

1320 Interrogatory No. 27.

Has any correspondence been interchanged between yourself or any one acting on your behalf and said Chase National Bank of New York respecting said agreement of March 2, 1936, or in any way dealing with that agreement or what action you or The Indiana National Bank should take in respect of such agreement?

Interrogatory No. 28.

If you answer Interrogatory No. 27 in the affirmative, then give a list of the dates of any letters and telegrams so interchanged, the persons by whom written and to whom written.

Interrogatory No. 29.

Are the letters and telegrams referred to in Interrogatory No. 28 in your possession?

Interrogatory No. 30.

If you shall answer the preceding interrogatories to the effect that there was no interchange of correspondence between yourself and said Chase National Bank prior to the execution of the agreement of March 2, 1936, then state whether there was any such communication after March 2, 1936.

Interrogatory No. 31.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 30 in the affirmative, then state whether any letters or telegrams were interchanged between yourself or any officer, agent or attorney of yours and the Chase National Bank in respect of said agreement of March 2, 1936.

1321 Interrogatory No. 32.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 31 in the affirmative, then attach a list of such letters and telegrams, giving the date written, by whom and to whom written.

Interrogatory No. 33.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 32 in the affirmative, then state whether the letters and telegrams received by you and copies of those written by you are in your possession.

Interrogatory No. 34.

If in answer to Interrogatories numbered 27 to 31, inclusive, you state that you had no interchange of correspondence with the Chase National Bank of New York in reference to the agreement of March 2, 1936, either before or after that agreement was executed, then state whether there were any oral negotiations, or conversations, or communications between you and said Chase National Bank of New York either before or after March 2, 1936, in respect of the execution or performance of said contract.

Interrogatory No. 35.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 34 in the affirmative, then give the dates of such conferences and what officer, representative or attorney of yours conducted the same on your behalf or participated therein.

Interrogatory No. 36.

Have you or any of your officers or stockholders
1322 agreed directly or indirectly, in writing or otherwise, to indemnify the Chase National Bank of New York for the costs or expenses of the suit commenced by it and now being prosecuted in the United States District Court as Cause No. 1844 in Equity, or agreed to become primarily responsible for any such costs or attorneys' fees?

Interrogatory No. 37.

Have you informed or caused said Chase National Bank of New York to be informed, directly or indirectly, of the payments which actually were made by the City of Indianapolis into the Indiana National Bank as escrow agent under the agreement of March 2, 1936?

Interrogatory No. 38.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 37 in the affirmative, then state whether such information was oral or written.

Interrogatory No. 39.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 38 that the advice so given was written, attach a list of all letters or telegrams exchanged between yourself and said Chase National Bank of New York, in respect of such deposits, the date of each letter or telegram, and the persons to whom written and the person by whom written.

Interrogatory No. 40.

Are the originals of the letters and telegrams received by you referred to in the last preceding interrogatory 1323 and the copies of those written by you in your possession?

Interrogatory No. 41.

Approximately how many gas consumers now receive service from the mains or pipes of The Indianapolis Gas Company?

Interrogatory No. 42.

Have you ever denied the validity of the lease of September 30, 1913?

Interrogatory No. 43.

Have you constantly asserted since July 10, 1935, that the lease of July 30, 1913, was valid and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis?

Interrogatory No. 44.

Has your Company ever entered into any negotiations with the City of Indianapolis or its representatives for the purpose of settling or adjusting the controversy between The Indianapolis Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis in disregard of the rights of the bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company?

Interrogatory No. 45.

What payments were made to or on behalf of your Company by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis since September 9, 1935, and prior to March 2, 1936? Give a full list of all payments so made, the dates when made and the purpose for which such payments were made i. e., whether for interest, dividends, expenses, taxes, or the like.

Interrogatory No. 30.

Have you had any correspondence with The Indianapolis Gas Company or The Indiana National Bank in respect of the agreement of March 2, 1936, referred to in Interrogatory No. 29, supra; and if so, attach to your answer a list of such correspondence showing the date of each letter and by whom written.

Interrogatory No. 31.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 30 in the affirmative then state whether the letters received by you and copies of those written by you are in your possession?

Interrogatory No. 32.

If you shall answer the preceding interrogatories, that you did not know that the agreement of March 2, 1351 1936, was to be executed before its execution, then state when you first learned of the execution of such agreement and from whom you received this information?

Interrogatory No. 33.

Have you ever protested to the City of Indianapolis, to The Indiana National Bank or The Indianapolis Gas Company against payments being made in pursuance of such agreement?

Interrogatory No. 34.

If you shall answer Interrogatory No. 33 in the affirmative, then state when and to whom such protests were made?

Indianapolis Gas Company Mortgage
dated October 1, 1902.

Dear Sir:

In response to our inquiry to the Indiana National Bank as to whether the City of Indianapolis is making Escrow deposits in accordance with the March 2, 1936 Escrow Agreement, we have received from the Bank a transcript of the Escrow Account.

Apparently the sum of $171,575. is being deposited semi-annually as a sum equivalent to six months' interest on the outstanding bonds, whereas our records indicate such deposit should be $172,025. Should this difference be accounted for by eliminating the interest on the Treasury Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company, we believe that coupons appertaining to such bonds maturing October 1, 1936, April and October 1937, April 1, 1938 and subsequent coupon maturities for which funds are not deposited should be surrendered to us for cancellation.

Will you please give this matter your attention.

Yours very truly,

Paul C. Beardslee
Assistant Trust Officer.

Gentlemen:

We acknowledge your letter of April 18th in respect to the difference between the semi-annual interest on the outstanding bonds of our Company and the semi-annual escrow deposit which has been made on account thereof.

A statement of the outstanding bonds, unpaid interest and escrow deposits is enclosed.

The difference of $450 between the semi-annual interest due and the escrow deposit made is the interest on eighteen of our bonds which are held in the treasury of the Citizens Gas and Coke Utility of the City of Inianapolis. We have taken up with them the question of having these coupons sent in for cancellation and will advise further as soon as we have their reply.

Gentlemen:

Herewith we tender you the sum of $4,780.80, which we understand is equivalent to the amount due and owing by you for the third installment of your Federal Income Tax for the year 1934 payable in 1935.

This sum is tendered you as a payment on account of temporary use and occupancy of your property by the City of Indianapolis pursuant to the certain resolution, entitled "Resolution for Temporary Use of Property of The Indianapolis Gas Company" adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, on September 9, 1935; a copy of which resolution was that day transmitted to you.

Said sum is not tendered you under or on account of the certain lease between you and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis dated September 30, 1913, or any assignment thereof. The City of Indianapolis is not acting under said lease, or any assignment thereof, and has not recognized and does not recognize said lease as an obligation in any respect, either binding upon the City or upon any property acquired by the City from said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

If you do not accept this tendered payment or acquiesce in the temporary use of your property by the City of Indianapolis pursuant to said resolution, please inform the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis accordingly.

General Ordinance No. 82—1935.

An Ordinance concerning acquisition by the City of Indianapolis of the plant and property of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, and matters connected therewith.

• • • • • •

"(The part here omitted recites in appropriate 'Whereas' clauses certain historical facts in regard to Citizens Gas Company and its relationship to the City of Indianapolis, which appear elsewhere in this record)."
(Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

1414 Whereas on June 29, 1935 the City, by and through the Board of Directors for Utilities of the Department of Public Utilities of said City advanced and paid to said Citizens Gas Company the sum of $3,550,000, in trust for the purpose of redeeming and retiring all outstanding preferred stock of said Company and of paying and cancelling the certificates representing all outstanding common stock of the Company as provided in said franchise contract and the amended Articles of Incorporation of said Company, such sum so advanced and paid being sufficient for said purpose, which said fund was provided from the sale
1415 by said Board of Directors for Utilities of revenue bonds payable solely and exclusively out of revenues to be derived from the operation of said gas plant and property when acquired by said City, all as authorized by Chapters 77 and 78 of the Acts of 1929, Chapter 67 of the Acts of 1931, and Chapter 125 of the Acts of 1933 as amended by Chapter 311 of the Acts of 1935, of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana; and

Whereas thereafter on September 9, 1935 the plant and property of said Citizens Gas Company, as referred to in and contemplated by said franchise contract of 1905, was, by instruments of conveyance and assignment duly executed by the proper officers of said Company on authority of resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors and Board of Trustees of said Company, conveyed, assigned, transferred and delivered to the City of Indianapolis, subject to such of the legal obligations of said Company as the City of Indianapolis, under the terms of said franchise contract and of said public charitable trust, was bound to accept or recognize as a charge against such plant and property, (the City of Indianapolis expressly rejecting a tendered assignment of a lease between the Indianapolis Gas Company and said Citizens Gas Company, and refusing to recognize said lease as an obligation binding upon the City) which said instruments of conveyance and assignment were on said date of execution and delivery duly recorded in the office of the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana, in Deed Record 937 and Miscellaneous Record 265, respectively; and

Whereas prior to such conveyance, assignment, transfer and delivery of said plant and property of Citizens Gas Company to the City of Indianapolis, all notices to and demands upon Citizens Gas Company, its directors and trustees, and all other steps, conditions and things necessary or required by said franchise contract, by said public charitable trust or by the statutes of Indiana, to be done precedent to or in connection with the taking over of such 1416 plant and property, were, as this Common Council does now find, determine and declare, duly and fully given, made, done, performed, and executed for and in behalf of the City of Indianapolis by the Board of Public Works, the Board of Directors for Utilities and other proper officials of said City; and

Whereas the acquisition of said plant and property of the Citizens Gas Company, as contemplated in said franchise contract of 1905 and pursuant to the public charitable trust existing therein, is and will be to the advantage, benefit and welfare of the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants and the consumers of gas therein; now therefore

Be It Ordained by the Common Council of the City of Indianapolis;

Section 1. That the acquisition and taking over of the plant and property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, on the 9th day of September, 1935, for and in behalf of the City of Indianapolis, by the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City, including the acceptance of deed of conveyance of real estate and assignments of personal property, and the rejection of an assignment of the certain lease from the Indianapolis Gas Company, and its refusal to recognize said lease as an obligation binding upon the City, and all acts, steps and proceedings whatsoever relating to such matter as on said date and theretofore done and taken, be and is hereby in all things ratified, approved, adopted and confirmed; and that the public charitable trust in all such plant and property so delivered to and as accepted by said Board of Directors for Utilities be and is hereby received and accepted, and the City of Indianapolis hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out.

1417 Sec. 2. This Ordinance, shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

MINUTES OF A MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS FOR UTILITIES HELD JUNE 5, 1935.

A meeting of the Board of Directors for Utilities for the City of Indianapolis was held on Wednesday, June 5, 1935, at 2 o'clock P. M. at 1350 Consolidated Building, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Present: Messrs. Dithmer, Jungelaus, Elsey, Sahm and Woodward.

Upon motion duly made, seconded and unanimously adopted, The Union Trust Company of Indianapolis was designated as one of the paying agents for the proposed City of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bond issue, a bid for which by Halsey Stuart & Co. and Otis & Company was accepted on May 29, 1935.

Upon motion duly made, seconded and unanimously adopted, The Cleveland Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio, was designated as another paying agent under said bond issue and the offices of Halsey Stuart & Company at Chicago, Illinois and in New York City were likewise designated.

Upon motion duly made, seconded and unanimously adopted, the following form for such bonds was approved, viz.:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

State of Indiana, County of Marion,
City of Indianapolis.

No. 1,000

City of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bond.

The City of Indianapolis, in Marion County, State of Indiana, for value received, hereby promises to pay to the bearer, or if this bond be registered then to the registered holder, solely out of the revenues derived from operation of its gas utility system, the principal sum of One Thousand Dollars on the first day of June, 19....., and to pay interest thereon from the date hereof until the principal is paid at the rate of four and one-half per cent (4½%) per annum, payable on the first day of December, 1935, and semi-annually thereafter on the first day of June and December in each year, upon presentation and surrender of the annexed coupons as they severally become due. Both principal and interest of this bond are payable at The Union Trust Company, in the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, or, at the option of the holder, at The Cleveland Trust Company, in the City of Cleveland, State of Ohio, or at the offices of Halsey, Stuart & Co., in the City of Chicago, State of Illinois and in the City of New York, State of New York, in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payment of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender in the United States of America for such purposes.

This bond is one of an issue of eight thousand bonds of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, of like date and tenor, except as to dates of maturity, in a total amount of Eight Million Dollars ($8,000,000), numbered 1 to 8,000, both inclusive, issued for the purpose of providing funds to acquire and take over property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and/or in which it has an interest, including moneys required to be paid for redemption or extinguishment of its capital stock and/or for payment of certain of its obligations and for necessary expenses incurred in connection therewith, including expenses of the City incident to obtaining such funds, as well as for the purpose of making necessary betterments, improvements, extensions and additions to such property, pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, on the 7th day of May, 1935, entitled "A Resolution (No. 2—1935) for the Issuance of Gas Plant Revenue Bonds", and in compliance with all applicable provisions of law, including the provisions of Chapter 78 of the Acts of 1929, and Chapter 77 of the Acts of 1929, Chapter 67 of the Acts of 1931, and Chapter 125 of the Acts of 1933, as amended by Chapter 311 of the Acts of 1935, of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana; the proceeds of said bonds to be applied solely to the purposes hereinabove described and as stated in said resolution.

The principal and interest of this bond and all other bonds of said issue are equally and ratably secured by and constitute a charge upon all the income and revenues derived from the operation of all of the gas utility system now or hereafter owned and/or operated by the City of Indianapolis, an amount of which income and revenues sufficient to pay the principal and interest of this bond and all other bonds of said issue as the same fall due is hereby irrevocably pledged to such purpose; and the City covenants to fix, maintain and collect reasonable and just charges for all gas service, and faithfully to comply with all pertinent provisions of law, including the requirement of Chapter 190 of the Acts of 1933 of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, viz: that a reasonable and just charge shall be such as produces sufficient revenue to pay, among other things, interest upon bonds, provide a sinking fund for liquidation of bonds, maintenance costs, operating charges, adequate funds for working capital, repairs and upkeep, which requirement as written in said Act is hereby independently adopted and made a part of this bond. This bond and all other bonds of said issue shall be paid solely and exclusively from the income and revenues of such gas utility property and not otherwise, and shall not in any respect be a corporate indebtedness of such City nor of the Utility District of the City of Indianapolis as a special taxing district payable out of taxes.

The City covenants that it will cause to be deposited with a national bank in Indianapolis, Indiana (reserving the right to transfer such account or any part thereof to any other one or more responsible banks or trust companies) in a special account, under such conditions as that a trust therein shall be created for the purpose of payment of the interest on and principal of this bond and all other bonds of said issue and that moneys can not be withdrawn from such account or accounts except for such purpose, on the 15th day of each month, so long as any of said bonds remain outstanding and unpaid, out of the revenues derived from the operation of said gas utility system, a sum equal to one-twelfth of the amount due and payable for principal during said year plus a sum equal to one-sixth of the amount due and payable for interest on the next succeeding interest payment date of said bonds.

This bond and all other bonds of said issue shall have the qualities of negotiable instruments in the hands of good faith holders, and shall be exempt from taxation as to principal and income as prescribed by the statutes of the State of Indiana.

This bond may be registered as to principal in the name of the holder, but unless so registered shall pass by delivery. The interest coupons annexed hereto shall at all times pass by delivery.

It is hereby certified and recited that all acts, conditions and things required to be done or performed precedent to and in the execution, issuance and delivery of this bond have been done and performed in regular and due form as provided by law.

In Witness Whereof, the City of Indianapolis, in Marion County, Indiana, has caused this bond to be signed in its corporate name by its Mayor and attested by its City Controller and its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and attested by its City Clerk, and the interest coupons hereto attached to be executed with the facsimile signatures of said Mayor and City Controller, as of the first day of June, 1935.

Certificate of Execution of Bonds and Non-Litigation.

We, the undersigned, being the officers of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, who are duly authorized by law and by resolution of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City to sign and execute the bonds herein referred to, do hereby certify that we did on the 24 day of June, 1935, officially sign and execute each of the City of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds, numbered from 1 to 8,000 both inclusive, dated June 1, 1935, bearing interest at 4½% per annum, denomination of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000) each, payable serially from June 1, 1938 to June 1, 1967, inclusive, as provided in Resolution No. 2—1935 adopted by said Board of Directors for Utilities on the 7th day of May, 1935; and that the facsimile signatures of the Mayor and of the Controller of said City are imprinted upon the coupons of said bonds, and that the corporate seal of said City has been impressed upon all of said bonds.

We further certify that no litigation of any kind is now pending or threatened in either state or federal courts seeking to restrain or enjoin, or in any manner questioning the authority or proceedings for, the issuance, sale, execution and delivery of the aforesaid bonds, or in any manner questioning the validity thereof, or the right, authority or power of said City of Indianapolis to acquire, own, and operate or lease to others to operate, the gas plant and property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis referred to in the above mentioned Resolution and in said bonds; that neither the corporate existence of said City nor the title of its present officers to their respective offices is being contested, and that no proceeding or authority for the issuance, sale, execution and delivery of said bonds has been rescinded, revoked or repealed.

Witness our respective hands this 27 day of June, 1935.

Oliver Kern,
Mayor.

Davin J. O'Neil,
Clerk.

Walter C. Bortiter, Controller.

Minutes of Meeting of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis Held September 9, 1935. (Pages 178 to 236, inclusive, of Minute Book.)

A meeting of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, was held on Monday, September 9, 1935, at 1:30 P. M., at 1350 Consolidated Building, Indianapolis, Indiana, pursuant to call.

Present: Messrs. Dithmer, Elsey, Jungclaus, Sahm and Angus. Messrs. Mooney, Hitz and Glossbrenner of the Board of Trustees also attended. Mayor Kern was present, and, by invitation of the Boards, ex-Mayor Sullivan was present.

President Dithmer announced that this was the time and place fixed for the receipt from Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis of instruments evidencing the transfer of its property to the City of Indianapolis pursuant to the terms of the public charitable trust established with respect to such property.

On behalf of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Mr. Frederick G. Rastenburg, its Secretary, and Mr. William G. Sparks, of counsel for the Company, appeared before the Board and presented to the Board certified copies of resolutions adopted earlier in the day by the Board of Directors of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and by its Trustees, which copies of resolutions, with the form of indemnity agreement therein referred to, are as follows, and are hereby spread of record in the minutes of this meeting:

(Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

"(Here follows a certified copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Citizens Gas Company as to the irrevocability of certain trust deposits for the payment of the preferred and common stock of said Company)".

1423 (Here follows (pp. 185-7) a certified copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors of Citizens Gas Company adopted on September 9, 1935, a copy of which resolution is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 86.) (Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

(Here follows (pp. 188-9) a form of indemnity agreement which is identical with the form of indemnity agreement actually executed, a copy of which appears as Exhibit J to the second amendment and supplement to plaintiff's bill of complaint.)

1424 Upon motion duly made, seconded, and unanimously adopted it was:

Resolved, That the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis execute to Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, as one step in the transfer to the City of Indianapolis of the property of said Company, and in consideration of such transfer, an Indemnity Agreement substantially in the form specified in the foregoing resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of said Company and by its Trustees; and

Be It Further Resolved, That Henry L. Dithmer be and he is hereby authorized and directed to sign and deliver a copy of such indemnity agreement for and on behalf of this Board.

President Dithmer thereupon signed and delivered to the said Secretary of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis a copy of said indemnity agreement; a duplicate original of which is as follows:

(Here follows (pp. 191-2) an executed copy of the Indemnity Agreement, a copy of which appears as Exhibit J to the second amendment and supplement to plaintiff's bill of complaint.)
(Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

1425 Thereupon said Frederic G. Rastenburg as Secretary of said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and on its behalf tendered to Henry L. Dithmer as President of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis on behalf of the City of Indianapolis instruments of transfer of property of said Company as follows, viz:

(1) Deed of Conveyance of Real Estate;
(2) Assignment of Personal Property;
(3) Assignment of Majestic Building Lease;

(4) Assignment of Indianapolis Gas Company lease; copies of which documents are here spread of record:

I. "Deed of Conveyance of Real Estate" (pp. 194-7), a copy of which is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 55.

II. "Instrument of Transfer and Assignment of Personal Property" (pp. 198-204), a copy of which appears as Exhibit E to the bill of complaint (I. R. 122-127.)

III. "Assignment of Lease" (pp. 205-8), a copy of which is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 56.

IV. "Assignment of Lease" (pp. 209-212), assigning the lease dated September 30, 1913 from The Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company, a copy of which appears as Exhibit F to the bill of complaint (I. R. 127-129).

1426 The Secretary of said Citizens Gas Company and its said counsel having retired from the meeting, the Board then deliberated upon the said tender of such instruments of transfer.

Mention being made that Messrs. Dithmer and Elsey, with counsel, had conferred with officials of The Indianapolis Gas Company upon several occasions, and that subsequently an inquiry was addressed to such officials on behalf of this Board to which no answer had been received though answer was requested before this date, such inquiry being as follows:

1427 And discussion following with respect to the rights of the City to condemn and purchase the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company; to building a system substantially duplicating its property to the extent necessary to render service to consumers; and to leasing its property; as well as with respect to the provisions of the lease, assignment of which was tendered, in relation to the rights and duties of the City and of this Board on behalf of the City, and its probable effect upon the operations of the gas system, a resolution was offered by Mr. Jungclaus, seconded by Mr. Angus, and unanimously adopted, as the President so announced, as follows:

(Here follows (pp. 216-18, part of 219) "Resolution for Rejection of Assignment of Lease", a copy of which appears as part of Exhibit C to the answer and counterclaim of the City of Indianapolis, et al. (I. R. 202-204)). (Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

1428 (Conclusion of p. 219.)

President Dithmer thereupon executed a copy of such "Rejection of Assignment of Lease and Refusal to Assume, Take Over, Or Be Bound Thereby", which was attested by Secretary Sahm and duly acknowledged, and delivered the same to the said representatives of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. Another copy was likewise executed and directed to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana. A duplicate original is here spread of record, as follows:

1429 (Here follows (p. 220) an executed copy of a document entitled "Rejection of Assignment of Lease and Refusal to Assume, Take Over, or Be Bound Thereby", a copy of which appears as part of Exhibit C to the answer and counterclaim of the City of Indianapolis, et al. (I. R. 203-4)).

1430 With respect to the tendered assignment of the lease between the Receiver of the Majestic Building Company and said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, the Board was made acquainted with the fact that while the present Receiver had been informed of the Board's desire to negotiate a new lease, no negotiations were in progress, and negotiations could not have been consummated prior to September 9, 1935. Thereupon it was duly:

"Resolved, That this Board accept the tendered assignment of the certain lease between the Receiver of Majestic Building Company, an Indiana corporation, and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, an Indiana corporation, on condition that the right of termination prior to the expiration date of such lease be preserved and available for exercise by the City".

—which resolution the President declared to be unanimously adopted.

The Board being informed that such lease had not been recorded in the office of the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana, counsel was directed to write said Receiver that such assignment had been conditionally accepted. Counsel subsequently reported that a letter had accordingly been written to L. Ert Slack as Receiver to such effect.

At this point the Board recessed to meet with representatives of the public press, and to permit recordation of the pertinent papers.

After recess, counsel reported that the said deed of conveyance of real estate had been recorded in the office of the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana, at 1431 3:45 P. M. on this September 9, 1935, in Deed Record 937 as Instrument No. 22602, the Auditor of Marion County having theretofore noted the transfer on his records pertaining to taxation; and that the said Assignment and Transfer of Personal Property had been recorded at the same time as Instrument No. 22603 in Miscellaneous Record 265 in said Office. Also that the tendered assignment of the said lease between The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis having been recorded at the instance of said latter company (being Instrument No. 22604 in Miscellaneous Record 265 in said office), counsel had caused an executed copy of said "Rejection of Lease" (hereinbefore authorized) to be placed of record in said office as Instrument No. 22605 in Miscellaneous Record 265.

Counsel also stated that at 4:05 P. M. on said day he served a certified copy of the resolution of this Board with respect to rejecting the tendered assignment of said The Indianapolis Gas Company lease, as well as an executed copy of said "Rejection of Lease" upon William J. Yule as Secretary of said The Indianapolis Gas Company at the office of said Company at Room 1004 Majestic Building in the City of Indianapolis, and left such copies with such Secretary.

It appearing that the City of Indianapolis was now the record owner of property formerly owned by said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and that the City was prepared to operate such property, consideration was given to the continuati of service to consumers of gas formerly served by aid of property belonging to said The Indianapolis Gas Company.

Mr. Elsey thereupon moved and Mr. Sahm seconded, the adoption of the following resolution:

1432 (Here follows (pp. 223-5) "Resolution for Temporary Use of Property of The Indianapolis Gas Company", a copy of which appears as part of Exhibit C to the answer and counterclaim of the City of Indianapolis, et al. (I. R. 200-202))

1433 Said resolution was duly adopted by the unanimous vote of the Board, and the President so announced.

A copy of said resolution was thereupon duly certified by the Secretary of the Board, and transmitted to the Secretary of said The Indianapolis Gas Company forthwith, at its office in the Majestic Building in the City of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Messrs. Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson, Consolidated Building,
Indianapolis.
Attention of Mr. Rabb.

Gentlemen:

This will acknowledge the delivery of the following papers which bear the following titles:

1. Resolution for rejection of assignment of lease between The Indianapolis Gas Co. and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.
2. Rejection of assignment of lease and refusal to assume, take over, or be bound thereby.

It is, of course, understood that this letter merely acknowledges the physical delivery of such papers, as we have not been authorized by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis to accept such papers or to take any action in regard thereto.

Very truly yours,
Smith, Remster, Hornbrook & Smith.

Gentlemen:

We have a copy of the proposed revised circular pertaining to the City of Indiana 4½% Gas Plant Revenue Bonds.

The third paragraph of the proposed circular contains a reference to the Indianapolis Gas Company. The statement is made that the City has not "as yet" assumed or adopted the former lease. The quoted words give rise to an implication that the City may have under consideration the adoption of such lease. The implication would be incorrect inasmuch as the City has definitely and unqualifiedly rejected an assignment of such lease and is not negotiating for a new lease. The further statement is made that "lease rentals" have been paid. This is not correct. Sums have been paid by the City equivalent to figures specified in the lease but such payments have been accompanied by the definite caution to the Indianapolis Gas Company that the payments were not lease rentals and were not made in recognition of the lease. The property of the Indianapolis Gas Company is being operated by the City of Indianapolis under an interim agreement pending final determination of questions raised between the City and the Indianapolis Gas Company and the parties interested in the property of the Company. The further statement is then made that "while litigation has developed relative to the City's position with respect to this lease, it is in our opinion not of direct significance as regards these Gas Plant Revenue Bonds which are adequately secured as hereinafter set forth". We recognize that such a statement represents your own opinion. We should have thought that rather than say that such litigation is not of direct significance, you would have said that such litigation has not directly affected these revenue bonds.

The statements you make as to the appraisal of the Indianapolis Gas Company property are based upon information obtained, as we understand, by an engineer of your selection and the proposed statement that such appraisal has been made by "an independent engineer" perhaps negatives any implication that the engineer was selected by the City. But we should not want any misunderstanding about this or any possibility of a representation by the City that the Indianapolis Gas property is of the value indicated by such independent engineer.

The new water gas set mentioned in the proposed circular has now been completed and is in operation.

The statement that the "coal requirements of Citizens Gas Company" have been purchased principally from the Milburn" etc. Company "the entire capital stock of which is owned by Citizens Gas Company" is incorrect in that the Citizens Gas Company no longer owns or operates the Milburn Company; also, while large quantities of coal from the Milburn Company have been used by Citizens Gas & Coke Utility, the name used by the City of Indianapolis in operating its municipal gas system, substantial quantities of coal are bought elsewhere due to the requirements for blending purposes.

We appreciate that the draft of circular has been submitted to us merely as a matter of courtesy on your part. It is your wish that such draft be submitted to the members of the Board of Directors for Utilities?

Very truly,

OBJECTIONS BY DEFENDANTS, CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS AND THE INDIVIDUAL DEFENDANTS WHO ARE MEMBERS OF THE BOARDS OF TRUSTEES AND DIRECTORS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF UTILITIES OF THE CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS TO CERTAIN SUBDIVISIONS OF THE STIPULATION IN THIS CAUSE AND TO CERTAIN EXHIBITS THERETO ATTACHED AND THEREIN IDENTIFIED.

The defendants, City of Indianapolis and the individual defendants who are members of the Boards of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis hereby object to the introduction in evidence of each of the following parts and portions of the Stipulation signed by all the parties to this cause (the right to make such objection being reserved by the terms of such stipulation) and to certain exhibits thereto attached and referred to therein, upon the grounds stated as follows:

1. To subdivisions 7 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) and each of them of said Stipulation and to each of the following exhibits referred to or described in said subdivisions of said Stipulation or attached thereto: Exhibit D to plaintiff's bill of complaint in Cause No. 1844, Exhibit E to plaintiffs' bill of complaint in Cause No. 1950, Exhibits 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 to said Stipulation, for each of the following reasons:

First. Said Public Service Commission in considering the lease here in question acted only in a legislative and administrative capacity and not in a judicial capacity.

Second. The Public Service Commission acts for the people of Indiana and in considering this lease, could under the law, consider it only as it affected the rights of the citizens served by the utility companies and had no power or authority to determine the judicial question of the validity of such lease as between the parties.

Third. Inasmuch as the City was not a party to the lease, was not obligated to accept an assignment of it, did not accept an assignment of it, has not adopted it, 1469 has not recognized it as binding in any way, and has rejected an assignment thereof evidence as to approval of the lease by the Commission is inadmissible.

2. To subdivisions 9 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i) and (j) of said Stipulation and to each of the following exhibits referred to or described in said subdivisions of said Stipulation or attached thereto, viz.: Exhibits 13 and 14 to said Stipulation, Exhibit D to plaintiff's bill of complaint in Cause No. 1844, and Exhibit E in Cause No. 1950, and each of them, for each of the following reasons:

First. The City of Indianapolis was not a party to said judgment inasmuch as the plaintiff, Fishback, dismissed as to the City of Indianapolis as a party before any judgment was entered in said cause. Said judgment therefore cannot operate as an estoppel against these defendants.

Second. Under the statutes in effect at the time of the commencement of said action and continuously until the appeal of said Fishback was dismissed by the Supreme Court of Indiana no appeal could be taken from any order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana except from an order fixing rates or regulations, practices, acts or service, and said order of said Commission in approving said lease of September 30, 1913, was not appealable; that the action commenced and prosecuted by said Fishback in said Court of Marion County, Indiana, was not an appeal under a statute, but was a suit in equity to set aside and vacate in its entirety said order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana approving said lease of September 30, 1913; that the sole question which could lawfully be heard and determined by the court in such action was whether said order of the Public Service Commission was valid or invalid; that inasmuch as said Public Service Commission of Indiana could exercise no judicial power and had no authority to determine or adjudicate the validity of said lease, the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, in the case commenced and maintained by said Fishback could not adjudicate or determine the validity of said lease or its binding effect on the City of Indianapolis.

Third. The cause of action in the Fishback case and the cause of action in this case are essentially different in that in the Fishback case the sole question involved and which could have been litigated under the issues formed in that case was whether the administrative order of the Public Service Commission approving said lease was valid or invalid, whereas in this case the question involved is the binding effect of said lease on these defendants subsequent to September 9, 1935, on which date the gas plant and property formerly operated by said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis as Trustee was transferred to the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee. Inasmuch as the causes of action are different, the Fishback decree cannot be res adjudicata of any questions except those actually litigated therein; and none of the questions involved in this case was or could properly have been litigated in the Fishback case.

Fourth. At the date of the rendition of the judgment of the Marion Superior Court in the Fishback case 1470 and at the time Fishback's appeal was dismissed by the Supreme Court of Indiana there was not in effect in the State of Indiana any declaratory judgment statute and the Superior Court of Marion County was without power to determine or try questions which had not then arisen but which might arise in the future, that is to say, the binding effect of said lease of September 30, 1913, against these defendants, subsequent to the date of the transfer of the trust property to the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee.

Fifth. That in the joint demurrer filed by the Public Service Commission of Indiana, The Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis to the sixth paragraph of Fishback's amended complaint there appears the following:

"The lease set out in the complaint itself provides that if for any reason the lease should be held to be for too long a term, it shall be valid such length of time as a lease could lawfully be made."

That said Fishback case was heard and determined on the theory that whether said lease of September 30th, 1913 was valid for its entire term or not, the action of the Public Service Commission of Indiana in approving the same could not be vacated or set aside.

Sixth. That the estoppel of the Fishback case can only extend to facts as they were in issue at the time the judgment was rendered and cannot prevent a re-examination of even the same questions between the same parties where, in the interval, the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the parties thereto; that since the judgment and decree in the Fishback case was entered and rendered facts have occurred which occurred which alter the rights and relations of the parties hereto, towit: The transfer of the trust property to the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee on September 9, 1935, and the judgment and decree rendered in the Fishback case is therefore not a determination of the rights of the parties thereto as of this date.

Seventh. That in said Fishback case both the City of Indianapolis and The Indianapolis Gas Company were defendants, but on the pleadings in that case no issue was raised, heard or determined as between said defendants involving the validity of said lease of September 30, 1913, or its enforceability against the City or its property, and the City of Indianapolis was not a party to the final judgment.

Eighth. That in said Fishback case all of the defendants thereto were sued in their individual capacities and not as Trustees; that no issue was heard, determined or decided by the court and none raised by any pleading filed in said cause involving the existence of said Public Charitable Trust or the effect of that legal status upon the validity of said lease of September 30, 1913, as against the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee or upon the beneficiaries of said trust.

Ninth. That the plaintiffs in these cases assert an independent and not a derivative right of action; that 1471 neither these plaintiffs nor any bondholder of The Indianapolis Gas Company were parties in the Fishback case; that no decree entered in said cause could bind these plaintiffs who were not parties thereto or be effective as an estoppel against the City of Indianapolis or the Board of Directors or Trustees of Utilities for the City of Indianapolis in respect of an independent cause of action which is in no sense derivative.

Tenth. That it is now claimed by the plaintiffs in these cases that the City of Indianapolis is bound to pay the rent reserved and all other obligations of the lessee under said lease of September 30, 1913, not merely out of the revenues arising from the operation of said leased property or of said trust property, but even out of revenues raised by taxation; that no issue was ever raised in said case in respect of the liability of the City of Indianapolis to meet the obligations of said lease out of revenues raised by taxation or otherwise and there can be no estoppel against the City of Indianapolis in connection with the present determination of such asserted liability.

Eleventh. Evidence as to approval of the lease or of its validity as such is inadmissible against the City in the absence of evidence that the City was a party to the lease, or an assignee of it, or obligated to accept an assignment of it, or that the City adopted or recognized the lease as binding upon it.

3. To subdivisions 13 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j) and (k) of said Stipulation and each of them and to each of the following exhibits referred to or described in said subdivisions of said Stipulation or attached thereto, viz.: Exhibits 30, 31 and 32 to said Stipulation, for each of the following reasons:

First. Neither The Indianapolis Gas Company, these plaintiffs, any trustee of the Mortgage Deed of Trust of The Indianapolis Gas Company, nor any stockholder of The Indianapolis Gas Company were parties plaintiff, defendant, or intervenors in the Todd case and these plaintiffs were not represented in that litigation by anyone. Inasmuch as the decree in the Todd case could not have operated as an adjudication against there plaintiffs, that the lease of September 30, 1913 was unenforceable against the City of Indianapolis or its property, the decree in that case cannot operate as an estoppel against the City of Indianapolis. Unless there is a mutuality of estoppel no decree is res adjudicata in subsequent litigation as against any of the parties in the former suit.

Second. The cause of action in the Todd case and in this case are essentially different. The plaintiff in this case is attempting to assert an independent right to have a declaration of the validity of said lease of September 30, 1913, an issue which was not and could not have been determined in the Todd case.

Third. The causes of action not being the same in the two cases, there can be no estoppel by way of judgment except as to the issues actually adjudicated by this court in the Todd case. The court in the Todd case did not hear, 1472 determine, or decide any of the issues involved in this case and no issues involving such questions were even presented to the court for determination, no evidence was heard in respect of said questions, and no decision rendered thereon.

Fourth. The only way in which the question of whether a public charitable trust has been created in the property of the Citizens Gas Company arose in the Todd case was because the plaintiff in that case was asserting that the franchise contract of August 30th, 1905, violated the rule against perpetuities, and the court held that inasmuch as a public charitable trust had been created, title to the trust res had vested when said franchise contract was executed and there was no violation of the rule. No issue involving the question of the validity of the lease of September 30, 1913, was tendered or decided in that case.

Fifth. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in question as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered and does not prevent an examination of the same questions even between the same parties, where by a later time the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the parties. At the time of the entry of the decree in the Todd case there was no existing controversy between The Indianapolis Gas Company, its stockholders or bondholders on the one side and these defendants, or any of them, on the other, with respect to the validity of said lease. The Todd case was heard and finally determined on May 29, 1930. The facts and circumstances have altered and changed since the date of the decree in the Todd case by reason of the transfer of the trust property on September 9, 1935, to the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee and because of the fact that shortly before the time of such transfer and in, to wit: July, 1935, the first indication of a controversy arose as to the binding effect of said lease on the City of Indianapolis.

Sixth. There was not in force at the date of the entry of the final decree in the Todd case any Federal Declaratory Judgment Act which empowered the court to decide any question involving any difference between The Indianipolis Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis with respect to the rights of the parties under said lease of September 30, 1913, prior to a refusal upon the part of the City of Indianapolis to be bound by the terms of said lease; no such refusal had occurred and at the time of the Todd decree, the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis was regularly and promptly making, as and when due, the payments required by said lease, and had not asserted that it was not liable thereunder, or in any manner refused to comply with the terms of said lease.

Seventh. It is now claimed by the plaintiffs in these cases that the City of Indianapolis is bound to pay the rent reserved and to perform all other obligations of the lessee under the terms of said lease of September 30, 1913, not merely out of the revenues arising from the operations of said leased property or of said trust property, but also out of public revenues raised by taxation. No issue was raised in the Todd case in respect of the liability of the City of Indianapolis to meet the obligations of said lease out of revenue raised by taxa-1473 tion or otherwise and there can be no estoppel against the City of Indianapolis in connection with the present determination of such asserted liability.

Eighth. There has been no showing that the City was either a party to the lease, or was obligated to accept an assignment of it, or did accept an assignment of it, or adopted it, or recognized it as binding in any respect.

4. To subdivisions 14 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i) and (j) and each of them and to each of the following exhibits referred to or described in said subdivisions of said Stipulation or attached thereto, viz.: Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38, 39 and 40, to said Stipulation, for each of the following reasons:

First. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in issue as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered and does not prevent a re-examination of the same questions between the same parties where in the interval the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the parties. The Williams case was heard, tried and determined prior to September 9, 1935, and the facts and circumstances have been altered and changed since the date of said adjudication by reason of the transfer of the property of the trust on said last named date to the City of Indianapolis as Successor Trustee.

Second. The cause of action involved in the Williams case was different from that involved in these cases in that a taxpayer of the City of Indianapolis there attempted to procure a determination of the invalidity of said lease on the ground that the execution of the same violated the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Indiana and that the execution of the same had been obtained as the result of a conspiracy: that none of the questions involved in this cause was actually litigated or determined by the Court in said case. Inasmuch as the causes of action in the two cases are not the same it is only matters which were actually determined and litigated in the Williams case which could bind any of the parties thereto and the judgment in that case is therefore not res adjudicata on the questions here involved.

Third. That the cause of action attempted to be asserted in these cases is an independent one and is not in any sense derived from the rights of The Indianapolis

Gas Company. Inasmuch as this is not a derivative cause of action, it is an essentially different cause of action from that involved in the Williams case and, inasmuch as the validity of the lease of September 30, 1913, was not challenged on the grounds now asserted by these defendants, the decree in that case is not res adjudicata of any question here involved.

Fourth. In the Williams case said The Indianapolis Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis were co-defendants. The causes of action in the Williams case and in this case are different. No issue was presented for determination or was adjudicated in said Williams case as between the co-defendants thereto, and under such circumstances the estoppel of the Williams judgment 1474 is applicable only as between those who were adverse parties in that case.

Fifth. That it is now claimed by the plaintiff in this case that the City of Indianapolis is bound to pay the rent reserved and all other obligations of the lessee under said lease of September 30, 1913, not merely out of the revenues arising from the operation of said leased property or of said trust property, but also out of revenues raised by taxation; that no issue was ever raised in the Williams case in respect of the liability of the City of Indianapolis to meet the obligations of said lease out of revenues raised by taxation or otherwise and there can be no estoppel against the City of Indianapolis in connection with the present determination of such asserted liability.

Sixth. No evidence as to judicial recognition or approval of the validity of the lease as such is admissible against the City in the absence of a showing that the City was a party to the lease, or assignee, or obligated to accept an assignment thereof, or adopted it, or recognized its validity.

5. To subdivision 15 (c) and to Exhibit "B" attached to the answer and counterclaim of defendants, the City of Indianapolis, and its Trustees and Directors for Utilities for each of the following reasons:

First. A city cannot be estopped expressly. It follows it cannot be estopped impliedly or in a quasi manner. Furthermore such circular has no probative force since it would not tend to prove or disprove any of the issues in this cause.

Second. Such admission to be admissible must be an admission of fact. In the instant case to have probative value it would have to be one of law, namely that the lease was valid.

Third. Such admission must be sufficiently certain without the aid of a forced or strained construction to bear out the interpretations placed on it. In the instant case it is not possible even by the most tortured construction of the language of the circular to put any words in the mouth of the city respecting the validity of this lease.

Fifth. The admission must have been made by a person having knowledge. This prospectus at the bottom of the front page recites: "The information contained herein has been carefully compiled from sources considered reliable and while not guaranteed as to completeness or accuracy, we believe it to be correct as of this date.

Sixth. Since the City of Indianapolis is the party against whom this prospectus is being offered in evidence, it must be shown that the statement was made, or the prospectus written, authorized or ratified by someone having the legal right and power to do so and that such statement was made or such prospectus written, authorized or ratified within the scope of such authority. No one in this case had that authority with the possible exception, (which is not conceded) of the Board of Directors for Utilities and unless it can be shown that they had such authority and did in a proper legal manner either write, authorize or 1475 ratify the prospectus, it is not admissible in evidence.

Seventh. The entire prospectus is irrelevant and immaterial to the issues in this cause for the reason that there is nothing in such prospectus relating to any statement by the City of Indianapolis in respect to the validity of such lease. It is not shown who issued the prospectus since no signatures appear on it, nor is there any indication as to who the author or publisher is.

Eighth. As to the City of Indianapolis the prospectus is pure hearsay as is borne out by the many statements on its face.

Ninth. There can be no showing that plaintiffs relied on this prospectus for revenue bonds in their purchase of Indianapolis Gas Company bonds.

Tenth. There has been no showing that the lease is binding on or enforceable against the City; no showing that the City was a party to the lease, an assignee of the lease, or obligated to accept an assignment thereof or obligated by reason of recognition or adoption of the lease.

6. To subdivisions 21 (a) and (b) and to each of the following exhibits referred to or described in said subdivisions of said stipulation or attached thereto: Exhibits 86 and 87 to said stipulation and Exhibit J attached to the Second Amendment and Supplement to Plaintiff's Bill of Complaint in Cause No. 1844 and to the Amendment and Supplement to Plaintiff's Bill of Complaint in Cause No. 1950, for each of the following reasons:

First. The Indemnity Agreement executed by the Board of Directors for Utilities on September 9, 1935, only purports to indemnify the Citizens Gas Company in respect of actions brought "on account of the conveyance, transfer and assignment of any or all of the property of the Company to said City." As the City on the same day and as a part of the same transaction refused to accept an assignment of said lease of September 30, 1913, the Indemnity Agreement by its own terms does not apply and was not intended to apply to the Lease of September 30, 1913.

Second. A municipal corporation cannot be estopped by the conduct of any of its officers. There is no statutory authority for the execution of this agreement if it be construed as an approval of the lease of September 30, 1913 (which it is not), but if so construed the agreement would be void and unenforceable.

Third. If this agreement be construed as an approval, express or implied, of the lease of September 30, 1913, it is void and unenforceable because in violation of the express provisions of the Indiana Statutes, particularly Sections 48-1507 and 84-7302 Burns' Indiana Statutes Annotated 1933, which require that no such contract shall be made for a period of more than 25 years and that such a contract to be valid must be approved by the Board 1476 of Public Works and the Common Council of the City of Indianapolis. Any contract attempted to be made in violation of those statutes is void and cannot be ratified.

"(City's Exhibit 30 is a typewritten statement offering various exhibits on behalf of plaintiff. Copies of this statement were furnished to the Court and counsel and the statement was read into the record just prior to the calling of the first witness, Franklin Vonnegut)."

335 And afterwards towit at the November Term of said Court, on the 7th day of April, 1939, before the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of said Court, the following further proceedings were had herein, towit: Entered Apr. 7, 1939.

Come now the parties by their respective counsel and the Court now makes its rulings upon the admissibility of certain exhibits offered in evidence at the trial of this cause on March 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 1939, the Court having reserved its rulings as to the admissibility of said exhibits at the time of said trial.

The objections to Plaintiff's Exhibit 135 are sustained, to which ruling plaintiff at the time excepts.

All other exhibits and evidence offered by plaintiff to which objections are pending or as to which the Court made no specific ruling at the time of said trial, including all the parts of the Stipulation of the parties (Plaintiff's Exhibit 1) which were offered by the plaintiff, are admitted and any objections thereto are overruled, to which ruling defendant, City of Indianapolis, excepts. As to plaintiff's offer of Paragraph 4 of the Stipulation of Facts in the case of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al., appearing on pages 192 and 193 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 2 for identification, said offer is considered as 336 an offer of the entire Stipulation and said entire Stipulation, appearing on pages 186 to 248, both inclusive, of Plaintiff's Exhibit 2 for identification, is admitted as Plaintiff's Exhibit 139. As to Plaintiff's Exhibit 89, being part of Section 18 of the answer of the City of Indianapolis, et al., in the case of Cotter, et al. vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al. (case No. 1192 on the docket of this Court), the offer is considered as an offer of the entire answer of the City of Indianapolis, et al., and said entire answer is admitted as Plaintiff's Exhibit 89.

All of the exhibits offered by plaintiff (except Plaintiff's Exhibit 135 which has been excluded as hereinbefore indicated) are hereby admitted and read in evidence.

All exhibits offered by the City of Indianapolis to which objections by plaintiff are pending are admitted and such objections are overruled, to which ruling plaintiff at the time excepts.

The motions of defendant City of Indianapolis to suppress the deposition of Robert E. Simond, taken in Chicago, and the deposition of Chester M. Clark and Joseph Edwards Baker, taken in New York, are overruled, to which ruling said defendant at the time excepts. All objections taken by any of the defendants to the evidence or exhibits offered by plaintiff from said depositions are overruled, to which ruling defendant, the City of Indianapolis, excepts; all objections taken by the plaintiff to any of the evidence or exhibits offered by the defendant City of Indianapolis from said depositions are overruled, to which ruling the plaintiff excepts; and all exhibits offered as part of any of said depositions are admitted and read in evidence, to which ruling the respective objecting parties at the time except.

337 The request of the City of Indianapolis for the production of certain correspondence passing between William R. Higgins, one of the attorneys for The Indianapolis Gas Company, and Baker, Hostetler, Sidlo & Patterson prior to May 14, 1936, is denied, and the claim of privilege asserted by The Indianapolis Gas Company in connection therewith is sustained, to which ruling defendant, the City of Indianapolis, at the time excepts.

338 (Further Entry for April 7, 1939.)

Parties file approval of exhibits, which is as follows:

Filed Apr. 7, 1939.

APPROVAL OF EXHIBITS.

We hereby agree that the attached papers may be marked as plaintiffs' exhibits 127 (3 pages), 128, 128-a, 128-b, 130, 131 and 132, and that photostatic copy of plaintiffs' exhibit 129 may be used in place of the original letter, and that the three letters with reference to the filing of briefs in the Circuit Court of Appeals which were heretofore produced after the trial may be marked as plaintiffs' exhibits 136, 137, and 138 and become part of the record in the above entitled causes, and be read in evidence. This stipulation is to supersede stipulation heretofore made on the same subject as it has now appeared that there were already exhibits bearing numbers 133, 134 and 135.

Dated April 6, 1939.

343 Now comes The Chase National Bank, Trustee, plaintiff in the above entitled cause, and respectfully submits and requests the adoption of the following proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

Proposed Findings of Fact.

(1) The Court hereby adopts the Stipulation of the parties offered in evidence as Plaintiffs' Exhibit 1 and each of the exhibits identified therein as part of these Findings of Fact, as though said Stipulation and each of the exhibits referred to therein were specifically set forth herein. Throughout these findings the parties and the documents will be described as they are described in said Stipulation. (PX 1.)

(2) Each of the exhibits from the record referred to in the following findings is incorporated herein and made a part hereof as if specifically set forth in these findings.

(3) There is complete diversity of citizenship in this cause between the plaintiff and all of the defendants. (Stip. 1, pp. 2-3.)

(4) This suit was brought at the request of holders and owners of $415,000 principal amount of the Bonds. (PX 125, 126; Stip. 3(d) p. 6.)

Note: For the convenience of the Court and the parties all references herein to the pleadings are, as in the brief, to the pleadings in the Trustee's case.

(5) There is now and has been at all times since this cause was filed a real and actual controversy between plaintiff, on the one side, and the defendants, and each of them, on the other, as to:

(a) The validity and binding effect of the Lease for its full term of ninety-nine years on said defendants, and each of them, and upon the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas.

(b) The rights of the plaintiff and the holders and owners of Indianapolis Gas Bonds (hereinafter called "Bondholders") and the obligations of said defendants, and each of them, under the Lease.

(c) Whether the Trustee of the Mortgage or the Bondholders or both are entitled to assert the rights under the Lease.

(6) The joint petition filed by Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas with the Public Service Commission on May 21, 1913, is correctly set forth on pages 3 and 4 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13 (the complaint in Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al.).

(7) The intervening petition of Frank S. Fishback filed with the Public Service Commission opposing 344 the approval of the proposed Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas is correctly set forth on pages 4 to 7 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13 (the complaint in Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al.).

(8) Following the approval by the Public Service Commission of the proposed Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas, Frank S. Fishback filed a petition for rehearing before the Public Service Commission (Bill, par. 8, admitted by all defendants), a true copy of which appears on pages 8 and 9 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13 (the complaint in Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al.).

(9) On November 28, 1913, the Public Service Commission of Indiana overruled Fishback's petition for rehearing. (Bill, par. 8, admitted by all defendants.)

(10) Citizens Gas took the Lease from Indianapolis Gas with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis. (PX 89, p. 85.)

(11) In all of the proceedings before the Public Service Commission of Indiana, upon the joint petition of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas, upon the intervening petition of the said Frank S. Fishback, and upon the petition for a rehearing filed by the said Frank S. Fishback, the defendant, the City of Indianapolis, was duly served with notice to appear and through its duly appointed and authorized counsel did in fact appear and participate therein. No objection by petition to said Commission or otherwise was ever made by said City of Indianapolis either to the execution of said Lease or to the orders made by said Commission, and said City has never, by any proceeding, act or suit, sought in any court to have set aside or vacated the determinations or orders of said Public Service Commission of Indiana, or to enjoin the enforcement thereof, or to prevent in any way such orders or determinations from being effective. (Bill, par. 8, admitted by all defendants.)

(12) Immediately after November 28, 1913, Citizens Gas took possession and control of the gas plant and system and other property of Indianapolis Gas described in the Lease and operated said plant and system as a unified part of its own plant and system continuously thereafter until September 9, 1935. (Crosier, R. 56-9.)

(13) At the time of the making of the Lease on September 30, 1913, the system of Indianapolis Gas had 383.15 miles of mains and the system of Citizens Gas had 184.52 miles of mains, and on the same date Citizens Gas had 11,165 meters in use and Indianapolis Gas had 41,541 meters in use. (PX 93, pp. 1-2.) At the same time a new battery of 41 modern coke ovens was just being completed at the Langsdale Avenue Plant of Indianapolis Gas and was turned over to Citizens Gas with the other leased property. (PX 93, p. 1.)

(14) In his complaint filed November 28, 1913, and the amendments thereto in the case of Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., Fishback was asserting his rights as a stockholder of Citizens Gas, a resident freeholder of Indianapolis, and a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas as original trustee, and the City as successor trustee of said public charitable trust. (PX 13, p. 2; PX 14, p. 4; Stip. 9(a) pp. 14-15.)

(15) In said case of Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., said Fishback attacked the Lease on the following grounds, among others (Bill, par. 9, admitted by all defendants; PX 14, p. 4):

(a) That Citizens Gas had no power to make such a Lease.

345 (b) That the City of Indianapolis had not consented to such Lease.

(c) That the Lease was improvident and burdensome from the point of view of Citizens Gas.

(d) That the Lease constituted a lien and incumbrance upon the property and earnings of Citizens Gas and thus impaired the obligation of the contract between the company, its stockholders, and the City.

(e) That the trustees, directors, and officers of Citizens Gas were not authorized to enter into a Lease for ninety-nine years.

(f) That the Lease would prevent the carrying out of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas and would prevent the City from taking over the Citizens Gas plant.

(16) Both the City and Citizens Gas opposed each of the contentions thus advanced by Fishback. (Stip. 9(b) and (c), p. 15.)

(17) Each of the contentions thus advanced by Fishback was adjudicated against him and in favor of the validity of said Lease. (Stip. 9(e), (h), (i). pp. 16, 17.)

(18) During the pendency of said Fishback case the City of Indianapolis, through its Board of Public Works, required extensions to be made in the lines and mains of Indianapolis Gas, as provided in subsection 6 of Section 27½ of the Lease, which provision had been inserted in said Lease at the instance of the City. (Bill, par. 9, p. 10; admitted by all defendants.)

(19) The position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in said Fishback case was a practical, contemporaneous construction of the existing contract between them, to the effect that Citizens Gas had the right to take the Lease of the Indianapolis Gas property for ninety-nine years, and that such Lease thereupon became part of the public charitable trust.

(20) In connection with the sale of its Indianapolis Gas Bonds to Blodget & Company, brokers who dealt in said Bonds, Citizens Gas represented to Blodget & Company and through Blodget & Company to the purchasing public that:

(a) Citizens Gas had a ninety-nine year Lease on the property of Indianapolis Gas;

(b) Said Lease for ninety-nine years had been approved by the Public Service Commission of Indiana;

(c) Citizens Gas guaranteed payment of the interest and the refunding of principal at maturity of said Indianapolis Gas Bonds;

(d) Citizens Gas had a monopoly on the gas business of Indianapolis.

Such representations appear more fully in Plaintiffs' Exhibits 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9 to the New York Deposition.

(21) During the period from 1915 to 1935, both inclusive, Citizens Gas, through publications in Poor's Manual of Public Utilities and Moody's Manual of Public Utilities, made the same representations as those contained in the preceding finding, as more fully shown by Plaintiffs' Exhibits 95A to 98A, inclusive, and 99 to 110, inclusive. (Hill, R. 164-5.) Poor's Manual of Public Utilities and Moody's Manual of Public Utilities are, and during said period from 1915 to 1935 were, standard works of reference customarily relied upon by brokers, bankers, and the investing public generally in acquiring information about securities. (Payne, R. 48-9; Jewett, R. 74-5.)

(22) On the basis of and relying upon the representations so made (see findings 20 and 21), Blodget & 346 Company purchased Indianapolis Gas Bonds from Citizens Gas and the investing public purchased said Bonds from Blodget & Company and generally upon the market, and holders of said Bonds continued to hold them.

(23) By reason of the wide circulation given to said representations (see Findings 20 and 21) over a long period of years, the City is charged with notice of such representations.

(23½) The representations made by Citizens Gas (see Findings 20 and 21) and the acquiescence therein by the City was a practical contemporaneous construction by Citizens Gas and the City of the existing contract between the parties, to the effect that Citizens Gas had the right to take and had taken the Lease of the Indianapolis Gas property for ninety-nine years, and that such Lease thereupon became part of the public charitable trust.

(24) During the period from 1913 to September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas, the City, and the residents and inhabitants of Indianapolis accepted and enjoyed the benefits resulting from the use of the Indianapolis Gas property under said ninety-nine year Lease and the protection thus given to the public charitable trust, and were relieved from the waste and expense of competition and duplication of facilities.

(25) By the resolution of its Board of Public Works, adopted March 20, 1929 (PX 22), the City indicated to Citizens Gas its acceptance of the outstanding offer from Citizens Gas to purchase all of the property of Citizens Gas, including the Lease from Indianapolis Gas, subject to all obligations of Citizens Gas.

(26) Chapter 78 of Indiana Acts of 1929 was prepared by the legal department and special counsel of the City of Indianapolis employed for the purpose of bringing about a transfer of the plant and property of Citizens Gas to the City. Said Chapter 78 was passed in the exact form in which it was prepared and submitted by said counsel for the City, without any change or amendment of any kind or character. (PX 31, p. 126 of PX 2.)

(27) Chapter 77 of Indiana Acts of 1929 was evidently, as its context discloses, prepared and passed for the purpose of authorizing the transfer of the plant and property of Citizens Gas, including the plant and property leased from Indianapolis Gas, to the City. (Stip. 23, p. 34.)

(28) In the cases of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Co., and others, and Cotter vs. Citizens Gas Co., and others, filed in this Court in 1929, both the City and Citizens Gas took the position by their pleadings filed therein that there was a valid existing ninety-nine year Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas and that such Lease had been made with the full consent and approval of the City. (PX 89, p. 85.)

(29) The position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in their pleadings in said Todd and Cotter cases was a practical contemporaneous construction of the existing contract between the parties and of the City's acceptance by its resolution of March 20, 1929 (PX 22), of the outstanding offer from Citizens Gas, to the effect that the City had agreed to take all of the Citizens Gas property, including the Indianapolis Gas Lease.

(30) In his complaint filed March 12, 1930, in the case of Williams, et al. vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., Williams sued on behalf of himself and all other inhabitants and taxpayers of Indianapolis as beneficiaries of the public charitable trust, was seeking to protect the rights of 347 the public charitable trust, and the City of Indianapolis was made a party defendant as the trustee of said public charitable trust. (PX 35; pp. 111, 113, 114, 221 of PX 3.)

(31) In his complaint filed March 12, 1930, Williams claimed (Bill, par. 14; PX 35, pp. 201, 214 of PX 3):

(a) That the Lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas was invalid.

(b) That the action of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease was unlawful.

(c) That the Lease was improvident from the standpoint of the lessee and was therefore burdensome upon the trust estate.

(d) That the Lease "was ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company."

(32) Citizens Gas and the City of Indianapolis defended said suit brought by Williams upon the following grounds, among others (PX 37, pp. 4 and 5; PX 135, pp. 10-13):

(a) That the decision of the Public Service Commission of Indiana approving said Lease was conclusive on the parties and could not be collaterally attacked.

(b) That after the lapse of seventeen years and the expenditure of many millions of dollars in reliance upon the validity of the Lease, all persons claiming through or under the lessee, including Williams, were precluded by laches from attacking the validity of the Lease for its full term of 99 years.

(33) In affirming the judgment of the Superior Court of Marion County in the Williams case, the Supreme Court of Indiana denied the contentions advanced by Williams (See Finding 31) and upheld the contentions advanced by Citizens Gas and the City (see Finding 32). (Stip. 14(i), p. 25; Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., et al., 206 Ind. 448; 188 N. E. 212.)

(34) The position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in the Williams case was a practical construction by them of the existing contract between them and of the City's acceptance by the resolution of March 20, 1929 (PX 22) of the outstanding offer from Citizens Gas, to the effect that the Lease was part of the public charitable trust for its full term of ninety-nine years, and that the City had agreed to take over all of the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease from Indianapolis Gas.

(35) In connection with the public offering of its Revenue Bonds the City represented:

(a) That said bonds were to be issued to obtain funds to take over "property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and/or in which it has an interest." (PX 47, p. 1.)

(b) That the City was about to take over "the property operated by Citizens Gas Company." (PX 47, p. 16.)

(c) That the payment of the bonds would be "secured by a charge upon all the revenue from the operation of all of the gas system owned and/or operated by the City of Indianapolis." (PX 47, p. 5.)

(d) That the City was about to secure a system which had enjoyed the exclusive right to supply gas to the inhabitants of Indianapolis. (PX 110, Chi. Dep., pp. 4-5.)

(e) That the system which the City was about to secure from Citizens Gas included property leased from Indianapolis Gas for a term of ninety-nine years, under a lease in which the lessee was obligated to pay the interest on the outstanding Mortgage Bonds and on any refunding bonds. (PX 110, Chi. Dep., pp. 4-5.)

348 (f) That the City would use all reasonable efforts to maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis and in Marion County. (PX 47, p. 16.)

(36) The necessary implication of the representations made by the City, in connection with the public offering of its Revenue Bonds (as set forth in Finding 35), was that the City was taking over all the property either owned or operated by Citizens Gas, including the property leased from Indianapolis Gas.

(37) The City authorized and approved the representations made in Plaintiff's Exhibits 102, 104 and 105 to the Chicago depositions, the Halsey-Stuart circular and newspaper advertisements, except those representations relating to the value of the Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas property. (PX 111-114, Chi. Dep.) Said newspaper advertisements were published in the papers and on the dates shown in Plaintiff's Exhibit 116, Chicago Deposition.

(38) Halsey, Stuart & Company, and Otis & Co. purchased the City's Revenue Bonds and said bonds were in turn purchased by the public in reliance upon the representations made by the City set forth in Finding 35 and the representations authorized by the City which appear in Plaintiffs' Exhibits 102, 104, 105.

(39) The representations authorized by and made by the City in connection with the sale of its Revenue Bonds were a practical construction by the City of its resolution of acceptance on March 20, 1929, and of its contract with Citizens Gas, to the effect that the City had agreed to take all of the Citizens Gas property, including the Indianapolis Gas Lease.

(40) During the months of July, August and September, 1935, the City caused various sums to be paid to the holders of the common stock, preferred stock and bonds of Citizens Gas, in satisfaction of their respective rights, and said payments were made by the City, and the entire assets of Citizens Gas were received by the City, with full knowledge:

(a) Of the ninety-nine year Lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas, and of the obligations of Citizens Gas under said Lease.

(b) Of the fact that, after the transfer of its property to the City, Citizens Gas would have no assets remaining with which to meet its obligations.

(41) On September 9, 1935 the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, accepted delivery from Citizens Gas (Sparks, R. 447-450) of:

(a) A deed of conveyance of real estate. (PX 55.)

(b) An instrument of transfer and assignment of personal property. (Ex. E to Bill in Cause 1844.)

(c) An assignment of lease assigning a lease to part of the Majestic Building. (PX 56.)

(42) On September 9, 1935 the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, accepted delivery from Citizens Gas of an assignment of lease (Ex. F to Bill in Cause 1844) assigning to the City the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas. (Sparks, R. 447-450.)

(43) On September 9, 1935 the City, acting through its Board of Directors for Utilities, caused three of the four instruments of conveyance received from Citizens Gas Company (to wit, Exs. E and F to the Bill in Cause 1844 and PX 55) to be filed for record with the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana. (R. 16-17.)

(44) On September 9, 1935 the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, took possession and control
349 of all property of Citizens Gas, including that under lease from Indianapolis Gas, and has operated said plant and system as one unified plant continuously from September 9, 1935 to the present time. (Crosier, R. 59.)

(45) Since taking possession of the property of Citizens Gas the City has negotiated with Indianapolis Gas for a revision or cancellation of the Lease. (PX 58, 66, 67, 75, 76.)

(46) By reason of the provisions of the Mortgage (Ex. A to Bill), including the after-acquired property clause therein, all rights of the lessor under the Lease (Ex. B to Bill) became and ever since have been a part of the property covered by the Mortgage.

(47) The provisions of said Lease requiring the lessee to pay the interest on the Bonds to the holders thereof were made for the benefit of the Bondholders.

(48) The provisions of said Lease requiring the lessee to perform all of the lessor's obligations under the Mortgage (except as to the payment of the principal amount of the Bonds) were made for the benefit of the Trustee and the Bondholders for whom it is Trustee.

(49) When the City took possession of the property of Citizens Gas, including that leased from Indianapolis Gas, on September 9, 1935, it made no arrangement or agreement with either the Trustee under the Mortgage or the Bondholders allowing it to take such possession, except as assignee of and subject to the provisions of the Lease originally made to Citizens Gas. Since September 9, 1935, the City has made no such arrangement or agreement with either the Trustee or the Bondholders, and neither the Trustee nor the Bondholders have consented to, acquiesced in, or ratified any arrangement or agreement permitting the City to take possession of and use the property of Indianapolis Gas, except as assignee of and subject to the provisions of the Lease.

(50) The property of Indianapolis Gas leased to Citizens Gas has become so merged with the Citizens Gas property that it is no longer practicable or economical to separate those properties or to operate either of them as independent or competing properties. (Crosier, R. 57-9.)

(51) On or about October 1, 1935 the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, paid the sum of $171,575, to be used in the payment of the coupons on Indianapolis Gas Bonds falling due October 1, 1935 and, on or about October 23, 1935, surrendered its 18 coupons maturing on October 1 1935, of the face value of $450.00, to the Trustee for cancellation, without the payment of any consideration therefor. (Yule, R. 109-110; PX 131.)

(52) At the time of the payment of the interest on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds by the City, on or about October 1, 1935, neither the Trustee under the Mortgage nor the Bondholders had any notice that such money was paid under any arrangement other than the acceptance of the Lease by the City. (Yule, 126-7.)

(53) Neither the City nor Indianapolis Gas gave any notice to the Trustee or the Bondholders that the City was denying its liability under the Lease, until November 7, 1935 and neither the Trustee nor the Bondholders had any knowledge that the City was denying its liability under the Lease until some time after the transfer of the Citizens Gas property to the City on September 9, 1935. (PX 116; Yule, R. 106; Beardsley, R. 181.)

(54) Neither the Trustee nor the Bondholders had any knowledge of the proposed execution of the agreement of

March 2, 1936 (Ex H to Bill in Cause 1844), or of the 350 fact that said agreement had been executed, until sometime after March 2, 1936, and neither the Trustee nor the Bondholders have in any way agreed to, acquiesced in or ratified said agreement.

(55) The necessary result of the agreement of March 2, 1936 (Ex. H to Bill in Cause 1844) was to bring about a default in the payment of interest on the Bonds, to depreciate the value of the outstanding Bonds, and to place the income derived from the operation of the mortgaged property beyond the reach of the Bondholders, and the fact that these results would necessarily follow from the execution and carrying out of the agreement was known to the City and Indianapolis Gas when the agreement was made.

(56) During the period since September 9, 1935, the City has paid (Yule, R. 111-126):

(a) All the State, county and municipal taxes on the property covered by the Lease becoming due after September 9, 1935;

(b) All the insurance premiums for insurance on the property covered by the Lease;

(c) All installments of Federal income taxes of Indianapolis Gas falling due between September 9, 1935 and December 31, 1936, on account of sums paid by either Citizens Gas or the City to Indianapolis Gas during the years 1934 and 1935;

(d) All installments of Indiana gross income tax of Indianapolis Gas falling due after September 9, 1935, to and including the payment of said tax due on April 15, 1936.

(57) During the period from September 9, 1935 to the present time the City has paid out various amounts for the maintenance of the Indianapolis Gas property covered by the Lease (Hill R. 168-170), but the Court reserves for future determination the question whether the City has adequately maintained said property or paid such amounts for maintenance as it was obligated to pay.

(58) During the period from September 9, 1935 to December 31, 1938, the City made various extensions and additions to the Indianapolis Gas property covered by said Lease at an aggregate cost exceeding $95,000. (Yule R. 129; PX 122.)

(59) Indianapolis Gas has no property of any sort except the following (Yule R. 107-109):

(a) $120,000 principal amount of its Bonds, which are pledged to secure a loan of $28,700 at the Indiana National Bank;

(b) Office furniture and equipment with an aggregate worth of less than $500;

(c) The property leased to Citizens Gas and now in the possession of the City;

(d) Any rights which Indianapolis Gas may have against either the City, or the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas, or Citizens Gas, or any one or more of them.

(60) The only consideration which the City gave for the property of Citizens Gas, other than its assumption of the liabilities and obligations of Citizens Gas, was paid by it directly to the Citizens Gas stockholders and bondholders and therefore, at no time since the transfer of its property to the City on September 9, 1935, has Citizens Gas had any property of any kind or description except such rights as it may have against either the City, or the property which was transferred to the City, or both.

(61) Neither the Bondholders who requested the Trustee to bring this suit nor Indianapolis Gas, nor any other person, firm or corporation, agreed to indemnify 351 the Trustee for its costs, attorneys' fees or expenses in bringing this suit.

(62) There has been no collusion between the Trustee and Indianapolis Gas in the bringing or prosecution of this suit.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

(1) This Court has jurisdiction of this cause on the ground of diversity of citizenship between the parties thereto.

(2) The plaintiff has no plain, complete, or adequate remedy at law and adequate relief can only be secured by the granting of equitable relief.

(3) This suit is brought by the Trustee pursuant to rights granted in the Mortgage and on behalf of the Bondholders.

(4) The Lease (Exhibit B) upon its approval by the Public Service Commission became and at all times thereafter was and still is a valid, binding, and effective Lease for the term of ninety-nine years between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas.

(5) The finding and order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana (Exhibit D to Bill in Cause 1844), approving the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas, is a binding and conclusive determination upon all parties to this case and upon the public charitable trust that the Lease was fair and reasonable and in the public interest.

(6) By reason of the position taken by Citizens Gas and the City in approving the proposed Lease and their failure to object to or raise any question about the validity of said Lease or the order of the Public Service Commission approving the same, said Citizens Gas and the City are

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(7) The adjudications of the Superior Court of Marion County in the case of Fishback vs. Public Service Commission, et al., are binding in the present case upon all parties who were parties to said cause.

(8) By reason of the position taken by Citizens Gas and the City in the case of Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., said Citizens Gas and City are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(9) The action of the City of Indianapolis through its Board of Public Works in requiring extensions to be made in the lines and mains of Indianapolis Gas in accordance with the provisions of the Lease was a formal acceptance and recognition of said Lease.

(10) In view of the representations made by Citizens Gas in the sale of Indianapolis Gas Bonds both the City and Citizens Gas are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

352 (b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(11) In view of the acceptance of the benefits of said ninety-nine year Lease by Citizens Gas, the City, and the inhabitants of Indianapolis for almost twenty-two years, Citizens Gas and the City are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(12) The resolution of the Board of Public Works of the City adopted March 20, 1929 (PX 22), was in acceptance by the City of the outstanding offer from Citizens Gas to purchase all of the property of Citizens Gas, including the Lease from Indianapolis Gas, subject to all obligations of Citizens Gas.

(13) By reason of the position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in the cases of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., and Cotter vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., the City and Citizens Gas are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(14) The judgment of the Superior Court of Marion County in Williams vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., is a binding and conclusive determination upon all parties to this case and upon the public charitable trust of the following matters:

(a) That Williams had the right to sue on behalf of the public charitable trust.

(b) That the Lease is a binding obligation of said public charitable trust for the full term of ninety-nine years.

(c) That the Lease is a binding obligation of Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City of Indianapolis as successor trustee for the full term of ninety-nine years.

(d) That the decision of the Public Service Commission approving said Lease is conclusive and cannot be collaterally attacked.

(e) That Williams and all other beneficiaries of said public charitable trust and the trustees of said trust are precluded by laches from attacking the validity of said Lease or its binding effect upon the public charitable trust or upon Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, or the City as successor trustee, for the full term of ninety-nine years.

(15) By reason of the position taker by the City and Citizens Gas in the case of Williams vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., the City and Citizens Gas are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

353 (16) By reason of the representations made by the City in connection with the sale of its Revenue Bonds the City is:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by its own laches from denying

that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(17) By the acceptance of the instruments of transfer and conveyance delivered to the City on September 9, 1935, which expressly recited that the conveyances were made subject to all legal obligations of Citizens Gas, the property so conveyed to the City has at all times remained subject to all obligations of Citizens Gas, including its obligations under the Indianapolis Gas Lease.

(18) By accepting and recording the Assignment of Lease (Ex. F in Cause 1844) and by taking possession of the property covered by the Lease so assigned, the City became obligated on all the covenants of said Lease, by privity of estate, and has remained and still is obligated on all the covenants of said Lease for its full term of 99 years.

(19) By reason of its taking possession of the Indianapolis Gas property and its continuous operation thereof since September 9, 1935, the City is:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by its own laches from denying that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(20) By reason of its taking possession of the Indianapolis Gas property, operating the same and receiving the income therefrom, the City has become liable under the Lease and is obligated to carry out all the terms and conditions thereof for its full term of 99 years.

(21) By reason of the provisions of the Mortgage (Exhibit A to Bill), including the after-acquired property clause therein, all rights of the lessor under the Lease (Exhibit B to Bill) became and ever since have been a part of the property covered by the Mortgage.

(22) The provisions of said Lease requiring the lessee to pay the interest on the Bonds to the holders thereof were made for the benefit of the Bondholders, and upon the execution and delivery of said Lease, the Bondholders became vested with a distinct and independent right to require the lessee and its successors and assigns to perform the lessee's obligation to pay the interest on the Bonds.

(23) The provisions of said Lease requiring the lessee to perform all of the lessor's obligations under the Mortgage (except as to the payment of the principal amount of the Bonds) were made for the benefit of the Trustee and the Bondholders for whom it is trustee, and said Trustee became vested with a distinct and independent right to require the lessee and its successors and assigns to perform all of the lessee's obligations and engagements, in so far as the same affect the rights of the Bondholders.

(24) Under the Indemnity Agreement (Exhibit J to Bill) the liability of the City to indemnify Citizens Gas accrues as soon as any liability is adjudicated against Citizens Gas.

(25) Under the Indemnity Agreement (Exhibit J to Bill) either the Trustee or the Bondholders or both, 354 upon securing a judgment against Citizens Gas, are entitled to have a judgment for the same amount entered against the City.

(26) The Lease of September 30, 1913, between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas and all obligations thereof are binding for the full term of ninety-nine years upon Indianapolis Gas, as lessor, Citizens Gas, as lessee, the City of Indianapolis, as successor trustee and assignee of the Lease, and upon the property conveyed to the City by Citizen Gas.

(27) Neither the Trustee nor the Bondholders in any way agreed to, acquiesced in, or ratified the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City and Indianapolis Gas. Said agreement of March 2, 1936, does not in any way alter or impair the rights of the Trustee or the Bondholders and does not in any way affect the liabilities or obligations of either the City, Citizens Gas, or Indianapolis Gas to the Trustee or the Bondholders.

(28) The question whether the Lease either was at the time it was made or now is onerous or burdensome is wholly immaterial to the determination of any issue in this cause now on trial, and the City is not entitled to defend against any of the obligations of the Lease on the ground that said Lease either was or is burdensome. It is therefore unnecessary to try or determine the issue presented by the City on that subject.

(29) By reason of the fact that the City took over all the assets of Citizens Gas and that whatever consideration was paid was given by it directly to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas, leaving Citizens Gas with no assets out of which to satisfy its obligations, the City is obligated to pay all the liabilities of Citizens Gas.

(30) In succeeding Citizens Gas as trustee of the public charitable trust the City accepted the trust property subject to all outstanding legal obligations of Citizens Gas and as successor trustee became liable for all obligations of Citizens Gas.

(31) By reason of

(A) The position taken by Citizens Gas and the City in approving the proposed Lease and their failure to object to said Lease or the order of the Public Service Commission approving said Lease,

(B) The position taken by Citizens Gas and the City in the case of Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al.;

(C) The representations made by Citizens Gas in the sale of Indianapolis Gas Bonds and the City's acquiescence therein;

(D) The acceptance of the benefits of the Lease by Citizens Gas, the City, and the inhabitants of Indianapolis for almost twenty-two years;

(E) The position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in the cases of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al., and Cotter vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al.;

(F) The position taken by the City and Citizens Gas in the case of Williams vs. Citizens Gas Co., et al.;

(G) The representations made by the City in connection with the sale of its Revenue Bonds;

(H) The taking possession of the Indianapolis Gas property by the City and its continuous operation thereof since September 9, 1935;

355 the City and Citizens Gas are:

(a) estopped from denying, and

(b) precluded by their own laches from denying that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(32) The plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the unpaid interest on the Bonds of Indianapolis Gas against

(a) Indianapolis Gas.

(b) Citizens Gas.

(c) The City.

(d) The property of the City transferred to it by Citizens Gas.

(33) The judgment to which plaintiff is entitled against said defendants and said property should include:

(a) The amount of all interest coupons falling due on and after October 1, 1936, to and including the date of judgment, being the sum of $172,025 falling due semi-annually on October 1 and April 1 of each year.

(b) Interest on unpaid interest at the rate of 6% per annum from the date when the respective coupons fell due to the date of judgment.

(c) The costs, attorneys' fees and expenses of the prosecution of this suit, the amount of such costs and expenses to be reserved for later determination after the conclusion of this litigation.

(34) The defendants herein and the property of the City transferred to it by Citizens Gas should be held liable for said judgments for interest, interest on interest, and the costs and expenses of the prosecution of this suit, in the following order:

First: The City of Indianapolis, and the property received by said City from Citizens Gas.

Second: The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

Third: The Indianapolis Gas Company.

(35) By reason of the fact that all sums on deposit with the Indiana National Bank as escrow agent have been derived from and are part of the proceeds of the City's operation of the property transferred, conveyed, and assigned to it by Citizens Gas and the property of Indianapolis Gas covered by the Lease (Stip. 20(a), p. 33), all of said funds in the hands of the Indiana National Bank are liable for and subject to the satisfaction of all obligations of Citizens Gas and of the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas.

(36) The fund now on deposit with the Indiana National Bank under the agreement of March 2, 1936, may be used by the City to discharge its obligations to the plaintiff herein, but no part of said fund should be distributed either to Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas or the City until the determination of the issues presented in this cause which are reserved for later hearing.

The City of Indianapolis and the individual defendants who are members of the Boards of Trustees and directors of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis submit for the Court's consideration and hereby request the adoption of the following findings of fact and conclusions of law in the above case:

SUGGESTED FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. Plaintiff (hereafter referred to as "Chase") is a corporation established and existing under and by virtue of the banking laws of the United States with its principal place of business located in the City of New York in the Sate of New York and is engaged in and authorized to engage in a general banking and trust business. It is a resident and citizen of the State of New York.

2. Each of the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company (hereafter referred to as "Indianapolis Gas") and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis (hereafter referred to as "Citizens Gas") is a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana with its principal place of business in the City of Indianapolis, State of Indiana, and is a citizen and resident of the State of Indiana.

3. The City of Indianapolis (hereafter referred to as "City") is a municipal corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana and is located in the Southern United States Judicial District, Indianapolis Division.

4. Defendants, Thomas D. Sheerin, A. Dallas Hitz, Edward W. Harris and Charles Rauh are members of the Board of Trustees for Utilities of the City and each of them is a citizen and resident of the City and of the State of Indiana.

5. Defendants, Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Donald J. Angus, Isaac E. Woodard, LeRoy J. Keach and John E. Ohleyer are members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City and each of them is a citizen and resident of the City and of the State of Indiana.

6. The amount in controversy in this cause, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds the sum or value of $3,000.

7. There are now issued and outstanding in the hands of the public, bonds of Indianapolis Gas secured by the mortgage hereafter described in the aggregate principal amount of $6,881,000 (which includes $120,000 and $18,000 principal amounts, respectively, of such bonds held by Indianapolis Gas and the City). Each of said bonds and the coupons attached thereto are in the form set forth in the mortgage, a copy of which, marked Exhibit "A" is attached to the bill of complaint in this case and incorporated into these Findings by reference.

8. The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company and Savings Bank of Baltimore are the owners and holders of the following amounts, respectively, of such Indianapolis Gas bonds, together with all interest coupons due on October 1, 1936, and thereafter attached thereto, viz.: $265,000, $150,000 and $163,000.

9. Massachusetts Mutual life Insurance Company purchased its bonds between March 13, 1925, and May, 1931; New England Mutual Life Insurance Company purchased its bonds between July 14, 1916, and August, 1931;

Savings Bank of Baltimore purchased its bonds during the years 1924, 1925, 1927 and 1928.

10. There is no evidence in this case that Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Savings Bank of Baltimore, or any other owner or holder of Indianapolis Gas bonds other than defendant City purchased any of their bonds at any time subsequent to August, 1931, except those purchased by Citizens Gas in 1932.

There is no evidence in this case that any present owner of Indianapolis Gas bonds purchased his or its bonds relying on any acts done or representations made by Citizens Gas or the City or any of their authorized officers or agents.

11. The last coupons attached to said Indianapolis Gas bonds which have been paid were those falling due April 1, 1936. When that interest was paid coupons were presented for payment by and payment was made to more than 940 individual and 210 corporate bondholders.

12. On October 1, 1902, Indianapolis Gas executed its mortgage deed of trust of which Chase is successor and sole trustee. A correct copy of said mortgage marked Exhibit A is attached to the bill of complaint in this cause and is by reference made a part of these findings. Said mortgage was given to secure the payment of principal and interest of bonds which were authorized to be issued in the total principal amount of $7,500,000. Said mortgage was duly recorded.

13. The bonds issued under Indianapolis Gas mortgage were in the denomination of $1,000 each payable on October 1, 1952.

The mortgage covers the entire operating property of Indianapolis Gas and contains provisions to secure the payment of such bonds and the ordinary covenants of a large corporate trust deed. The mortgage contains an after-acquired property clause and in addition to covering the physical property covers the rents, issues, income, tolls, and profits arising therefrom.

Subdivision 14 of the mortgage contains the following provisions:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows the 5th grammatical paragraph of Subdivision XIV of the Mortgage (Exhibit A to the bill of complaint, I. R. 46, lines 13-36))."

14. Citizens Gas was organized in 1906 under the general laws of Indiana providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies. Citizens Gas, although organized as a corporation for profit, was and always has been actually a quasi public corporation, its purposes and objects being fixed and controlled by a certain franchise and contract (granted and entered into on August 25, 1905, by and between the City and three individuals who were assignors of Citizens Gas) and other relevant trust instruments.

15. As a result of such franchise, contract and other relevant trust instruments a public charitable trust was created. The settlors, beneficiaries, trustees and trust res were as follows:

(a) The settlors were the public spirited citizens of Indianapolis who subscribed for stock of Citizens Gas;

(b) The beneficiaries of the trust were the then and future gas users of Indianapolis;

(c) The initial trustee was Citizens Gas with a definitely fixed and limited term of trusteeship, viz.: 25 years and as soon thereafter as the property of the trust could be conveyed to the successor trustee;

(d) The City was the successor trustee;

(e) The trust res was the property and plant of Citizens Gas, being the property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Company.

16. The franchise contract creating the public charitable trust referred to in the last preceding finding requires the individual grantees to organize an Indiana corporation to which the franchise should be assigned and whose Articles of Incorporation should provide as follows:

(a) The capital stock to be not less than $1,000,000 to be divided into shares of $25 each;

(b) No increase of the capital stock shall be made unless the new stock shall be sold at public auction;

(c) The Company shall make and publish a semi-annual public statement of its affairs and the City Controller shall have the right to examine its books and the City Engineer its plant and property;

(d) The entire capital stock shall be placed in the hands of five trustees, one of whom shall be nominated by the Mayor and the capital stock shall be voted as a unit in the selection of directors. Any vacancy occurring on the Board shall be filled by the remaining directors except if a vacancy is created in the case of the member of the Board appointed by the Major it shall be filed by him;

(e) The voting trustees shall issue to each subscriber to the capital stock a beneficial certificate which shall entitle him to receive dividends at a rate not exceeding ten per cent per annum;

(f) The earnings of the Company shall be used in the following order:

First. To the payment of maturing debts and operating expenses;

Second. To the payment of dividends at the rate of ten per cent per annum; and Third. In providing for extensions and betterments ordered by the Board of Public Works.

Fourth. The excess to the payment in whole or part of the amounts subscribed for stock.

(g) The franchise provides

* * * * * *

"(Here follows paragraph 1(g) of the Franchise Contract of August 25, 1905 (part of Exhibit C to the bill of complaint, I R. 84, lines 13-26))."

(Inserted pursuant to Stipulation, filed Nov. 22, 1939.)

(h) The business and prudential affairs are to be managed by a Board of nine Directors elected annually.

(i) Subdivision 2 of the franchise reads as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows paragraph 1(i) of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 84-85))."

(j) The company to be organized shall secure, acquire or construct and put in operation a fuel gas plant with not less than 100 miles of mains within eighteen months from the sale of the Consumers Gas Trust Company mains then pending and failing therein shall forfeit all rights hereunder, provided that the Board of Public Works may at any time after the sale of the Consumers Gas Trust Company mains require the individual grantees or their assigns to file a bond in the penalty of $25,000 conditioned for the performance of the contract and the acquisition or construction of such fuel gas plant;

(k) The grantees and their assigns are to hold the city harmless from any damages occasioned by the construction of mains and there are elaborate provisions covering the doing of work in the streets, the supervision of that work, the construction of mains and the quality of gas to be furnished;

(l) The grantees agreed never to charge the consumer in excess of sixty cents per 1,000 cubic feet of gas and it is provided that if the price exceeds sixty cents the franchise becomes void and the city shall have the right to acquire said plant as upon the termination of the franchise period;

(m) There are also elaborate provisions for extensions of gas lines upon order of the Board of Public Works, the installation of meters, the testing of meters and the like;

(n) Subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the franchise read as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follow subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 93-94))."

17. The Articles of Incorporation adopted by Citizens Gas contain the essential provisions required by the Franchise Contract. Subdivision 7 of such Articles reads as follows:

"Any member of the Board of Trustees may be removed by the Marion Circuit Court upon the showing that said trustee is an employee or holder of any of the securities or capital stock of or delivering gas to consumer residing in, or in the vicinity of the city of Indianapolis, or for any corrupt practice or any misconduct which said court may deem detrimental to the interests of said company. Removal from the city of Indianapolis shall, ipso facto, vacate the office of any trustee."

18. There are no provisions in the franchise contract, the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas or its by-laws authorizing the issuance of preferred stock or the execution of any mortgage, except that a mortgage shall be executed at the time of the transfer of the property to the City, if necessary, to pay the obligations and stock of Citizens Gas. There is no provision in any of the trust instruments authorizing Citizens Gas to become the Lessee of a competing gas property.

19. On September 30, 1913, Indianapolis Gas executed and delivered to Citizens Gas a certain written instrument of lease (hereafter called "Lease"). A correct copy of said lease marked Exhibit "B" is attached to the bill of complaint in this case and is by reference made a part of these Findings. All the property leased by Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas was covered by and included in Indianapolis Gas mortgage. The trust res did not include any part of the property of Indianapolis Gas or any lease on any part of such property.

20. The lease contains the following provisions:

(a) The entire operating plant of Indianapolis Gas is leased to Citizens Gas for a period of 99 years from the 1st day of October, 1913.

Subdivision 32 of the lease contains the following provision affecting the term:

"In event it should be determined by a court of final jurisdiction that the contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of the term created, and that such term is in excess of the authority of either party hereto to contract, then this lease shall nevertheless be binding upon the parties hereto for the longest term for which the parties hereto might lawfully contract."

(b) Subdivision 1 of the lease reads, in part, as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows all of the first paragraph of subdivision 1 of the Lease except the last sentence thereof (Exhibit B to the bill of complaint, I R. 55-56))."

(c) The right is given to the Lessee to sell worn or damaged property and to procure a release of such property from the lien of Indianapolis Gas mortgage;

(d) The rent provided for in the lease is the payment of $120,000 a year, which amounts to six per cent dividends on the outstanding stock of Citizens Gas and, in addition, five per cent interest on all outstanding bonds.

When the lease was executed there were outstanding $4,833,000 of bonds and at the present time there are outstanding $6,881,000.

It is further provided that when the maximum price of gas to general consumers shall be fixed at a sum more than forty-five and not more than fifty cents per 1,000 cubic feet the rent shall be increased $10,000 a year and when such price of gas shall be fixed at a sum not more than forty-five cents the increased annual rental shall be $15,000 instead of $10,000.

(e) Provision is made for the issuance of additional bonds to reimburse Lessee for expenditures made in betterments and extensions to the leased plant which can be drawn down by the Lessee to the extent of eighty-five (85%) per cent of sums so expended.

(f) The Lessee agrees to refund the mortgage debt during the entire period of the lease and if the bonds are sold at a discount to pay the Lessor the difference in cash and if sold at a premium to retain such premium.

(g) An inventory was made of the personal property and at the termination of the lease Lessee agrees to deliver to the Lessor usable merchandise of like value or to pay the Lessor in money the difference between the value of the property returned and the total value of the inventory.

(h) It is agreed that Lessee will do everything necessary to preserve its right to do business in the city. There then appears the following provision:

"That it will so far as the same may be necessary to that end, secure new franchises from time to time from the city of Indianapolis or other public authorities having power to grant said franchises to do business in the city of Indianapolis. That at or before the termination of the corporate life of the lessee, the lessee will so far as it is legally able so to do, either extend its corporate life or cause a new corporation to be formed to which it will transfer all its then property and assets and cause said new company expressly to assume all the obligations of this lease. And the like duty shall be assumed by all successive companies acquiring said property as such successors in title. All of which agreements however are expressly subject to the rights now held by the city of Indianapolis under the terms of the franchise granted to the lessee by said city."

(i) In addition to the agreed rental Lessee agrees to pay all taxes, general and special, ordinary and extraordinary, of every nature and description, not only upon the property but upon the rent reserved so far as such income constitutes the basis for an income tax.

(j) The provisions in respect of maintenance are as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows the first grammatical paragraph of subdivision 15 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 64))." (Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

(k) The right of the Lessor to surrender its existing franchise and accept an indeterminate permit is not to be abridged by the execution of the lease.

(l) Lessee also covenants to insure the leased property but may provide protection against loss by fire by the establishment of an insurance fund.

(m) Lessee agrees to operate the plant leased and to perform all grants to Lessor or contracts by it with the state or any municipal subdivision.

(n) Subdivision 22 of the lease reads as follows:

* * * * * *

(o) Upon the approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission, Indianapolis Gas shall file a declaration of a surrender of its franchise and state therein that it desires to receive in lieu thereof by operation of law an indeterminate permit.

(p) That in valuations for rate-making purposes only property actually used and useful shall be included in the rate base and unnecessary duplications of plant shall not be included.

(q) The power to regulate rates remains in the Public Service Commission and while this lease is in force Citizens Gas will permit regulation by the Commission.

(r) Lessee binds itself to extend the mains of the combined plants to the extent of at least three miles in any one year. In addition to these minimum requirements Lessee agrees to comply with any orders for extensions made by competent authority.

(s) A schedule of rates is set forth in the lease.

(t) There is a provision for arbitration of disputes.

21. On September 30, 1913, the property of Indianapolis Gas included a plant for making and distributing gas to consumers in the City, and about 375 miles of mains located in the streets and alleys of the City which mains were connected with meters of more than 41,000 customers who were served thereby.

22. The City is not named as a party obligated by the lease.

23. No ordinance or resolution was ever at any time adopted by the Common Council or the Board of Public Works of the City authorizing the execution of the lease or ratifying it, or agreeing to be bound by its terms.

24. No action has ever been taken at any time by the Boards of Trustees or Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City authorizing the acceptance of an assignment of said lease, ratifying the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms.

25. The City took over the property of Citizens Gas on September 9, 1935, as successor trustee. More than a month prior to said date the City advised Citizens Gas that it would decline to accept an assignment of the lease and for that reason an assignment was made by Citizens Gas in a separate written instrument and was rejected by the City. The assignment made by Citizens Gas of the lease was physically delivered to the City and recorded and at the same time the City, through the Board of Directors for Utilities, adopted resolutions declining to accept an assignment of the lease, caused these resolutions to be recorded in the Recorder's Office of Marion County, Indiana, and a duly certified copy of them to be served on Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas.

26. Citizens Gas operated under the terms of said franchise contract and the amendments thereto from the date of the assignment thereof by the individuals to whom the franchise had originally been granted until August 27, 1921, at which time, pursuant to the terms of an Indiana statute authorizing it to do so, it filed with the Public Service Commission of Indiana its declaration of surrender of said franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit with the result that from August 27, 1921, until September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas operated as a public utility under an indeterminate permit. Said surrender and the acceptance of said indeterminate permit did not have the effect of modifying or rendering nugatory the terms of said franchise contract insofar as they created a public charitable trust and defined the terms and conditions thereof and the rights, duties and liabilities of Citizens Gas as original trustee, of the City as successor trustee and of the gas users of Indianapolis as the beneficiaries of said trust.

27. On September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas transferred its gas producing and distributing plant and system to the City and since that time City has operated said gas producing and distributing plant and system. Since September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas has not been engaged in any business of any nature whatsoever.

28. On or about May 21, 1913, Indianapolis Gas, Lessor, and Citizens Gas, Lessee, jointly submitted a tentative form of lease to the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana and jointly petitioned said Commission to adopt and approve the terms and conditions set forth in said form of lease and to authorize them to enter into and execute said lease. A correct copy of the finding and order of said Commission with respect to said lease is attached to the bill of complaint in this cause marked Exhibit D and is by reference made a part of these findings.

29. It appears in the finding and order of the Public Service Commission last referred to that Joseph B. Kealing, Corporation Counsel of the City, appeared for the City in said proceeding, but there is no evidence in this case that the Corporation Counsel for the City had any power or authority to bind the City in respect of said lease or the approval of the lease by said Commission.

30. Newton Todd, a beneficial certificate holder of Citizens Gas commenced an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana on April 30, 1929. The only defendants in that case were Citizens Gas, the individuals who were voting trustees of its common stock, the City, the Mayor, Clerk and Members of the Board of Public Works of the City.

Neither Indianapolis Gas, Chase nor any predecessor trustee under Indianapolis Gas mortgage, nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas was a party plaintiff, a party defendant, or an intervenor in said cause.

No pleading was filed in the Todd case asserting either the validity or invalidity of the lease.

The issues tendered by the bill in the Todd case were:

(a) That the original agreement between the City and Citizens Gas contained in the franchise contract of 1905 was abrogated and annulled when Citizens Gas surrendered the franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit.

(b) That the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit created a new contract between the State and Citizens Gas, one of the terms of which was that the City should have the right to acquire the property of Citizens Gas at a value to be determined by the Public Service Commission.

(c) That an Act of the Indiana General Assembly of 1929 purporting to legalize all of the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas and particularly those in respect of the mode of acquiring the plant and property of Citizens Gas by the City, resulted in an impairment of the obligations of the contract above referred to in violation of the Constitutions of Indiana and of the United States.

(d) That the franchise contract of 1905 merely gave an option to the City to purchase the property of the Citizens Gas and this resulted in a violation of the rule against perpetuities.

The issues involved in the present case are wholly different from those involved in the Todd case. The question of the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease was neither involved nor determined in the Todd case and could not have been determined under the issues presented to this court in that case.

The Todd case was finally disposed of on May 18, 1931, when the Supreme Court of the United States denied Todd's application for a writ of certiorari and that no controversy had ever arisen or existed in connection with the validity or invalidity of the lease prior to July, 1935. Until the transfer of the trust res by Citizens Gas to the City, all payments provided for by the terms of said lease had been made as required therein and there had been no breach or threatened breach by Citizens Gas of its covenants under said lease.

31. Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas filed with the Public Service Commission of Indiana a joint petition asking for the approval of the lease. One Frank S. Fishback intervened, raised certain objections to the approval of the lease and after the Commission had entered an order approving the same filed a petition for a rehearing which was overruled.

Neither Chase nor any predecessor trustee of Indianapolis Gas, nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas, was a party to such proceedings.

When the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved the execution of the lease no claim had been asserted that the franchise contract of 1905 and other related papers resulted in the creation of a public charitable trust and at the time the Commission's approval was given to the lease it was 17 years before the date when a transfer of the trust property was required to be made to the City. Fishback did not intervene or resist the approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission as the beneficiary of a public charitable trust.

32. On November 28, 1913, Fishback commenced an action in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, against the Public Service Commission of Indiana, Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, and the City to vacate and set aside the order approving the execution of the lease.

Fishback sued as a stockholder of Citizens Gas and a resident freeholder of the City and not as a beneficiary of a public charitable trust.

Citizens Gas and the City were not made parties defendant as the initial and successor trustees of a public charitable trust. There was no averment in any of the ten paragraphs of complaint filed by Fishback that a public charitable trust had been created by the franchise contract of 1905.

Fishback sought to set aside the Commission's order on the following grounds:

(a) That the rentals fixed in the lease were excessive and that their payment by the Citizens Gas would result in a waste and misapplication of its funds and its inability to pay dividends due its stockholders.

(b) That the Citizens Gas was without power to enter into the lease without the consent of the owners of three-fourths (¾) in amount of its capital stock, which consents had not been obtained.

(c) That the City had not given its consent to such lease, had not joined in the execution thereof, and had granted to Citizens Gas no right to operate the property of Indianapolis Gas.

(d) That the findings and order of the Public Service Commission were not sustained by sufficient evidence and were contrary to law.

(e) That Citizens Gas had no power to enter into the agreement contained in the lease permitting the Public Service Commission to fix rates at which it should sell gas.

(f) That the obligation assumed by the Citizens Gas under the terms of said lease to pay interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock of Indianapolis Gas impaired the obligation of the contract existing between the Citizens Gas and plaintiff and other stockholders of that company in that it prevented Citizens Gas from executing a mortgage at the end of the franchise term in order to pay the stockholders of that company the par value of their stock and accumulated dividends thereon.

Prior to the entry of final judgment in the Fishback case, Fishback dismissed the City as a party defendant and the following order book entry was made in connection with such dismissal:

"Come now the parties and the plaintiff now dismisses the action, as against the defendant City of Indianapolis, upon which dismissal the court now enters judgment for costs against the plaintiff."

Fishback elected to stand upon his complaint and to abide the ruling of the court upon demurrers which had been sustained to each paragraph of said complaint and judgment was rendered against him.

The City was not a party to the judgment rendered in the cause.

Neither Chase nor any other trustee under Indianapolis Gas mortgage nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas was a party plaintiff, defendant or intervenor in the Fishback case.

Fishback prayed an appeal from the decree of the Marion Superior Court to the Supreme Court of Indiana which dismissed the appeal because it was not perfected in time.

The first Indiana Declaratory Judgment Act became effective on May 16, 1927. At the date of the final disposition of the Fishback case there was neither an existing controversy nor the ripening seeds of such controversy between Indianapolis Gas, the trustees of its mortgage or its bondholders and the City as to the enforceability of the lease against the City or the trust property.

Up to the date when Fishback dismissed his cause against the City no issue had been presented between the City and Indianapolis Gas as to the validity of the lease.

There was neither in issue nor decided by the Court in the Fishback case any question as to the validity or enforceability against the City of the lease.

The Fishback case was tried and decided on the theory that whether the lease was valid for its entire term or not the action of the Public Service Commission of Indiana in approving the same could not be vacated or set aside.

Since the determination of the Fishback case new facts have occurred which alter the legal rights and relations of the parties thereto, viz.: the transfer of the trust res to the City as successor trustee on September 9, 1935.

After the City had been dismissed as a party defendant in said cause it was not again made a party thereto.

33. On May 12, 1930, Allen G. Williams as a resident and taxpayer of the City on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated commenced an action in which Citizens Gas, its voting trustees and directors, Indianapolis Gas, the then trustees under Indianapolis Gas mortgage, the Mayor, City Clerk, Board of Public Works, Boards of Trustees and Directors for the Department of Utilities of the City and the Public Service Commission of Indiana were defendants. A demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint was filed by the Public Service Commission, another by Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees and a third by the remaining defendants. The demurrers so filed were sustained, judgment was rendered against Williams and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana and affirmed.

Neither a controversy nor the ripening seed of such a controversy existed at any time prior to the date of the final disposition of the Williams case between the City and Indianapolis Gas or its mortgage trustees or bondholders as to the enforceablity against the City of the lease. The transfer of the trust res from Citizens Gas to the City as successor trustee was not made until long after the final disposition of the Williams case.

In the Williams case plaintiff attempted to procure a determination of the invalidity of the lease on the ground that execution of the lease violated the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Indiana and had been obtained as the result of conspiracy. None of the questions involved in this case were actually litigated in the Williams case nor could such questions have been litigated under the issues in that case.

No issue was made between Indianapolis Gas, its mortgage trustees or its bondholders and the City or the Boards of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Utilities in connection with the enforceability of said lease against the City, although the City had pointed out in a joint motion filed by it and Citizens Gas to strike out parts of plaintiffs' complaint that the validity of the public charitable trust was in nowise affected by the validity of such lease.

It was stated in said motion:

"If the lease is valid the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as the property owned by the Citizens Gas Company in its own right. If for any reason the lease is invalid it will fall outside the scope of the trust."

34. At the date of the execution and delivery of the lease $4,833,000 total face amount of Indianapolis Gas Bonds were outstanding. Between June 22, 1914, and February 11, 1932, upon the request of Indianapolis Gas, the mortgage trustees authenticated and delivered to Indianapolis Gas additional bonds in the total principal amount of $2,048,000. Pursuant to the provisions of the lease Indianapolis Gas, in turn, delivered $1,971,000 principal amount of said additional bonds to Citizens Gas for the purpose of reimbursing Citizens Gas for eighty-five per cent. (85%) of its capital expenditures on account of extensions and betterments to the plant and system of Indianapolis Gas made and paid for by Citizens Gas. As a result of such expenditures for extensions and betterments and the reimbursement by issuance of bonds, citizens Gas has expended for additions and betterments to the plant of Indianapolis Gas approximately $200,000 for which it has received no reimbursement. All additions and betterments to the plant of Indianapolis Gas for which bonds were issued were made with its consent and under the terms of said lease said additions and betterments became and are the property of Indianapolis Gas. All of said bonds in the principal amount of $1,971,000 were sold by Citizens Gas except bonds in the principal amount of $18,000 which were retained by it. The proceeds of the bonds sold by Citizens Gas were received and used by it. It was many years after the execution of the lease before Chase received a copy of the same and in certifying such additional bonds as Chase certified, above referred to in this subdivision, Chase did not rely upon the validity or enforceability of said lease against the City and did not consider the lease as of any importance as security given to Chase under the terms of the mortgage.

There is no proof that any predecessor trustee of Chase which certified bonds either knew of the existence of the lease or relied upon it as a basis for a certification of any Indianapolis Gas bonds.

35. Citizens Gas operated the plant and property of Indianapolis Gas under said lease from November 28, 1913, until September 9, 1935. From October 2, 1913, until September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas from time to time duly paid the interest on the outstanding Indianapolis Gas bonds by making payment thereof to the holders of the bonds either at the office of the trustee or directly to such holders. During that period Citizens Gas paid all the rentals payable in cash under the terms of the lease and also paid all the taxes required to be paid by the Lessee under the terms of the lease; that the total payments so made by Citizens Gas are shown in Exhibit 20 attached to the Stipulation in this case, which exhibit, by reference, is made a part of and incorporated into these Findings.

That for the five (5) year period immediately preceding September 9, 1935, the aggregate payments made by Citizens Gas on account of the lease were approximately $600,000 annually.

36. From the period of its organization in 1906 to June 30, 1935, Citizens Gas paid dividends to the holders of its common stock at the rate of ten per cent per annum. On September 9, 1935, when Citizens Gas conveyed, transferred and assigned its property to the City it turned over a sum of approximately $411,000 in cash or current funds to the City.

37. On March 20, 1929, the City, through its Board of Public Works, adopted a resolution, a correct copy of which marked Exhibit 22 is attached to the Stipulation in this case and is by reference made a part of these findings. On April 3, 1929, the Directors of Citizens Gas unanimously adopted two resolutions, copies of which, marked Exhibits 23 and 24, are attached to the Stipulation in this case and by reference made a part of this finding. On April 3, 1929, the Board of Trustees of the Citizens Gas unanimously adopted a resolution approving the resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of Citizens Gas. The resolutions referred to above in this subdivision of this stipulation contain demands by the City upon Citizens Gas that in accordance with the provisions of the franchise contract "the plants, property and assets of said Company be conveyed to said City of Indianapolis" and a recognition by Citizens Gas that it was obligated to make such conveyance.

38. In pursuance of a resolution adopted on May 7, 1935, by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City, a public offering of $8,000,000 of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds was made on May 28, 1935. A copy of said Resolution, adopted May 28, 1935, is identified as Exhibit 47 to the Stipulation in this case and is by reference incorporated into these findings. A correct copy of the notice by the City Controller of the City pursuant to said resolution marked Exhibit A is attached to the answer and counter-claim of the City in this case and is by reference made a part of this Finding. Resolutions similar to that of May 7th, 1935, were adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities for the City on April 5th, April 10th and April 12th, 1935, and advertisements were published in pursuance of said resolutions on April 8th, April 12th, and April 18th, 1935, respectively. Said resolutions were substantially identical with Exhibit 47 to said Stipulation. Said advertisements were substantially identical with Exhibit A to the answer and counter-claim of the City. No bid resulting from said advertisements of April 8th, April 12th and April 18th, 1935, was acceptable to the City.

Later, viz. on May 29, 1935, a joint bid of Halsey Stuart & Company, of Chicago, Illinois, and Otis & Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, for said revenue bonds was accepted by the City. The proceeds of the sale of said Revenue Bonds were received by the City June 27, 1935.

39. The purchasers of said revenue bonds issued an advertising circular, a correct copy of which marked Exhibit B is attached to the answer and counter-claim of the City and is by reference made a part of this finding.

Before the issuance of said advertising circular Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Co., asked the City to approve the circular which was to be issued by them and were advised by the City and its representatives that the only authority which the City had in connection with the sale of revenue bonds was to make a public offering and that the City had no authority to approve or become responsible for any representations made in connection with the resale of said revenue bonds by the purchasers thereof.

That the circular and newspaper advertising issued by the purchasers of said revenue bonds were issued solely on their own authority and without authorization by the City and that there is no evidence to show that any persons who purchased said Gas Plant Revenue Bonds of the City did so on the faith of any representation made by the City or its authorized agents.

Any representations made by the purchasers of such bonds were never ratified or approved by the City or any of its authorized representatives.

40. The City caused the sum of $2,500,000 to be paid on or about July 1, 1935, for the retirement of all of the Citizens Gas common stock. Said $2,500,000 included $2,000,000 as the par value of said common stock and $500,000 as dividends thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from January 1, 1933, to June 30, 1935. The City also caused the sum of $1,050,000 to be paid on or about September 1, 1935, for the redemption of all of the Citizens Gas preferred stock in full satisfaction of the preferred stockholders' interest in the property and assets of Citizens Gas. Said $1,050,000 included $1,000,000 as the par value of said preferred stock and $50,000 as the premium of five per cent. on the redemption thereof required by the terms of said preferred stock. Citizens Gas paid all the dividends on said preferred stock up to the time of said redemption. All of said common stock was retired and all of said preferred stock was redeemed.

41. On August 9, 1935, the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City adopted a resolution with respect to the payment of the mortgage bonds of the Citizens Gas dated July 1, 1912, a copy of which resolution is attached to the Stipulation in this cause, marked Exhibit 48 and by reference made a part of this Finding. In pursuance of said resolution the City on August 10, 1935, published a notice, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 49, is attached to the Stipulation in this cause and in September, 1935, published a notice, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 50, is attached to the Stipulation in this cause, both of which exhibits marked 49 and 50 are by reference made a part of this Finding. The principal amount of Citizens Gas bonds outstanding on August 12, 1935, was $2,745,000. All of said bonds have been paid and surrendered excepting bonds aggregating the principal amount of $32,000.

Before payment of said bonds had been made by the City it was advised by its counsel that said Citizens Gas mortgage had been executed in violation of the terms of said public charitable trust, but that the moneys which Citizens Gas had received from the sale of the mortgage bonds had been used in additions to and betterments of the trust res and that the holders of the bonds had an equitable lien on the property for their debt; that it was in pursuance of this advice that the City paid said mortgage bonds.

That in the payment of the common and preferred stock of Citizens Gas and the dividends thereon and the premiums on the retirement of the preferred stock the City proceeded in accordance with the decree of this court and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the Todd and Cotter cases, above referred to, and that it was required to make said payments before taking over the res of the public charitable trust hereinbefore described and that in so doing it did not recognize directly or by implication the validity or enforceability against the City of the lease.

42. Prior to the transfer to the City of the plant and property of Citizens Gas on September 9, 1935, neither the City nor its Department of Utilities gave any notice to Chase or any formal notice to any holder of Indianapolis Gas bonds that said transfer and conveyance was to be made, but Indianapolis Gas was fully advised of said transfer and as early as July 23, 1935, was advised that the City would not accept an assignment of the lease; that wide publicity of the fact that said transfer was to be made appeared in the newspapers, including the publicity incident to the sale of the revenue bonds.

43. That in pursuance of agreements made between City and Indianapolis Gas, which agreements have been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935, City has operated the gas producing and distributing plant and system of Indianapolis Gas. Such agreements provided in substance that such operation by the City should not prejudice the rights of either the City or Indianapolis Gas and further provided that the City by operating such plant did not recognize the validity of the lease and Indianapolis Gas by consenting to such operation did not admit that the lease was invalid.

That such agreements between City and Indianapolis Gas were made for the purpose of preventing the interruption of public service and in order that approximately 50,000 gas consumers on the mains of Indianapolis Gas should continue to receive a necessary public utility service.

That such operation by the City in pursuance of the terms of such agreements did not amount to an admission of the validity of the lease.

44. On March 2, 1936, the City and Indianapolis Gas entered into a written agreement, a correct copy of which is attached to the complaint in this case, marked Exhibit H and is by reference made a part of these Findings; that said agreement has never been modified or supplemented in any respect.

No settlement agreement as provided for in said contract of March 2, 1936, has ever been agreed upon between the City and Indianapolis Gas; that since the date of the execution of said agreement the City has made an effort to obtain a judicial determination of the validity of the lease and the non-enforceability against it of said lease as follows:

(a) On October 1, 1936, the City filed a counter-claim in this cause asserting the invalidity of said lease and asking a judicial determination of such invalidity.

(b) On October 28, 1938, the City filed a counter-claim in a suit brought by bondholders of Indianapolis Gas in this court in which it likewise asserted the invalidity of such lease and sought a judcial determination of such invalidity.

(c) On December 24, 1937, the City commenced an action to obtain a judicial determination of the invalidity of said lease, which cause is now pending as No. 13873 in the Circuit Court of Boone County, Indiana.

45. Indianapolis Gas did not pay any of the interest coupons due on October 1, 1936, April 1, 1937, October 1, 1937, April 1, 1938 and October 1, 1938, on any of the Indianapolis Gas bonds and all of said interest coupons remain unpaid.

46. The City, pursuant to the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936, has from time to time made deposits with the escrow agent, The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, which deposits on December 31, 1938, aggregated the sum of $1,217,875 which sum is now held by said Bank. Said Bank has never at any time paid out any of the sums so deposited with it. All of the sums so deposited with said Bank have been derived from and are part of the proceeds of the City's operation of the property transferred, conveyed and assigned to it by Citizens Gas and the property of Indianapolis Gas covered by the lease.

47. The City also has paid pursuant to the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936, the sum of approximately $171,000, being an amount equal to the interest due on Indianapolis Gas bonds on March 30, 1936.

48. That all payments made by the City of sums of money equal to the interest on the Indianapolis Gas bonds, dividends payable under the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913, or any of the moneys now in escrow at The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, would not have been made in the absence of the agreement of March 2, 1936, for the temporary use of the property of Indianapolis Gas, and certain correspondence exchanged between Indianapolis Gas and attorneys for the City in connection with the payments so made, in which contract of March 2, 1936, and correspondence it was agreed that neither the temporary operation of the property nor the payment of such monies by the City should in any way prejudice the City's rights or without such operation and payments or the execution of the agreements constituting an admission on the part of the City of the validity or binding effect upon the City of the lease.

The agreement of March 2, 1936, did not result in the default of interest payments due on the bonds because in the absence of such agreement the City would not have made payments of sums equal to the interest.

49. On March 11, 1936, and prior to the date when the City paid the money equal to the interest referred to in subdivision 47 of this finding and before it had deposited any sums in escrow with The Indiana National Bank as escrow agent, the trustee and two of the principal bondholders of Indianapolis Gas were advised of the making of such agreement and the terms thereof and believing said agreement to be in the interest of the bondholders and of Chase made no objection thereto but received and accepted the sum of $171,000 with full knowledge of the terms of said agreement and have been interested continuously since in seeing that said agreement was carried out by the City and that the sums agreed to be paid by the City were actually paid.

The averment in the complaint in this case that said agreement was made in violation of the rights of Chase and its bondholders and was inimical to their interests is not true and was never believed by Chase to be true.

50. On September 9, 1935, the Directors of Citizens Gas adopted a resolution, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 86, is attached to the Stipulation and is by reference made a part of this finding. On the same day, the Board of Trustees of Citizens Gas adopted a resolution, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 87, is attached to the stipulation in this case and by reference made a part of this finding.

Pursuant to the requirements contained in each of said resolutions, the City on September 9, 1935, executed and delivered to Citizens Gas an indemnifying agreement, a correct copy of which, marked Exhibit J, is attached to the second amendment to the complaint in this cause and by reference made a part hereof.

51. Prior to the commencement of this action neither Chase nor any of the bondholders of Indianapolis Gas made any request or demand upon Indianapolis Gas that it commence or prosecute an action in a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain a determination or declaration of the validity or invalidity of the lease.

52. The City has been a first class city within the meaning of the Indiana Statutes continuously since January 1, 1910. No other city of Indiana has been a first class city during any of said period. The City has had a population exceeding 300,000 continuously since January 1, 1920, and no other city of Indiana has had such a population of 300,000 during any of such period.

53. As early as September 19, 1935, Chase was advised by its bondholders who had seen newspaper reports that the City was attempting to abrogate the lease. In a letter of that date addressed to the President of Indianapolis Gas Chase stated.

"We are receiving numerous inquiries from holders of bonds of the above described issue with respect to newspaper reports that the City Utilities District is attempting to abrogate the lease made by your Company with Citizens Gas Company in 1913. Bondholders state that such action would materially affect the security of their bonds and we would be obliged if you will be good enough to write us such information as we can pass on to bondholders with respect to this situation."

Neither the City nor Citizens Gas concealed the attitude of Citizens Gas and the City in respect of the City's rejection of an assignment of the lease.

Chase knew at all times from September 19, 1935, of the City's attitude and there was no reason why either City or Citizens Gas should have advised them of such attitude.

54. On September 28, 1935, the firm of which Newton D. Baker was the senior member, was employed by Indianapolis Gas as special counsel in the controversy respecting the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease. That firm gave an opinion on the question of the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease in November, 1935. Mr. Baker's firm continued to represent Indianapolis Gas until May 13, 1936.

On March 11th and April 10th, 1936, meetings were held at the office of Chase in New York attended by representatives of Chase, Indianapolis Gas and two of the principal bondholders of Indianapolis Gas, at which it was agreed:

(a) That the two insurance companies there represented: Massachusetts Mutual and New England Life, would request Chase to obtain an opinion from Mr. Baker's firm as to the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease and whether the costs and expenses including attorneys' fees of Chase in the prosecution of a suit against Indianapolis Gas, the City and Citizens Gas would be a lien against Indianapolis Gas property ahead of its mortgage debt;

(b) Chase would then write to Mr. Baker's firm requesting such an opinion;

(c) If the opinion of Mr. Baker's firm were favorable Chase would request Mr. Baker's firm to bring such a suit.

(d) Thereupon Mr. Baker's firm would ask to be released from its employment to Indianapolis Gas. Indianapolis Gas would accede to this request, Mr. Baker's firm would accept Chase's employment and would thereupon sue Indianapolis Gas, which, up to that time, it had represented.

This plan was carried out as projected.

55. Attorneys for Indianapolis Gas and Mr. Baker's firm then representing Indianapolis Gas, started the work of preparing a complaint against Indianapolis Gas and at the time this complaint was drafted, and towards the stage of completion, it had been wholly prepared by attorneys representing Indianapolis Gas and no one else.

After Mr. Baker's firm had been released from its employment by Indianapolis Gas it consulted and advised with Indianapolis Gas attorneys residing in Indianapolis as to the preparation and form of the complaint, accepted suggestions made by Indianapolis Gas attorneys in respect thereof and co-operated with Indianapolis Gas attorneys in the preparation and filing of the complaint.

After the complaint was filed Mr. Baker's firm then representing Chase, and local attorneys for Indianapolis Gas, consulted and advised with each other both as to the facts and the law in the presentation and prosecution of the case.

The temporary relief asked for in the complaint was never intended to be urged upon the court and that in fact in the three years in which this case has been pending no such temporary relief has been requested except by the formal prayer in the complaint.

This action was commenced by Chase at the joint request of Indianapolis Gas and its bondholders and was brought and maintained collusively by Chase and Indianapolis Gas in order that the suit might be brought in a Federal Court; that there is no collision of interest between Chase and Indianapolis Gas; that Chase and Indianapolis Gas have actively cooperated in the maintenance of this litigation.

Upon the foregoing Findings of Fact, the Court makes and states the following

This action was commenced by Chase at the joint request of Indianapolis Gas and its bondholders and was brought by Chase in order that the suit might be brought in a Federal Court.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW:

1. This suit was collusively brought and has been collusively maintained by Chase and Indianapolis Gas; there was not at the commencement of this action and never has been collision of interest between Chase and

Indianapolis Gas; the interest of Chase and Indianapolis Gas in this case is joint and that interest is to secure a declaration of the validity and binding effect upon the City of the lease; the prayer for temporary relief in the complaint was not inserted for the purpose of obtaining such relief, but merely for the purpose of showing an apparent collision of interest; this action was commenced at the joint request of Indianapolis Gas and its bondholders and there has been active cooperation between Chase and Indianapolis Gas in the commencement and prosecution of this suit.

2. Because of the collusive nature of the action the City is entitled to a judgment against Chase for its reasonable costs, expenses and attorneys' fees in defending this collusive suit.

3. This cause is hereby referred to ..... as Special Master for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting to this court the amount of the City's reasonable costs, expenses and attorneys' fees in defending this action.

4. Upon such report of the Special Master being made and being approved or modified by the court the City is entitled to have judgment against Chase for the amount of its reasonable costs, expenses and attorneys' fees and to have this case dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

OR ALTERNATIVELY.

1. The order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease; and the judgments and decrees in the Fishback, Todd and Williams cases are not res adjudicata of the validity and binding effect of the lease upon the City.

2. The City is not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease.

3. The lease is invalid and unenforceable against the City for each of the following reasons:

(a) Citizen's Gas as initial trustee of a public charitable trust with a fixed date of expiration of its trusteeship had no power or authority to execute a lease for 82 years beyond the expiration of its term of trusteeship which would be binding upon or enforceable against its successor trustee, the City, a municipal corporation.

(b) The trust instruments conferred no specific power upon the initial trustee to execute such a lease as Lessee and properly construed precluded the initial trustee from executing such a lease.

(c) Said lease was executed in violation of the terms of an Indiana statute which prohibited the execution of such a lease without the approval of the Board of Public Works and the Common Council of the City which approval was never obtained. Said statute precluded the execution of any lease for a term of longer than 25 years. A lease executed in violation of this Statute is void and cannot be ratified.

4. The agreement of March 2, 1936, between City and Indianapolis Gas was not inimical to the interests of Chase or the bondholders which it represents.

5. Neither the City nor Indianapolis Gas has violated the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936, nor is there any valid subsisting controversy as to the proper interpretation of that agreement. Inasmuch as this court has concluded that said lease is invalid and unenforceable against the City it has no power or jurisdiction to determine and fix the rights of Indianapolis Gas and the City under the terms of such agreement.

6. Plaintiff's complaint should be dismissed for want of equity.

REQUEST OF DEFENDANT, CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS, FOR FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, a defendant in the above-entitled consolidated cause, respectfully submits and requests the adoption of the following proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law:

Findings of Fact.

(1) Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis (hereinafter referred to as "Citizens") was organized on the 23rd day of May, 1906, under the general laws of the 384 State of Indiana, providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, its purposes and obligations being fixed and controlled entirely by its Articles of Incorporation, as amended, its By-Laws, and the certain franchise ordinance and contract granted and entered into on the 25th day of August, 1905, by and between the City of Indianapolis, acting by and through its Common Council, and Afred F. Potts, Frank D. Stallnaker and Lorenz Schmidt. Copies of said instruments and enactment as contained in the stipulation of the parties offered in evidence as Plaintiffs' Exhibit One, are adopted by the Court as part of these findings of fact.

(2) That by virtue of such instruments and enactment Citizens became the initial trustee of a public charitable trust for the benefit of the present and prospective gas consumers of the City of Indianapolis, and all of the rights, property and assets then or thereafter acquired by Citizens were held by it as such initial trustee, and for the purposes and upon the terms and conditions set forth in said instruments and enactment, and no others. Said instruments and enactment provide, among other things, than when the outstanding preferred stock of Citizens shall have been retired and when the holders of the certificates representing the common stock of Citizens shall have received, by dividends or otherwise, upon such certificates an amount equal to the face value thereof together with interest thereon at the rate provided for, the said certificates shall all be deemed fully paid and cancelled, and it shall thereupon be the duty of the Voting Trustees and Board of Directors of Citizens to convey to the City of Indianapolis all the right, title and interest of 385 Citizens in all of its said property, subject to all of the legal obligations of Citizens, to be owned and operated by the said City of Indianapolis, and that thereafter Citizens shall be wound up.

(3) The sole purpose and object of the creation, organization and existence of Citizens was to act and perform the duties of initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, as specifically set forth in the said instruments and enactment, and Citizens had no power or authority, as a corporation, to act otherwise.

(4) Prior to September 30, 1913, and at all times subsequent thereto, all persons, including the plaintiffs herein, the defendant Indianapolis Gas Company, and all of the holders of the bonds of the said defendant, either had actual knowledge of, or were bound in law by knowledge of, all of the terms and provisions of the said instruments and enactment and of the purposes, objects, power and authority of Citizens, as aforesaid, including the duty, power and authority of Citizens, at the end of the period of said franchise ordinance, to wit, on August 30, 1930, when the conditions fixed therein precedent to the conveyance and transfer had been fully complied with, to convey and transfer all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis, and thereafter to be wound up.

(5) Prior to September 9, 1935, all of the conditions fixed in the said instruments and enactment as precedent to the duty and authority of Citizens to convey and transfer the said property had been fully and completely performed so that on said date nothing further remained to be performed or done by the City of Indianapolis to entitle it in law to have all of said property con-
386 veyed and transferred to it as aforesaid. On said date, Citizens, by its proper corporate officers, executed and delivered instruments of conveyance and transfer of all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis, in the manner and form, and in strict compliance with its duty and authority so to do, as aforesaid.

(6) Citizens had fully and completely complied with all the terms, provisions and obligations of the written lease entered into by and between Citizens and Indianapolis Gas Company under date of September 30, 1913, which written lease was offered in evidence as Plaintiffs' Exhibit One and is made a part of these findings of fact, when, on September 9, 1935, Citizens conveyed, transferred and assigned all of the said property, including the interest in and to the said written lease, to the City of Indianapolis, subject to all the legal obligations of Citizens, including the legal obligation under the said written lease, if any there be, all as aforesaid. As a result of the performance of its duties, power and authority as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, Citizens divested itself of all of its property of every nature, and ceased doing business of any kind.

(7) Citizens, its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees and Officers, in making the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis, as aforesaid, fully and completely performed and exhausted all of the duties, powers and authority of Citizens as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust. Neither Citizens, nor its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees or any of its officers, from and after 387 September 9, 1935, has any further duties, powers or authority as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, or to hold, own, lease, manage or operate any property or business of any nature whatsoever.

(8) Citizens, its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees and Officers were entirely and completely released and discharged from any and all obligations and duties, of every nature whatsoever, by virtue of the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis of September 9, 1935, as aforesaid, including any and all obligations under the said written lease. Citizens has fully and lawfully performed all of its duties and obligations as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, and its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees and Officers have fully and lawfully performed all of their duties as such, respectively, and neither Citizens nor its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees or any of its officers is under any further obligation to any of the plaintiffs or other defendants herein.

Conclusions of Law.

(1) The plaintiffs herein, and the defendant Indianapolis Gas Company, are estopped to deny that Citizens has been entirely and completely released and discharged from any and all obligations under the said written lease, as a result of the said conveyance and transfer to the City of Indianapolis, as aforesaid, and that the said written lease is not a valid obligation of Citizens at this time.

(2) The said written lease, from and after September 9, 1935, is not a valid or legal obligation of Citizens and Citizens was and is entirely and completely released 388 and discharged from any present or future obligation or liability under the said written lease as a result of the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis of September 9, 1935.

REQUEST OF DEFENDANT, THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY, FOR FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Louis B. Ewbank,
William R. Higgins,
Indianapolis, Ind.,
Solicitors for Defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company.

391 * * * * * *

Comes now the Indianapolis Gas Company, a defendant in the above entitled cause, and separately submits and respectfully petitions the adoption of the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

Findings of Fact.

1. The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, plaintiff, hereinafter referred to as "plaintiff" is a corporation existing by virtue of the banking laws of the United States and is a resident and citizen of the State of New York; defendants the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and the Indianapolis Gas Company (hereinafter referred to as "Citizens Gas" and "Indianapolis Gas") are each corporations existing by virtue of the laws of Indiana and are citizens of the State of Indiana; defendant City of Indianapolis is a municipal corporation located in the Southern United States Judicial District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division; the individual members of the Board of Trustees and Board of Directors for Utilities for the City of Indianapolis are all and each of them Citizens of the State of Indiana.

2. The amount in controversy between plaintiff and each of said defendants, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds the sum of $3,000.00.

3. Indianapolis Gas was incorporated under the general laws of Indiana prior to November 28, 1913, had for many years been engaged in operating a gas manufacturing plant and distributing system in the City of Indianapolis and in selling gas to the inhabitants thereof; that it continued the operation of said gas plant and system until November 28, 1913, when the same was delivered to Citizens Gas in accordance with the provisions of a ninety-nine year lease dated September 30, 1913, hereinafter referred to as "the lease".

4. Citizens Gas was incorporated in 1906 under the general laws of the State of Indiana and was at all times thereafter until September 9, 1935, a public utility operating a gas plant and a gas distributing system in the City of Indianapolis; a true copy of its Articles of Incorporation and amendments thereto, together with its by-laws and franchise are set out in "Exhibit 3" to the complaint and by reference made a part hereof.

5. On October 1, 1902, Indianapolis Gas executed its certain mortgage deed of trust to secure the payment of the principal and interest of its First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds (hereinafter referred to as "bonds") which were authorized in the principal amount of $7,500,000.00; the interest on said bonds was payable semi-annually on the first days of April and October of each year. Plaintiff herein is now and has been, since March 1935, the sole trustee under said mortgage indenture; a true copy of said mortgage deed of trust is set out as "Exhibit A" to the complaint and 392 by reference made a part hereof.

6. There are now and were, when this action was instituted, issued and outstanding in the hands of the public bonds of Indianapolis Gas in the total principal amount of $6,881,000.00; said bonds and coupons attached are in the form set out in the mortgage last above referred to.

7. Citizens Gas during its entire existence until the 9th day of September, 1935, held its said gas properties as a trustee of a public charitable trust, the beneficiaries of which were the gas users and residents of the city of Indianapolis.

8. Prior to the 26th day of February, 1913, the Trustees and Directors of Citizens Gas suggested and requested that one Volney T. Malott and a group of Indianapolis businessmen purchase the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas, or an amount in excess of three-fourths thereof, thereby making possible a merger of the systems of the two companies under the unified control and operation of Citizens Gas; and the purchase of the capital stock of the Indianapolis Gas was made by said Indianapolis syndicate in reliance upon the agreement of Citizens Gas that it would execute a lease of the former's property for a period of ninety-nine years during which it would hold and operate the same under the terms and rental provisions as set out in a certain lease.

9. On September 30, 1913, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas entered into a certain contract of lease, hereinafter called "lease"; a correct copy of said lease is attached as "Exhibit B" to the Bill of Complaint and is by reference made a part hereof.

10. All property leased by Indianapolis Gas was covered by and included in its said mortgage.

11. Said lease contains the following provisions, among others.

(a) The entire gas system including its manufacturing plant and distributing system was leased to Citizens Gas for a period of ninety-nine years from the first day of October, 1913.

(b) As part of the rental provided, lessee and its successors and assigns agreed to pay $120,000.00 annually as dividends on the outstanding capital stock of Indianapolis Gas, the par value of which was $2,000,000.00.

(c) As part of the rental provided, lessee and its successors and assigns agreed to pay all interest charges on the bonds of Indianapolis Gas payable during the term of the lease.

(d) The lessor agreed to call upon the trustee for certification and delivery to it of bonds which were in turn to be delivered to lessee in payment of ninety per cent of the cost of any extensions or betterments as might be made by lessee to the leased property.

12. On said 30th day of September, 1913, bonds of Indianapolis Gas had been issued and were outstanding in the principal amount of $4,833,000.00.

13. On May 21, 1913, Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas filed a joint petition with the Public Service Commission of Indiana for approval of the proposed lease; this petition is correctly set forth on pages 3 and 4 of the plaintiff's "Exhibit 13" (the complaint in Fishback vs. Public 393 Service Commission et al.) and is by reference made a part hereof.

14. Prior to the ruling and order on said petition, one Frank S. Fishback filed with the Public Service Commission an intervening petition opposing the approval of the proposed lease jointly petitioned by Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas; a correct copy of said petition is set forth at pages 4 to 7 of plaintiff's "Exhibit 13" and is by reference made a part hereof.

15. On or about October 1, 1913, the Public Service Commission, after a full hearing in the premises, granted the joint petition of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas and approved the execution of said lease; a correct copy of the finding and order of said commission is attached to the Bill of Complaint and marked "Exhibit D", and is by reference made a part hereof.

16. Upon denial by the Public Service Commission of the intervening petition formerly filed by Fishback, a petition for re-hearing was filed and overruled by the commission on November 28, 1913.

17. In all said proceedings before the Public Service Commission, upon the joint petition of Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas, as well as upon the intervening petition of said Frank S. Fishback, the defendant City of Indianapolis was served with notice to appear, and through its duly appointed Corporation Counsel was in fact present at all proceedings had therein; said City through its Corporation Counsel urged upon the commission that it order included in the lease Section 27½ thereof, which provision was inserted and made part of the lease as approved.

18. At said hearing, said counsel for defendant City joined with counsel for Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas in urging the granting of their said joint petition and the overruling of intervening petition of said Fishback.

19. On November 28, 1913, or shortly thereafter, Citizens Gas took possession and control of the gas plant and distributing system of Indianapolis Gas as well as all other property described in the lease and operated said plant and system as a unified part of its own plant and system and as an integral part of the corpus of the charitable trust continuously thereafter until September 9, 1935.

20. On September 30, 1913, Indianapolis Gas owned a distributing system consisting of 383.15 miles of mains and was in the process of making substantial improvements in its manufacturing plant and it also had 41,541 meters in use. Citizens Gas at said time owned and operated 184.52 miles of mains and had 11,165 meters in use.

21. In seeking to secure a leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas and the control and operation of the same for a period of ninety-nine years under the terms of the proposed lease, the trustees and directors of Citizens Gas were acting upon their judgment and honest belief that the creation of said estate would be to the benefit and advantage of the trust which they then held and operated.

22. The execution of said lease by the Directors and Trustees of Citizens Gas upon order of the Public Service Commission was a reasonable exercise by Citizens Gas of its powers as trustee of a public charitable trust and appropriate to the carrying out of the purposes of the 394 trust under all the existing conditions, including the duration of the trust, the nature of the property and uses to which it might advantageously be put and of all other conditions existing at that time.

23. On November 28, 1913, Frank S. Fishback, as a resident freeholder of Indianapolis and a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, commenced an action in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, against the Public Service Commission of Indiana, City of Indianapolis, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas and sought to have vacated and set aside the order of said commission approving and ordering the execution of said lease.

Attack upon the commissions' order and the lease was upon the following grounds, among others:

(a) That the trustees, directors and officers of Citizens

Gas exceeded their authority in entering into a lease for a period of ninety-nine years.

(b) That the lease, as executed, would prevent the fulfillment of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas and would prevent the City from taking over said gas system.

(c) That the lease was improvident and burdensome from the point of view of Citizens Gas.

(d) That the lease constituted a lien upon the property and earnings of Citizens Gas thereby impairing the obligations of the contract between said company and its stockholders and the City.

(e) That the City of Indianapolis had not given its consent to such lease.

(f) That the Public Service Commission was without power or authority to order said contracting parties to enter into the said lease.

24. Demurrers to the complaint were filed by Public Service Commission, Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas and an answer in general denial to all paragraphs of complaint was filed by defendant City.

25. Upon the day of judgment, the plaintiff dismissed his action as against defendant City of Indianapolis and the demurrers of defendant Public Service Commission, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas were sustained; and, on failure of plaintiff to plead over, judgment was rendered in favor of said defendants.

26. Appeal from this judgment was made by plaintiff to the Supreme Court of Indiana where it was denied because of plaintiff's failure to properly perfect said appeal.

27. City of Indianapolis, through its Board of Public Works prior to the final judgment in the Fishback case required and made demand that extensions be made in the mains of the leased property as provided in Section 27½, Sub-section 6, of the lease, and such extensions were made pursuant thereto.

28. The contentions of the City and Citizens Gas in the Fishback case were admissions and acceptance of the fact that the lease, properly construed, provided that the lease hold estate thus created became part and parcel of the res of the public charitable trust; and that both the contracting parties had authority to execute it and the Public Service Commission, the right to approve and authorize it.

395 29. On March 12, 1930, one Allan G. Williams and others instituted suit in the Circuit Court of Marion County, Indiana, on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers and inhabitants of the City as beneficiaries of the public charitable trust. Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, the City of Indianapolis and members of the City's Board of Public Works, Board of Trustees for Utilities and Board of Directors for Utilities were all made parties defendant and appeared.

The complaint alleged:

(a) that the lease was invalid;

(b) that the order of the Public Service Commission approving said lease was unlawful;

(c) that the lease was burdensome upon the public charitable trust and one improvident from the standpoint of the lessee;

(d) that the lease was "ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company".

Citizens Gas, City of Indianapolis and the members of its Board of Public Works, Board of Trustees for Utilities, Board of Trustees and Directors for Utilities, separately and severally moved the Court to strike out certain portions of the plaintiff's complaint. As supporting grounds for said motion, said defendants made, among others, the following allegations:

(a) "The Public Service Commission of Indiana has express authority to approve leases between two operating public utilities and, it appearing from the averments of the complaint that such lease did have the approval of the Public Service Commission, the action of that commission can not be collaterally attacked." (Stip. Ex. 37, p. 4.)

(b) There is no averment in the complaint which shows any ground on which the plaintiff can successfully attack collaterally the order of the Public Service Commission approving said lease; there is no showing in the complaint that the commission was without jurisdiction to approve the lease between the Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company or that it exceeded its jurisdiction or that the approval of the lease was procured by any fraud. (Stip. Ex. 37, p. 4.)

(c) "It appearing that the lease so approved by the Public Service Commission has been in full force and effect for nearly seventeen years, and that many millions of dollars have been expended in reliance upon its validity, all persons including plaintiffs (if they have any standing under any circumstances) are estopped to question the validity of the same." (Stip. Ex. 37, p. 5.)

(d) "If the lease is valid, the leasehold estate created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as property owned by the Citizens Gas Company in its own right. If for any reason the lease is invalid, it would fall without the scope of the trust." (Stip. Ex. 37, p. 7.)

30. The judgment of the Marion Superior Court denied the allegations of the complaint and sustained the contentions made by Citizens Gas and the City. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Indiana, the judgment was affirmed in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Ind. 448.

396 31. The contentions made and positions taken by the City and Citizens Gas in the Williams case were admissions by them that the leasehold estate was part and parcel of the public charitable trust for the full term of ninety-nine years and was a construction by them of the City's resolution of March 20, 1929, that said resolution did in fact express an election on the part of said City to succeed to the trusteeship of said trust and to take over all the property operated by Citizens Gas including its leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas.

32. Between the years 1914 and 1935, Citizens Gas in the sale of Indianapolis Gas bonds made representations that all interest payments on the same were guaranteed by Citizens Gas, and that it had a lease on all the gas property of Indianapolis Gas for a period of ninety-nine years, and by reason thereof had a monopoly of the gas business of Indianapolis. Said bonds were sold on reliance of said representations.

33. On March 20, 1929, resolution by the City's Board of Public Works was made which declared its election to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee of the public charitable trust and demanded of said Citizens Gas all rights, title, interest and ownership of whatever nature or character which said Citizens Gas held and owned in the plant and property it was operating.

It was also provided that said Citizens Gas secure by mortgage, if possible, sufficient sums to pay off and discharge the amounts due its certificate holders and to redeem its preferred stock and then convey to said City the gas property "subject to such mortgage and other legal obligations against said company". The right of the city to furnish and advance funds to pay and discharge the obligations to the owners of certificates and preferred stock was expressly reserved. (Stip. Ex. 2?.)

34. On May 7, 1935, the Board of Directors for Utilities passed a resolution authorizing the issuance of the City's gas plan revenue bonds in the total principal amount of $8,000,000.00 for the purpose of obtaining funds for the taking over of the property owned by Citizens Gas "and/or in which it has an interest". The form and text of the bonds so authorized was also set out and described the purposes in the same language as above set out.

Said resolution also provided an agreement by City that "when it has obtained the possession of the property operated by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis it will cause the same to be continually operated as a gas system in an efficient manner and at reasonable cost, and maintained in good operating condition; and it will use all reasonable efforts to resist competition and maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis and Marion County of Indiana and the towns therein." (Stip. Ex. 47, p. 16.)

Said resolution also provided: "So long as any of said bonds are outstanding and unpaid the City shall not sell, mortgage or dispose of said gas system or any substantial and useful part thereof;" (Stip. Ex. 47, p. 17). A true copy of said resolution is set out as "Exhibit 47" of the Stipulation and is by reference made a part hereof.

35. Pursuant to the resolution of May 7, 1935, the City did execute its revenue bonds in the principal amount of $8,000,000 and, in connection with the public offering thereof, represented:

397 (a) that the City was taking over "the property operated by Citizens Gas Company";

(b) that said bonds were to be issued to obtain funds to take over "property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and/or in which it has an interest";

(c) that the payment of the bonds would be "secured by a charge upon the revenue from the operation of all the gas system owned and/or operated by the City of Indianapolis";

(d) that the City would secure a system which had enjoyed the exclusive right to supply gas to the inhabitants of Indianapolis;

(e) that the City would use all reasonable efforts to maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis, Marion County;

(f) that the gas system, which would be taken over by the City, included the property leased from Indianapolis Gas for the term of ninety-nine years; under the provisions of which lease the lessee was obligated to pay the interest on the outstanding mortgage bonds of the lessor.

36. A correct copy of the circulars issued by Holsey-

Stewart and Company and Otis and Company, in the public sale of the City's revenue bonds, which circulars contained statements, all of which were known to City, and all of which were approved by the City (except the representations relating to the relative values of the properties of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas) is set out as "Exhibit B" to the answer of defendant City and is by reference made a part hereof.

37. The representations made, approved or authorized by the City in connection with the sale of its revenue bonds were in fact an affirmance by the City of the construction that its resolutions of March 20, 1929, was one demanding succession as trustee to all the property which had been operated by the Citizens Gas, including the leasehold estate.

38. The City's revenue bonds were purchased by Holsey-Stewart and Company and Otis and Company and in turn by the public, all in reliance upon the representations made by the City as set forth in Finding 33, supra.

39. Between July 1, 1935, and September 9, 1935, the City caused the sum of $2,500,000.00 to be paid to the certificate holders of Citizens Gas for the retirement of all said company's common stock. It also caused $1,050,000.00 to be paid for the redemption of all the Citizens Gas preferred stock and by this means all of said common and preferred stock of said company was redeemed; said payments were made by the City with full knowledge:

(a) of the existence of the ninety-nine year lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas and of the continuing obligations of Citizens Gas and the trust it was operating thereunder.

(b) of the fact that, after the transfer of its property to the City, Citizens Gas would be without assets of any kind or character with which to meet the known obligations of the lessee under the lease.

40. On September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas delivered to the City and the City accepted:

(a) a deed of conveyance of all real estate owned;

398 (b) an instrument of transfer and assignment of all its personal property;

(c) An assignment of the lease executed September 30, 1913, by Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas.

Immediately upon acceptance of said instruments, the City recorded the same in the office of the recorder of Marion County, Indiana.

41. On September 9, 1935, the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, took possession and control as successor trustee of all the property which had been operated by Citizens Gas, including the property of Indianapolis Gas under lease, and it has, since said date, continuously operated said property as a unified system.

42. The City, through its board of directors for utilities, has paid:

(a) all interest coupons on the bonds of Indianapolis Gas falling due subsequent to September 9, 1935, to and including those due April 1, 1936.

(b) all insurance premiums for insurance on the property covered by the lease.

(c) all installments of Indiana Gross Income Tax of Indianapolis falling due after September 9, 1935, to and including the payment made on April 15, 1936.

(d) all the State, County and Municipal taxes on the property covered by the lease payable after September 9, 1935.

(e) all installments of Federal Income Tax of Indianapolis Gas payable between September 9, 1935, and December 31, 1936, on account of sums paid by either Citizens Gas or the City to Indianapolis Gas during the years 1934 and 1935.

43. The City has deposited as of April 1, 1939, with the Indiana National Bank as escrow agent pursuant to the agreement of March 2, 1936, the amount of:

(a) $1,029,450.00, as interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds payable on October 1, 1936, and to and including the semi-annual payment due April 1, 1939. The above payment so deposited equals the interest due on all outstanding bonds, except those held by City in the total principal amount of $18,000.00.

(b) $420,000.00, representing the amount of rental paid by way of dividend on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas due and payable under the provisions of the lease from June 30, 1936, to June 30, 1939.

44. Indianapolis Gas has not concealed or attempted to conceal from plaintiff or its bondholders any true facts relative to conditions surrounding the use and operation of its property or resulting in the default of interest payments on its bonds.

45. The agreement of March 2, 1936, entered into by City and Indianapolis Gas was not inimical to the interests of plaintiff or the bondholders whom it represents.

46. There was no collusion between Indianapolis Gas and plaintiff or any other party to this cause in the bringing or prosecution of this action.

Conclusions of Law.

1. This Court has jurisdiction of this cause on the ground of diversity of citizenship between the parties thereto.

399 2. The lease is now and has been at all times since its approval by the Public Service Commission, a valid, binding and effective lease for the term of ninety-nine years, between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas and its successors and assigns.

3. The finding and order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease is a conclusive and binding determination upon all the parties to this cause and upon the public charitable trust that the lease was fair and reasonable in its terms, in the public interest, and its execution a proper exercise by Citizens Gas of its powers as trustee of a public charitable trust which has been at all times a public utility.

4. The City and Citizens Gas, each by their duly authorized counsel, appeared in the proceedings before the Public Service Commission and each requested of the commission approval of said lease and, by reason thereof and also because of their failure to subsequently object to either its validity or the validity of the order of the Public Service Commission approving the same, they now are each estopped to deny and precluded by their own laches from denying that the lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas, for its full term of ninety-nine years.

5. The judgment of the Superior Court of Marion County in the case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission et al. is binding in all its provisions in the present case upon Citizens Gas and the City and upon the public charitable trust.

6. By reason of the position and contentions taken and made by Citizens Gas and the City in the Fishback case, both Citizens Gas and City are estopped from denying that the lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the property conveyed to the City by Citizens Gas for its full term of ninety-nine years.

7. By reason of the representations made by Citizens Gas in the sale of Indianapolis Gas bonds and of its own securities, and by reason of the fact that said Citizens Gas and the public trust it was administering accepted the value and benefits of said ninety-nine year lease for twenty-two years, Citizens Gas, and the City as present trustee, are estopped from denying and are precluded by their own laches from denying that the lease is now a present valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust, and of the corpus of the trust itself for the full term of ninety-nine years.

8. The City, in demanding and securing through its Board of Public Works certain extensions in the mains of Indianapolis Gas in accordance with the provisions of the lease, formally accepted and recognized the validity of said lease.

9. The City's resolution, adopted by its Board of Public Works on March 20, 1929, was an election by the City to take over all of the property which had been operated by Citizens Gas, including the leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas, and all those obligations attached to the leasehold estate.

10. The judgment of the Superior Court of Marion County in the Williams case is a conclusive determination upon all parties to this cause and upon the public charitable trust of the following matters:

400 (a) That Williams had the right to sue on behalf of said public charitable trust.

(b) That the interests of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust were and are subordinate to the obligations of the trust as a public utility and to the control exercised over said trust as a public utility by the laws and regulations relating thereto made and provided by the State of Indiana.

(c) That the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of Citizens Gas, the City as successor trustee and of the said public charitable trust for its full term of ninety-nine years.

(d) That the order of the Public Service Commission approving said lease is conclusive and cannot be collaterally attacked.

(e) That Williams and all other beneficiaries of the said public charitable trust and the trustees of said trust are precluded by laches from attacking the validity of said Lease or its binding effect upon the public charitable trust or upon Citizens Gas or the City as successor trustee, for the full term of ninety-nine years.

11. The execution of said lease by Citizens Gas upon order of the Public Service Commission was a reasonable, lawful and valid exercise of its powers as trustee of a charitable trust and appropriate to the carrying out of the purposes of the trust.

12. By reason of the position taken and representations made by each the City and Citizens Gas in the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas et al., the City and Citizens Gas are precluded by their own laches and estopped from denying that the Lease is a valid and binding present obligation of Citizens Gas, of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust and of the property received by City from Citizens Gas for its full term of ninety-nine years.

13. By reason of the provisions of the resolution of the City of May 7, 1935, by its Board of Directors for Utilities, and of the representations made by the City in connection with the sale of its revenue bonds, the City is estopped from denying that the Lease is a valid and binding obligation of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust or that the leasehold estate is part and parcel of said trust estate.

14. By accepting the deed of conveyance on September 9, 1935, of all the real estate owned by Citizens Gas, which deed expressly provided that the described property was conveyed subject to all the legal obligations of the grantor, and by accepting and having recorded the assignment of Lease, and by taking possession of all said property covered both in the deed and lease, all of said property so conveyed to the City has at all times remained and is now obligated on all the covenants of the lessee as provided in said lease for its full term of ninety-nine years.

15. By reason of its taking possession of the Indianapolis Gas property on September 9, 1935, and its operation thereof until September 30, 1936, the City is estopped from denying that the lease is a valid and binding obligation of the City as successor trustee of the public charitable trust and of the property received by the City from Citizens Gas for its term of ninety-nine years and also that the leasehold estate was part of the res of the said trust.

401 16. By reason of the fact that the City took over all the assets of Citizens Gas and that the sole consideration therefor was paid by it directly to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas leaving said Citizens Gas without assets with which to satisfy its obligations, the City is now obligated to pay all liabilities of Citizens Gas.

17. By the provisions of the Lease, all obligations of Indianapolis Gas to its bondholders for payment of interest have been assumed and expressly undertaken by Citizens Gas and its successors and assigns. Such obligations are valid and enforceable against Citizens Gas, the City and all property conveyed to the City by Citizens Gas.

18. The obligation to satisfy such judgment as may be entered in this cause is that of the City Trustee, and the public charitable trust it is administering, and Citizens Gas, as principals; and of Indianapolis Gas, as surety.

19. No obligation is created by the bonds or mortgage indenture of Indianapolis Gas to pay to the holders of its bonds interest on said unpaid bond interest.

20. The agreement of March 2, 1936, between City and Indianapolis Gas was not inimical to the interests of the Trustee or the bondholders whom it represents.

21. The agreement of March 2, 1936, is a valid and binding agreement and the amount paid to the Indiana National Bank as escrow agent representing dividends on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas should be ordered paid to Indianapolis Gas without awaiting determination of the issues which, under the order of this court heretofore made, are reserved for later hearing.

22. Such an amount from the fund now on deposit with Indiana National Bank as represents the amounts paid thereto by the City as interest payments on the bonds of Indianapolis Gas may be used by the City to satisfy such judgment as shall be herein entered; but no part of said fund as represents the amount paid thereto for dividends on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas, may be used for such purpose unless and until there shall be a failure to have the balance of said judgment satisfied from the property and the assets of the City as trustee and the public charitable trust.

23. The defendants herein should be held liable for such judgment, as may be entered in the following order:

First, The City of Indianapolis and the property of the public charitable trust received by said City from Citizens Gas.

Second, The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

Third, The Indianapolis Gas Company.

24. The counter-claim of defendant City should be dismissed and denied for want of equity.

Respectfully submitted,
Louis B. Ewbank,
William R. Higgins,
Solicitors for Defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company.

402 And afterwards towit at the May Term of said Court, on the 21st day of September, 1939, before the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of said Court, the following further proceedings were had herein, towit:

This cause coming on to be finally heard by the Court for the determination of the issues submitted for trial at this time, as defined in the order made and entered herein on the 18th day of January, 1939, and the parties appearing by their respective attorneys, and the Court having heard the evidence and argument of counsel and being sufficiently advised in the premises, now files a memorandum herein.

Filed Sept. 21, 1939.

Baltzell, District Judge:

This is an action in which the plaintiff, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, as Trustee under a deed of trust executed on October 1, 1902 by the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, to secure the payment of the principal and interest of certain first mortgage bonds, is seeking to recover a judgment against such Gas Company for the amount of the due and unpaid interest upon such bonds. The plaintiff is aiso seeking, among other things, a declaratory judgment in which judgment it asks the court to declare that a certain lease entered into by and between the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 30, 1913 is a valid and binding obligation in all its terms and conditions upon the parties thereto and upon the defendants, City of Indianapolis, the Trustees and Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, and upon all the property formerly owned by the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, which is now owned and operated by the defendant City through its Board of Directors for Utilities.

404 While there have been filed in this action, pursuant to Rule 52 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, Special Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law to which reference is made for a more detailed statement of the facts, yet it is deemed advisable to briefly sketch the facts leading up to the execution of the lease in question, as well as those following its execution, in order that a clear and logical approach may be had to the proper determination of the questions involved.

During the year 1913, and for many years prior thereto, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, was the owner of considerable property in Indianapolis consisting of coke ovens, machinery, mains, meters, etc., was engaged in operating a gas manufacturing plant and distributing system in the City of Indianapolis, and was selling gas to the inhabitants of such city. It was the owner of much of such property during the year 1902, and on October 1 of that year it executed a deed of trust (hereinafter referred to as a mortgage) to the Trust Company of America, of New York City, and Ferdinand Winter of Indianapolis, as Trustees to secure the payment of bonds in the aggregate principal amount of $7,500,000.00. Such mortgage covered all of its property then owned by it, as well as after acquired property. Because of the death of Trustee Winter and various mergers and consolidations, The Chase National Bank of New York City has become and now is the sole Trustee under such mortgage. While the mortgage provided for the issuance of $7,500,000.00 of bonds yet there were originally issued and authenticated only $4,000,000.00. The mortgage, however, also provided that additional bonds could be issued to acquire additional property or for improvements, extensions, enlargements, etc., and under this provision $833,000.00 in principal of additional bonds were issued prior to September 30, 1913, and $2,048,000.00 in principal 405 issued subsequent to that date, so that there are now outstanding and unpaid of such bonds the principal amount of $6,881,000.00, of which amount the City of Indianapolis is the owner of $18,000.00 principal, and The Indianapolis Gas Company of $120,000.00 principal. The bonds thus issued and authenticated were sold to the public generally. The Indianapolis Gas Company is an Indiana corporation and its common capital stock consists of forty thousand shares of the total par value of $2,000,000.00.

The defendant, Citizens Gas Company, is an Indiana corporation and was organized in 1906 under the general laws providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, and for the express purpose of becoming the initial trustee of a public charitable trust, which trustee was to supply "the City of Indianpolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power." Prior to its organization on, to-wit: the 25th day of August, 1905, a contract and agreement had been entered into by and between the defendant, City of Indianapolis, by and through its Board of Public Works and three of its citizens, namely, Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker and Lorens Schmidt, wherein such three named citizens were given permission, subject to the ratification and approval of the Common Council of such City, to enter upon the streets, alleys, avenues and other public places and parts of such city for the purpose of excavating and laying, maintaining, operating and repairing a system of mains or pipes for the distribution of gas to the citizens of such City and the users of gas therein. This contract or franchise was approved by the Common Council on August 30, 1905. As a condition precedent, however, to the exercise of any of the rights conferred by such franchise, the said Potts, Stalnaker and Schmidt were to "organize 406 a corporation under and in accordance with the laws of Indiana to carry out the purposes of this grant, to which corporation this franchise and all interests thereunder shall be assigned, which articles of incorporation shall, among other matters, provide * * *" for the amount of the capital stock, for the placing of the entire capital stock under the control of five trustees who shall be stockholders in the company, for the order in which the earnings of such company shall be used, for the conveyance of the gas plant and property owned by such company to the City of Indianapolis to be owned and operated or leased by it upon the receipt by the certificate holders of the capital stock of such company, by dividends or otherwise, of an amount equal to the face value thereof together with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum, etc. The term of the franchise was for a period of twenty-five years from and after the date of its ratification or from August 30, 1905 and "thereafter all the rights of said company to occupy the streets and alleys of said city shall terminate and cease." Pursuant to the terms of this franchise, the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, was organized, and such franchise was assigned by the said Potts, Stalnaker and Schmidt to such company on May 24, 1906, by virtue of which it began its activities and began laying mains and supplying gas to the citizens of Indianapolis. The defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, was also providing gas to the citizens of Indianapolis at that time. This was prior to the enactment of the law providing that the Public Service Commission of Indiana should supervise all public utilities in the state and, therefore, gas was furnished the users of Indianapolis by both the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company for several years thereafter without such supervision.

407 At the time of the issuance and execution of such franchise contract and at the time of the organization of the defendant Citizens Gas Company, "there existed in the City of Indianapolis", as was said by this court in its Memorandum filed in the case of Todd vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al., In Equity No. 1191, "a rather peculiar situation. The supply of natural gas, which had been used by the citizens of the city for a number of years, had been practically exhausted. Much litigation had taken place with reference to the rights of the Consumers Gas Trust Company, under a franchise which it held with the city, as to whether or not such franchise gave it the right to supply artificial gas to the citizens of the City of Indianapolis. It had just been determined by the courts that the Consumers Gas Trust Company had no rights under its franchise, and therefore, the Board of Public Works and the City Council were anxious that a plant be erected for the purpose of supplying to the citizens of the City of Indianapolis artificial gas at as low a rate as possible. Profiting by its past experience, the city proceeded to negotiate the terms of a franchise whereby, in its opinion, the rights of its citizens would be protected against exhorbitant rates, and its beneficial interest in the property be fully preserved. That the city had this in mind is emphasized by the fact that under the terms of the franchise, it was mandatory upon the part of Potts, et al., that they form a corporation and incorporate into the Articles thereof certain provisions with reference to the issuance of beneficial certificates, the interest of such certificate holders, the appointment of trustees, the management of its affairs, etc. as a condition precedent to the issuance of such franchise." It was this situation which confronted the citiezns of Indianapolis and their public officials which gave birth to the franchise issued to Potts, et al., and to the organization of the defendant 408 Citizens Gas Company, which became the initial trustee of the Public Charitable Trust thus created, as adjudicated by the courts almost twenty-five years later. See—Todd v. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., 46 F. (2d) 855.

In order that competition be eliminated and gas furnished to the users thereof in Indianapolis by one company only, the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company, began negotiations in the early part of 1913 through Mr. Volney T. Malott, et al., looking to a merger of the systems of the two companies under the unified control and management of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company. These negotiations continued for a considerable length of time and finally consummated in the execution of the lease in question on September 30, 1913, in which all of the property of the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, was leased by it to the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, for a term of ninety-nine years under certain conditions and for a certain consideration as rental therein fully set forth. As a part of such rental, the lessee agreed to pay the sum of $120,000.00 per year, which sum is equal to a six per cent return upon the par value of the entire outstanding common capital stock of the lessor. The lessee further agreed to pay all interest charges upon the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the lessor, which, at that time, amounted to $4,833,000.00, and was later increased to a total principal of $6,881,000.00, the annual interest rate being five per cent. As a further part of the rental, the lessee was to pay all taxes of every kind and description, for which the lessor would become liable. The lease is a very lengthy one, and all the terms and conditions are therein fully set forth, of which the above are only a few.
409 Prior to the execution of the lease, the law creating the Public Service Commission of Indiana and giving it supervision over all public utilities within the state, known as the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act, had been enacted and was in force. By virture of the provisions of that law it was necessary to submit a lease of the character of the one in question to such Commission for its inspection and approval before it could become effective. Consequently such lease was submitted to such Commission upon a joint petition of both lessor and lessee, and approved by it. After its approval, the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, took possession of the leased property and continued to operate it in conjunction with its own property under the franchise theretofore granted by the City of Indianapolis until the 27th day of August, 1921, at which time, pursuant to the provisions of the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act, it surrendered its franchise, accepted an indeterminate permit and continued to operate thereunder as it had a legal right to do. On the same day it filed in the office of the Secretary of State a document containing certain amendments to its Articles of Incorporation. These amended articles provided for the manner of payment of the beneficial certificates similar to the original Articles, provided for the mortgaging or bonding of its property for a specific purpose, for the issuance of preferred stock, for the transfer of the property to the City of Indianapolis. The surrender of the franchise transferred to the Public Service Commission authority to regulate the business of the Citizens Gas Company insofar as its relation to the public is concerned and did not in any manner affect the validity of the franchise granted in 1905 by the City.

(Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra.)

410 On March 20, 1929, the defendant, City of Indianapolis, by resolution of its Board of Public Works, among other things, formally declared its intention to take over "all rights, title, interest and ownership of whatever nature and character" which were then held and owned by the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, and to exercise its rights as successor trustee of the Public Charitable Trust theretofore created. A copy of the resolution was served upon the said Gas Company and it, by resolutions of its directors, approved by its Board of Trustees on April 3, 1929, formally accepted the demands of the City and thereby resolved that it would proceed to carry out its obligations to its beneficial certificate holders and preferred stockholders and then convey its property and assets to the City in accordance with the provisions of its franchise, etc. Thereafter on, to-wit: April 30, 1929, Newton Todd, owner of a beneficial certificate of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, filed an action in this court in which the Citizens Gas Company, the voting trustees of its common stock, the City of Indianapolis, the Mayor, Clerk, and members of its Board of Public Works were defendants, in which action he sought, among other things, to enjoin the Citizens Gas Company and individual defendants from carrying into effect the resolutions theretofore adopted by them in which they recognized the existence of a trust and acknowledged the right of the City to take over the property and assets of the Gas Company as Trustee pursuant to the terms of its franchise, etc. In that action there was placed at issue for the first time for determination the question of whether there was, in fact, a Public Charitable Trust created by the franchise, etc. of 1905, and that question was answered in the affirmative by both this court and by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and 411 application for a writ of certiorari was denied by the Supreme Court of the United States on May 18, 1931. (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra.) Partially, if not entirely because of the delay occasioned by the litigation of the Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al. case, supra and the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212, which was instituted in a Superior Court of Marion County on May12, 1930, the transfer of the property from the Citizens Gas Company to the City was not made until September 9, 1935.

The defendant, Citizens Gas Company, paid, or caused to be paid, dividends to its common stockholders from the date of its organization to June 30, 1935 at the rate of ten per cent per annum upon the par value of such stock. By proper resolution of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, advertisement, etc., Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds were issued and sold during the month of May, 1935, and the proceeds thereof were received by the defendant City on June 27 of that year. From the proceeds of the sale of such bonds, the defendant City retired all of the common stock of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company at a cost of $2,500,000.00, which was in full payment of the par value thereof, together with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum. In addition thereto, the defendant City caused to be paid to the preferred stockholders of the defendant Citizens Gas Company on or about September 1, 1935 the sum of $1,050,000.00 in full satisfaction and redemption of all outstanding preferred stock. There was outstanding on August 12, 1935 bonds of the defendant Citizens Gas Company in the principal sum of $2,745,000.00, all of which, with the exception of $32,000.00 have been fully paid by the defendant City pursuant to resolution of its Board of Directors for Utilities.

On September 9, 1935, the defendant Citizens Gas Company executed and transmitted to the defendant City 412 as its successor trustee the following four instruments, to-wit: an instrument of Transfer and Assignment of Personal Property, Assignment of Lease assigning the lease in question, a Deed of conveyance of real estate and assignment of a lease to part of the Majestic Building in the City of Indianapolis, which said four instruments thus executed and transmitted purported to transfer to the defendant City, as Trustee, all of the property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company. There was included in such transfer cash or current funds in the sum of approximately $411,000.00. Prior to the transmittal of such four instruments by the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, there had been adopted by the defendant Board of Directors for Utilities a resolution rejecting the lease in question as a part of the assets of the trust transferred to it, and a copy of such resolution and a formal rejection of the lease was delivered to the attorney for the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, at the same time that he transmitted the four instruments of conveyance, including the assignment of such lease, to a representative of the said Board of Directors. The attorney for such defendant Gas Company, while acting on behalf of such company, had been advised by the defendant City on or about August 27, 1935 as to its attitude as to whether it would accept an assignment of such lease as a part of the assets of such company, and he knew such attitude at the time of the preparation and transmittal of such assignment. Such attorney knew at the time of the preparation of the assignment and at the time he transmitted physically the four instruments of conveyance above set forth that the City would, in turn, deliver physically to him a written rejection of such lease. The four instruments of conveyance were, however, turned over physically by him to a representative of the defendant City and all, including the assignment, were placed of record by such representative in the Recorder's Office of Marion County, Indiana.

413 The defendant City, as Trustee, took possession of all the property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, immediately following its transfer and began its operation and continued to operate such property and supply gas to the citizens of Indianapolis continuously since that date. In such operation it has operated the plant of the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, in the same physical manner as it had been theretofore operated by the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, under an agreement, however, with said The Indianapolis Gas Company that such operation would not prejudice the rights of either the City or the said Gas Company; neither would such operation be a recognition of the validity of such lease on behalf of the City nor an admission of its invalidity on behalf of such Gas Company.

On March 2, 1936, the defendant, City, and The Indianapolis Gas Company, entered into a written agreement with reference to the continued operation of the plant of such Gas Company pending a settlement or judicial determination of the dispute over the validity of the lease in question. By the terms of such agreement, the defendant City was to continue the use of the property of the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, the same as theretofore, and was to deposit with the escrow agent, The Indiana National Bank, of Indianapolis, sums of money equal to the payments required under such lease, such sums to be held by such agent and paid out by it pursuant to any settlement agreement or, upon judicial determination that the lease was valid, the entire amount should be paid to the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company. If, however, the lease is held to be invalid as to the defendant City or the property acquired by it, then reasonable compensation for the use of the mortgaged property (fixed by agreement or by the court) shall be paid by the escrow agent to the Indianapolis Gas Company, and the balance paid to the City of Indianapolis. This contract also 414 provides for the payment of the sum of approximately $171,000.00 to The Indianapolis Gas Company on or before March 25, being an amount equal to the interest due upon the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company to March 30, 1936. This provision, as well as all other provisions of the contract, has been fully complied with by the defendant City. No interest upon such bonds has been paid to the bondholders since that date, but a sum sufficient to pay such interest is upon deposit with the escrow agent. In addition, all taxes due upon the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company, as well as all income taxes, have been fully paid by the City, and all needed repairs of its property have been made by the City. This agreement further provides that neither its execution nor the carrying out of its provisions is to prejudice the rights of either the defendant City or the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, or to be construed as an admission of either the validity or invalidity of the lease on the part of either of them. On March 11, 1936, and prior to the payment by the defendant City of the sum of $171,000.00 above referred to, and prior to the payment of any sums by it to the escrow agent under the contract of March 2, the plaintiff was advised of the execution of such contract, and of its terms and conditions.

Under the issues presented at this hearing, there are submitted five questions for determination:

First: As bearing upon the question of jurisdiction—whether there is, in fact, as shown by the evidence, a collision of interest between the plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, or whether the collision as shown by the allegations of the bill of complaint is apparent only and was actually 415 brought about by the collusion of the plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon this court, as charged in the answer of the defendant, City of Indianapolis.

Second: If the answer to the first question is that there is, in fact, a collision of interest between the plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, as charged in the bill of complaint, that such collision is real, not brought about by the collusion of the plaintiff and said defendant, as charged in the answer of the defendant City, and that this court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues presented, then, in logical sequence, the next and primary question to be determined is whether the lease of September 30, 1913, entered into upon that date by and between the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company, is valid and enforceable as against the defendant City, as successor trustee, and the questions of estoppel presented by plaintiff.

Third: The amount of the judgment to be rendered in favor of plaintiff against the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, because of the default in the payment of the due and unpaid interest upon the bonds of said company.

416 Fourth: The liability of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, and, if liable, the extent of such liability.

Fifth: The liability of the defendant, City of Indianapolis, and, if liable, the extent of such liability under the limited issues here presented.

These questions will be considered and determined in the order presented. If, however, it is determined that this court has no jurisdiction because of collusion, then it will not be necessary to consider any of the questions presented, except the first above enumerated.

The question of whether there was any collision of interest between the plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, as shown by the averments contained in the bill of complaint and averments contained in the answer of the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, was determined by this court adversely to the contention of plaintiff when originally presented in August, 1937. At that time this court was of the opinion that, as shown by the pleadings, the interests of plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, were identical; that the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, was an indispensable party; that said defendant Gas Company should be realigned as a party plaintiff and when thus aligned the bill of complaint should be dismissed because diversity of citizenship, upon which jurisdiction depends would then be destroyed, since both The Indianapolis Gas Company and the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, are Indiana corporations and as such are citizens of that state. Consequently, the bill was dismissed, but, upon appeal by plaintiff to the Circuit Court of Appeals the case was reversed and in the course of its opinion upon the question of realignment that court said: "While it seems apparent 417 that the essential question involved is whether the lease in question is enforceable against the City, and that both appellant and the Indianapolis Company are so contending, yet there are other important questions which give rise to controversies between appellant and the Indianapolis Company. * * * If it be conceded, however, that appellant and the Indianapolis Company occupy a similar position with respect to the validity and enforcement of the lease against the City, yet we think there are sufficient matters in controversy between them to prevent the latter from being aligned with appellant as plaintiff. The rule seems to be that before such realignment may be required, the parties must be in substantial accord upon all issues presented." Chase National Bank, etc. v. Citizens Gas Com- pany, et al., 96 F. (2d) 363. Thus it is established as the law of this case that collision of interests between plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, as shown by the pleadings, does exist. Hence this court does have jurisdiction unless it is shown by the evidence that there is no actual collision of interest and that such collision as is shown by the pleadings is apparent only and the result of collusion, as charged in the answer of the defendant City. In that event jurisdiction is destroyed. (28 USCA 80.)

It is the contention of the defendant City that the collision of interest asserted in the pleadings "is apparent only and has been brought about as the result of collusion and concert between" the plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company. Thus, the question of collusion as a fact between such parties is open for decision, such issue being presented by subdivision 26 of the answer of the defendant City in which it is alleged "that the plaintiff has no right to maintain this action and that this suit is 418 a collusive one." This subdivision of answer contains certain alleged facts upon which such defendant relies to establish collusion between such parties in the institution and maintenance of this action, among which are "(e) That the Indianapolis Gas Company has cooperated with plaintiff in the preparation of the complaint in this cause". Even though it has been heretofore decided that there is a collision of interests between the plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, upon the face of the pleadings, that decision does not preclude the court from making inquiry as to collusion, as a fact, when that issue is presented by the issues as in the instant case. It now becomes a question of fact to be determined from the evidence as to whether or not there was collusion, as charged, and, if so, this court is deprived of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Hartog v. Memory, 116 U. S. 588, 29 L. Ed. 725, thus held, wherein in the course of its opinion, it said: "If in the course of a trial it appears by the evidence, which is admissible under the pleadings and pertinent to the issues joined * * * that the parties have been improperly or collusively made or joined for the purpose of creating a cognizable case, the court may stop all further proceedings and dismiss the suit."

United States v. Butterworth-Judson Corporation, 269 U. S. 504, 46 S. Ct. 179, 70 L. Ed. 380.

At the outset it may be observed that it is apparent that both the plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, preferred the Federal Court in which to institute and maintain this litigation. The plaintiff in its brief says: "There is no secret about the fact that the Trustee preferred the jurisdiction of the Federal Court." It also said in its brief that, "It may be—though the evidence does not expressly show the fact—that Indiana-419 apolis Gas also preferred the jurisdiction of the Federal Court." That such preferences existed and were actually expressed either verbally or in exchange of letters between such parties prior to and at the time of the institution of this action and since its institution there can be no doubt, but such expressions of preference are insufficient to constitute collusion. Litigants have the right to select the forum of their choice in the institution and maintenance of an action so long as no improper acts which constitute collusion are resorted to for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the court in which such action is instituted and maintained. This principle of law was well stated many years ago by Mr. Justice Pecknam in the case of In Re Metropolitan Railway Receivership, 208 U. S. 90; 28 S. Ct. 219; 52 L. Ed. 403, as follows: "That the parties preferred to take the subject matter of the litigation into the Federal Courts, instead of proceeding in one of the courts of the state, is not wrongful. So long as no improper act was done by which the jurisdiction of the Federal Court attached, the motive for bringing the suit there is unimportant." With this principle of law, the defendant City, in its brief, agrees; however, it asserts that the acts and conduct of the plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, went far beyond the bounds fixed by this principle in an effort to confer jurisdiction upon this court, and that such acts and conduct, as a fact, amount to collusion.

The charge of collusion greatly exceeds an agreement or understanding between a plaintiff and defendant that an action will be begun by plaintiff against the defendant in a certain court and, in fact, it extends beyond the joint preparation by them of a bill of complaint or of the assistance of either of them in such preparation. A 420 defendant may agree to be sued in a Federal Court, may make suggestions as to allegations to be contained in the complaint and may assist in its preparation, but so long as there are no improper or fraudulent acts done in such agreement and no allegations made in the complaint which are untrue and unprovable, known to be such at the time made, and made fraudulently and intentionally for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the court, no collusion exists. As was said by Judge Sparks in the case of Lincoln Printing Company v. Middle West Utilities Company, 74 F. (2d) 779, "The mere fact that a debtor or his attorneys have previously arranged with a creditor for the filing of the bill does not render the action fraudaulent."

The provisions of the statute upon which defendant City relies which give this court authority to dismiss this action upon the ground of collusion is found in Section 37 of the Judicial Code, as follows. "If in any suit commenced in a district court * * * it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said district court, at any time after such suit has been brought * * * that the parties to said suit have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiff or defendant, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable * * * the said district court shall proceed no further therein, but shall dismiss the suit * * *." (28 U. S. C. A. 80.) As defined by Bouvier's Dictionary, and as accepted by the courts, the term "collusion", as used in this section of the statute, means "an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law or to obtain an object forbidden by law." When collusion exists, fraud must be present and is implied from the very acts which constitute the collusion. Mr. Justice McKenna, speaking in the case of Wheeler, et al. v. Denver, supra, said: "The sole question is whether there was collusion to give the court jurisdiction of the cause; and, of course, the existence of collusion implies the existence of fraud." See—Cashman v. Amador & Sacramento Canal Company, et al., 118 U. S. 58; 30 L. Ed. 72. It was also said, in the case of Lincoln Printing Co. 421 v. Middle West Utilities Co., supra, "It is clear that there must be fraud before there can be collusion and it has been so held in construing Section 37 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. A. 80) which authorizes the dismissal of suits in federal courts for collusion." In re Metropolitan Receivership, supra.

There can be no doubt but that both plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, have at all times asserted that the lease in question is valid and is binding upon the City, as Trustee. Neither is there any doubt as to their interest in sustaining the validity of such lease at the time of the institution of this action, prior hereto, and at all times subsequent thereto, and that many conferences have been held by and between them, through their attorneys, and many letters have passed between them relating to this subject. Many such meetings were held and much corespondence had before the commencement of this action, and many have been held and much correspondence had since that time. Some of these conferences and exchange of correspondence related to the preparation and filing of the complaint. The subject matter under discussion related to the drafting of and allegations to be contained in such complaint, as well as to the court in which it was to be filed. Later conferences were held and correspondence exchanged relating to the preparation and filing of briefs upon law questions presented in this court, as well as in the Circuit Court of Appeals. Each of the parties charged with collusion contending at all times that this court had jurisdiction, that the lease in question is valid and is a binding obligation upon the defendant City, as successor trustee.

Many months prior to the commencement of this action, and at a time when there was a difference of opinion between attorneys for the defendants City and The Indianapolis Gas Company as to the validity of such lease, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, tendered employment to Newton D. Baker, Esq., an eminent lawyer of Cleveland, Ohio, as special counsel to make an investigation as to its validity and render a legal opinion thereon.

He accepted such employment and rendered an opin-422 ion, as requested. Later, when the parties were unable to adjust their differences and arrive at an agreement, it was decided by The Indianapolis Gas Company and the plaintiff that a suit should be instituted. The common stockholders of that company, of course, had a vital interest in the question of the validity of the lease because, if the lease is valid, they are assured of a six per cent return upon their stock for many years. If, however, a foreclosure suit should have been begun, or if the lease is invalid, no such return is assured. It was natural, therefore, that the Gas Company should take an active interest in the litigation and attempt to guide it along the course that would be most advantageous to it and to its stockholders. This interest gave rise to the many conferences and to the correspondence between such company and plaintiff. Since Mr. Baker had already investigated the question of the validity of the lease it would seem natural and logical that he be employed to institute and maintain the suit, if his employment could be effected. Consistent with his life, his high idea of ethics and his duty as a lawyer, when employment was tendered by plaintiff, he refused to accept such employment until released by The Indianapolis Gas Company. It is not disclosed from the evidence that he obtained any information during his employment by such Gas Company which would be inimical to its interests and, therefore, he would be at liberty to accept employment by the plaintiff if released by it. This was regularly done on May 12, 1936, and this suit begun by his firm on June 8, 1936.

In the case of Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176
423 U. S. 181, 20 S. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423, it was said that collusion "implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means or of lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose; but if the action be founded upon a just judgment and be conducted according to the forms of law and with a due regard to the rights of parties, it is no defense that the plaintiff may have had some ulterior object in view beyond the recovery of a judgment, so long as such object was not an unlawful one."

Before collusion can be said to exist, the evidence must establish some improper or fraudulent acts upon the part of the plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, knowingly and intentionally done for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon and maintaining this action in this court. No allegations of the complaint have been shown by the evidence to have been falsely or fraudulently made for jurisdictional purposes, and no acts or conduct of such parties, either before or since the institution of this action, can be so construed as to constitute collusion. The prior decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals holding that this court has jurisdiction is, therefore, the law of the case and is binding upon the court. Chase National Bank, Trustee, etc. v. Citizens Gas Company, supra.

In considering the question of the validity of the lease, it must be kept in mind at all times that such lease was entered into by and between a corporation on the one hand as lessor with broad general powers to contract and a quasi-public corporation on the other hand as lessee with limited powers, organized for a specific purpose, that plaintiff, as trustee for the bondholders, has such an interest in the lease as to give it authority to maintain this action and seek to uphold its validity. It is its position that the lease is valid and, as stated in oral argument, is enforceable against the City as successor trustee as against all of the property which it acquired from its predecessor trustee and the income to be derived from its operation.

It is the contention of plaintiff, in seeking a declaratory judgment that the lease is a binding obligation upon the defendant City and upon the property transferred to it by the Citizens Gas Company, first, that the defendant City exercised its option to take all the property of such Gas Company and discharge the obligations of such company to its stockholders and bondholders and that it had the right only to take all of such property, including the lease, or none, or, in the alternative if it had the right to take only a part of such property, which plaintiff denies, it affirmatively decided to take all of it and cannot afterwards change its mind; second, that the right of the defendant City to become trustee and administer the trust carried with it the obligation of accepting the property subject to all outstanding legal obligations created by its predecessor trustee and that the lease was one of such obligations; third, that there was an actual acceptance of the four instruments of conveyance by the defendant City which expressly provided that the transfer was made 425 subject to all outstanding obligations and that by the acceptance of the assignment of the lease, as one of such four instruments and taking possession of the leased property, it became liable, by privity of estate, for the obligations under the lease; fourth, that the City is estopped by judgment (a) the order of the Public Service Commission in which the lease was approved is binding upon it, (b) the decree in the case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., 193 Ind. 282, is an adjudication of the validity of the lease and is therefore binding upon the City, (c) the judgment in the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, is an adjudication of the validity of the lease and is binding upon the City; fifth, that the defendant City is estopped by its own conduct and precluded by its own laches from denying the validity of the lease; and, sixth, that the defendant City is liable under the indemnity agreement for all liabilities and obligations of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company. It is the contention of the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas

Company, that the lease is valid and is a binding obligation upon the defendant City as successor trustee and upon all the property transferred to it by the Citizens Gas Company, predecessor trustee, and now operated by the City. In general, the argument advanced by it to sustain its position is similar to that advanced by plaintiff. With reference to the right of the defendant City to take over the lease as a part of the trust estate, it asserts that the Act of the General Assembly, approved March 11, 1929, is ample authority. The defendant, Citizens Gas Com-
426 pany, in its answer and in its brief, "takes no position upon the issues between the City of Indianapolis and the plaintiff." That is to say, it takes no position with reference to the validity or invalidity of the lease but contents itself by asserting that it has fully performed its obligations and duties as original trustee, including all obligations and duties imposed under the lease, and that it is therefore, released from any further obligations or liability under the trust, including the lease, both as to the plaintiff and as to the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company.

On the other hand, it is the contention of the defendant City that, contrary to the contentions of plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, it did not assume the obligations of the lease in taking over the property of its trust, but that it specifically refused to assume such obligations and gave notice of such refusal both before and at the time of the transfer of the property by the Citizens Gas Company; that the right to administer the trust, as trustee, carried with it no obligation to accept a 99 year lease entered into by its predecessor trustee; that there was no legal acceptance by it of the assignment of the lease, but that on the contrary it was simply given the physical possession of such assignment along with the other three instruments, and that it delivered to the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, a written refusal to accept such lease at the same time as the transmittal of such assignment; that the defendant City is not estopped either by judgment or in equity from denying the validity of the lease, and that there is no

At the time of the execution of the first instrument looking to the creation of the trust in 1905, that is, the franchise, the Citizens Gas Company was not yet in existence. It came into being the following year, and its very existence was brought about by the necessity of providing a corporation to administer the trust for a period not longer than twenty-five years, pursuant to the mandate contained in the franchise granted by the City through its public officials the preceding year. In order that funds might be available for the carrying out of the plan contained in the franchise, it became necessary to sell stock in the corporation. This was done, stock was sold and funds were subscribed and paid by the public, which funds were used to purchase the property and plant of the Consumers Gas Trust Company which was winding up its business and, thus, this property became the original trust res. Pursuant to authority vested in it by its franchise, Articles of Incorporation, By-Laws, etc., the Citizens Gas Company began operation and began supplying the citizens of Indianapolis with gas through its system of mains, etc. As its customers increased, it became necessary that it extend its mains, and this necessarily meant that it was compelled to acquire additional pipes, connections, machinery, etc. It was the intent and purpose of the citizens who originated the idea of the formation of the trust and of the City through its Board of Public Works which granted the franchise that competition be had for The Indianapolis Gas Company which was operating and supplying gas to the citizens of Indianapolis at that time and thus be enabled to supply gas to such citizens at a cheaper rate. After the 428 two companies had operated for several years it was deemed advisable by the Citizens Gas Company and thought by it to be to the best interests of the gas users of Indianapolis that one company only be permitted to supply their needs in that direction. Consequently, negotiations were begun which consummated in the execution of the lease in question, and from that time on the Citizens Gas Company operated the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company in conjunction with its own until transferred to the City. At the time the property of the Citizens Gas Company, as trustee, was thus transferred, it was the contention of the City that the lease was not a part and parcel of such property, and it therefore declined to accept it as such. This it had a legal right to do, pending the adjudication of that question. The fact that it and plaintiff do not agree as to such lease being a part of the trust res and therefore binding upon the City, does not mean that, because it exercised its right to take over the trust, the City must take over the lease as a part thereof before the question of its validity is adjudicated. It simply means that the question of whether or not such lease is a part of the res is yet to be determined and that the City was acting within its rights in asserting its position and declining to thus accept it at the time of its attempted assignment. The authorities cited by plaintiff to the effect that a trustee cannot take over a part of the assets of a trust and refuse others have no application 429 because it had not yet been determined that the lease is a part of such assets at the time the City exercised its rights to take over the property and hence at that time could not be said legally to be a part of such assets. If it is finally determined that the lease is valid it then, of course, becomes a part of the trust res and the City, as trustee, must accept it and be bound by its terms in the administration of its trust. If, on the other hand, the lease is held to be invalid, it is no part of the trust res and the City is not obligated by its terms. Until the time of the final determination of the validity of the lease, the City, as trustee, is acting within its rights in carrying out the contract entered into by and between defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, and itself and by depositing the money provided by that contract with the escrow agent, and no inference as to the validity or invalidity of the lease can be drawn therefrom. There is no evidence that the City did intend to take over such lease at the time it exercised its right to take over the property, but on the contrary all of the evidence is to the effect that it did not so intend, and that it had so notified the Citizens Gas Company a considerable length of time in advance of the transfer of the property and served a written rejection on it at the time of the transmittal of the instruments of conveyance. As a matter of fact, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, knew of the attitude of the City with reference to the validity of the lease and of its intention to reject it several weeks in advance of the transfer of the property and, by agreement with it, operation was continued as theretofore pending an adjustment or adjudication. While no legal obligation de-430 volved upon the City to notify plaintiff in advance of its taking over the trust of its attitude with respect to the validity of the lease, yet it would seem that no effort was made by either it or the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, to conceal its attitude in that respect. Within ten days following the transfer of the property to the City, an inquiry went forward from plaintiff addressed to defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, concerning this matter, in which it was stated that it was "receiving numerous inquiries from holders of bonds of the above described issue with respect to newspaper reports that the City Utilities District is attempting to abrogate the lease made by your company with the Citizens Gas Company in 1913."

There were prepared and executed by the Citizens Gas Company four instruments which covered all of the property owned and operated by it, as trustee. One of these instruments of conveyance was the assignment of the lease. All of these instruments were physically transmitted by a representative of such Gas Company to a representative of the defendant City. However, at the same time and as a part of the same transaction, there was delivered by the defendant City to such representative of the Gas Company a written rejection of the lease. In fact, the Citizens Gas Company knew at the time of the execution and transmittal of such assignment that it would be rejected by the City. It was, no doubt, attempting to protect itself insofar as it could against any liability being asserted against it as lessee in such lease because of any failure upon its part to discharge its duty. It cannot be said as a matter of law under the evidence 431 that because there was physically delivered to the City the written assignment of the lease and that it was actually recorded in the Recorder's Office, it was in legal effect an acceptance of the lease on the part of the defendant City. In reality the transaction constituted simply a tender on the part of the Citizens Gas Company of an assignment of the lease and a rejection of such assignment on the part of the City. No legal conclusions or inferences tending to bind the City by such transaction can be drawn therefrom.

As a part of the transaction when the property of the Citizens Gas Company was transferred to the defendant City, as trustee, on September 9, 1935, there was executed by the City and delivered to such Gas Company an Indemnity Agreement wherein, "in consideration of the * * * * conveyance, transfer and assignment as aforesaid, it is agreed by the City * * * * that it will hereafter well and sufficiently save, defend, keep harmless and indemnify the said Citizens Gas Company * * * * from any and all loss, damage, costs, charges, liabilities or expense on account of any pending actions or suits which have heretofore been instituted against said Company and on account of any actions or suits which may hereafter be brought against said Company, arising from any and all acts or actions or omissions to act on the part of said Company of any nature whatsoever." A careful reading and study of this agreement will disclose the fact that it was given solely for the purpose of indemnifying the Gas Company against any loss or liability which it might sustain because of any actions then pending or thereafter be-432 gun against it. It executed and transmitted to the defendant City an assignment of the lease along with all other instruments of conveyance and therefore performed its duty in that regard insofar as it was possible for it to do so. No judgment has yet been rendered against the Gas Company as to any liability under the lease, therefore no liability as yet arises against the City under such agreement, and such Company has not yet sustained any loss as contemplated by such agreement unless it be the cost and expenses incurred in the defense of this action, which are doubtless covered by such agreement. The acts of the City in the execution of this agreement cannot be construed so as to require it to carry out the terms of the lease In construing this instrument, effect must be given to the acts and intentions of the parties at the time of its execution, as well as to the language of the agreement. Such acts and intentions, as well as the language of the agreement, are all contrary to the contention of plaintiff as to the effect of its execution.

The Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act was in effect at the time of the execution of the lease in question on September 30, 1913. It therefore became necessary to have such lease approved by the Public Service Commission before it could become effective. This approval was given upon a joint petition of the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company, as lessor, and the Citizens Gas Company, as lessee. One of the stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company and a citizen of Indianapolis, Frank S. Fishback, intervened in the proceeding before the Public Service Commission and sought to prevent the approval 433 of the lease by that body. In this he failed, and a petition for a rehearing was denied. Having thus failed in his attempts before the Public Service Commission to prevent the approval of the lease, Fishback instituted an action in the Superior Court of Marion County wherein he sought to have vacated and set aside the order of the Commission in thus approving it. Defendants to this action were the Public Service Commission of Indiana, The Indianapolis Gas Company, Citizens Gas Company, and The City of Indianapolis. It was his contention among others in that suit that the rentals fixed under the lease were excessive and their payment would result in the Citizens Gas Company's being unable to pay its stockholders dividends as required; that such Gas Company was without power to execute the lease without the consent of the owners of three-fourths in amount of its capital stock; that the City of Indianapolis had not given its consent to its execution; that the order of the Commission was contrary to the law and the evidence; that the provisions in the lease requiring the Citizens Gas Company to pay interest upon the bonds and dividends upon the stock of The Indianapolis Gas Company constituted an impairment of the contract between the Citizens Gas Company and himself and other stockholders for the payment of a fixed dividend to them, etc. Many other contentions were contained in the complaint, but the aforementioned are the essential ones. The defendant City filed an answer in general denial, but all other de-434 fendants filed demurrers. The separate and several demurrers of defendants were sustained and, plaintiff refusing to plead further, judgment was rendered against him. Prior to the entry of final judgment, however, the suit was dismissed as to the City on motion of plaintiff, and it was not a party to the final judgment. An appeal to the Supreme Court of Indiana was attempted, but not having been perfected within time, it was dismissed by the Supreme Court. Hoback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra.

On May 12, 1930, one Allen G. Williams, a resident and citizen of Indianapolis, commenced an action in a Superior Court of Marion County against the Citizens Gas Company, The Indianapolis Gas Company, the City of Indianapolis, the Trustees under the Mortgage of The Indianapolis Gas Company, the Mayor, City Clerk, Board of Public Works, Board of Trustees and Directors for the Department of Utilities of Indianapolis, and the Public Service Commission. This was intended as a class suit by plaintiff, as it was alleged by him to be on behalf of himself and all other persons similarly situated. The nature of the suit, as stated in the opinion of the Supreme Court, was: "Suit by appellant (Williams) to establish a trust; to quiet title to property of the trust estate; to recover diverted assets of the trust estate; to recapture the trust and its propery from delinquent and insolvent trustees and sequester the same with receiverships; to administer the trust during an emergency and at the end of the emergency turn over the trust and its property to its lawful beneficiaries." To the 435 complaint in the Superior Court certain defendants filed a motion to strike out certain parts of the complaint, which motion was sustained in part and overruled in part. Afterwards, all defendants filed separate demurrers to the complaint, which were sustained, judgment rendered against the plaintiff, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana. The errors relied upon were (1) the action of the trial court in sustaining a motion to strike out certain allegations of the complaint, and (2) the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint. The case was affirmed. Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra.

It is the contention of plaintiff that the decision of the Public Service Commission in approving the lease is conclusive upon the parties before it, and that it cannot be collaterally attacked; that the City was a party to such proceeding and is, therefore, bound by its decision. It is its further contention that the question of the validity of the lease was adjudicated in both the case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra, and the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra; that these cases are res adjudicata of that subject and that, therefore, there is in this case an estoppel by judgment. On the other hand, it is the contention of the defendant City that "the judgments in the Fishback * * * * and Williams cases are not res adjudicata of the enforceability against the City of the lease" and that it is not precluded by the action of the Public Service Commission in litigating the validity of the lease in this action.

In the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, the question of the validity of the lease was not in issue and was not adjudicated. Neither were the parties the same. Neither the plaintiff in this action nor The Indianapolis Gas Company was a party in that case. In that case, for the first time, the question of whether or not there was created, in 1905 and 1906, by the 436 franchise and other instruments then executed, a public charitable trust of which the Citizens Gas Company was the original trustee was presented and adjudicated.

In the proceeding before the Public Service Commission in 1913 in which the lease was approved, the defendant

City was not a party as trustee of a public charitable trust. It was not a party to the lease in any capacity and was simply representing the public interest in its appearance before the Commission. The Acts of the Public Service Commission were administrative in character, and not judicial. Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra. It is the law, however, that an order of the Commission based upon facts and while acting within its jurisdiction cannot be collaterally attacked in a court proceeding. Public Service Commission, et al. v. City of Indianapolis, et al., 193 Ind. 37. The instant case is not, however, a collateral attack, because that order cannot, upon the facts before the Commission, be said to have determined the rights of the defendant City, as trustee of a public charitable trust. It did not assume the duties of its trust for almost twenty-two years thereafter, and the term of the lease extends for a period of more than seventy-seven years beyond the time when it did assume such duties. The legal questions as to the validity of the lease presented in this case were foreign to the proceedings before the Commission and, in fact, as a matter of law, such legal questions could not have been determined by it. In its administrative acts it looks to the public interest and cannot adjudicate private rights of persons not parties to a proceeding. Neither the plaintiff in this action nor any person representing the bondholders nor any of the bondholders was a party to such proceed-437 ing, and since it is admitted by plaintiff that the consideration contained in the lease must be paid by the defendant City, as trustee, from the proceeds of the trust or from income derived therefrom, the City, as trustee of such trust, was not a party. See—In re Northwestern Indiana Telephone Company, et al., 201 Ind. 667. It will, therefore, be seen that the order of the Public Service Commission does not constitute an adjudication of the validity of the lease so as to bind the defendant City, as trustee, in this action.

In the case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra, the judgment was rendered upon demurrer being sustained to the complaint. In that action, it is true, that the City of Indianapolis was a party defendant in the Superior Court. It was a party, however, in its individual capacity, and not as trustee of a public charitable trust. In considering the question of res adjudicata or estoppel by judgment as pertains to that case, it must also be kept in mind that, even though the City filed an answer in general denial, no issue of fact as between Fishback and the City was ever determined, the case having been dismissed by him as to the City before the rendition of a final judgment. Furthermore, neither the plaintiff in this action nor any trustee for the bondholders, nor any individual bondholder was a party to that action and, hence, was not a party to the final judgment. Even though a public charitable trust did, in law, exist at the time of entry of the judgment in the Fishback case, no such contention was made by him or any other party to that action, that subject never having been presented, until six years later, when it was asserted in the Todd case.

438 In the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, the judgment was, also, rendered upon demurrer being sustained to the complaint. At the time of the commencement of that action, at the time of the final judgment in the Superior Court, and at the time of the decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana affirming the trial court, the defendant City was not the trustee and it did not assume such duties until many months thereafter. The question of the enforceability of the lease as against the City, as trustee, was not in issue in that suit. The question of whether or not the length of the term of the lease was such as to make it unenforceable as against the City, as successor trustee, was not adjudicated in that action and could not have been adjudicated therein because the City had not yet succeeded the Citizens Gas Company, as trustee. It is a fact that the question as to there being in existence a public charitable trust had been previously adjudicated but the provision in the lease with respect to the length of the term thereby created, hereinafter referred to, was not construed in that case, the court saying that * * * * "The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the Commission in approving the same." The questions presented in that case and which were pertinent under the issues were entirely different and were surrounded with an entirely different set of facts from those presented in this case. Only the facts well pleaded in the complaint were before the court in that case.

439 It seems that a final judgment rendered sustaining a demurrer to a complaint may be relied upon as res adjudicata or estoppel by judgment upon the facts therein well pleaded, the same as though there had been a final judgment rendered upon the merits sustaining the same facts. By the filing of a demurrer, all facts well pleaded are admitted. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Gould v. Evansville, et al., 91 U. S. 526; 23 L. Ed. 416: "Decided cases may be found in which it is questioned whether a former judgment can be a bar to a subsequent action, even for the same cause, if it appears that the first judgment was rendered on demurrer; but it is settled law, that it makes no difference in principle whether the facts upon which the court proceeded were proved by competent evidence, or whether they were admitted by the parties; and that the admission, even by way of a demurrer to a pleading in which the facts are alleged, is just as available to the opposite party as if the admission was made ore tenus before a jury. * * * * Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. 99." See, Bissel v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 225, 8 S. Ct. 495, 31 L. Ed. 411. Northern Pacific Railway Company v. Slaght, 27 S. Ct. 442. Gould on Pleading, Sec. 42. Stuck v. Town of Beech Grove, 201 Ind. 66, 163 N. E. 483. In considering the doctrine of res adjudicata or estoppel by judgment, it is said in the case of Burrell v. Jean, 196 Ind. 187, 146 N. E. 754, at page 759, that "In these considerations, it is important to remember that 'The party who invokes the doctrine of former adjudication must be one who tendered to the other an issue to 440 which the latter could have demurred or pleaded.' In other words, 'Ordinarily, four things must occur before the principles of res adjudicata can be invoked; (1) A suit. (2) A Final Judgment. (3) Identity of Subject Matter. (4) Identity of Parties. Jones v. Vert, 121 Ind. 140, 22 N. E. 882, 16 Am. St. Rep. 379. Another rule, and one which is said to be the best test for determining whether a former judgment is a bar to a present action, is; Will the same identical evidence support the issue tendered in both actions. Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) 259." In the case of Whitsell, et al. v. Strickler, et al., 167 Ind. 602, 78 N. E. 845, the court said, "* * * * stated more generally, when two or more defendants make issues with the plaintiff, a judgment determining those issues in favor of the defendants settles between them no fact that might have been, but was not, put in issue by a proper pleading." Again, in the case of Wiltrout v. Showers, 118 N. W. 1080, the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska said: "The rule of law is well settled that parties to a judgment are not bound by it in a subsequent action, unless they were adverse parties in the original action. The bar of former adjudication can only be raised between those who were adverse parties in the former suit, and the judgment in the former suit settles nothing as to the relative rights or liability of co-defendants 441 as between themselves unless their conflicting claims were put in issue by cross petition or adverse answers and were actually litigated and adjudicated." Furthermore, the defendant City was not a party to any of the proceedings which plaintiff contends constitute an estoppel in its capacity as trustee of a public charitable trust, and, therefore, any judgment rendered in either of such proceedings is not binding upon it in such capacity. As was said by the Supreme Court of Indiana, in the case of Lord, et al v. Wilcox, 99 Ind. 491, "As a general rule, judgments conclude the parties only in the character in which they sue or are sued." See, also, Craighead v. Dalton, 105 Ind. 72; Erwin v. Garner, 108 Ind. 488; Bumb v. Gard, 107 Ind. 575; McBurnie v. Seaton, 111 Ind. 56; Jones v. Vest, supra. The Indiana Appellate Court, in the case of Copeland v. Brunning, 44 Ind. App. 405, said, "It is the settled law that parties to a judicial proceeding are bound by the decision and judgment in such proceeding, in the capacity and right in which they appear, and not otherwise." Bigelow on Estoppel, 65. Applying these principles to the cases of Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra, and Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, neither is res adjudicata in this action, nor do the judgments in those cases constitute an estoppel. There was a suit and a final judgment in each case, but the identity of the parties was not the same, and neither was the identity of the subject matter the same, nor was the City a party to either in its fiduciary capacity. The facts were essentially different and were 442 only those pleaded in the complaints. In the Fishback case, the defendant City was not even a party to the final judgment, and in the Williams case neither was the subject-matter the same as between plaintiff and defendant City, nor was any issue tendered by the plaintiff in this action, the party seeking to invoke the doctrine of former adjudication, to the defendant City in this action in any capacity, the party against whom the doctrine is sought to be invoked, as pertaining to the validity of the lease or any other subject. Neither did the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, tender any issue as to the validity of the lease to the defendant City.

Neither is the position taken by the City in the proceedings before the Public Service Commission, supra, the case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., supra, the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, nor the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, as shown by the records and briefs, sufficient to constitute an estoppel.

It is the further contention of plaintiff that the defendant City, because of its acts and conduct extending over a period of years following the execution of the lease, is estopped from denying its validity, and that it is guilty of laches. Under the law, before the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked, the person seeking to invoke it must have been influenced by the acts and representations made by the party against whom such doctrine is sought to be invoked, and must have actually relied upon such acts and representations. These are questions of factual proof of which plaintiff in this action has the burden of 443 establishing. It was, also, said by the Supreme Court of Indiana in the case of Horford v. Johnson, et al., 74 Ind. 480, that the following elements are necessarily present to support a decree of estoppel, (1) a representation or concealment of a material fact, (2) the representation must have been made with knowledge of the facts upon the part of the one making such representation, (3) the party to whom the representation was made must have been ignorant or uninformed as to its truthfulness, (4) the representation must have been made with the intent and purpose of influencing the other party to act upon it, and (5) the other party must have acted upon such representation so made. See—Simpson, et al. v. Pearson, Admr., 31 Ind. 1. McCabe, et al. v. Raney, 32 Ind. 309. Ross, et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120. In considering the question of estoppel, consideration must be given to the capacity in which the defendant City was acting at the time of the commission of the acts which are asserted by the plaintiff to have constituted estoppel. It must be kept in mind that the defendant City did not become trustee and take over the administration of its trust until September 9, 1935. Any of its acts prior to that time were done by it in its individual capacity and not in its fiduciary capacity. At the time of the approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission, the City was acting only in the public interest and not in any sense in its capacity as trustee of a public charitable trust. In fact, as heretofore stated, it was not adjudicated that such a trust did exist for approximately seventeen years thereafter. At least two of the stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company at that time denied the existence of such a trust—Todd and Cotter. By the very term of the franchise, the City had twenty-five years from its grant 444 to exercise its rights and take over the property of the Citizens Gas Company. It proceeded to exercise such right within that period. Prior to the time of its actual taking over of the property, it exercised no control and could not exercise any control over it, and had no means of controlling the actions of the Citizens Gas Company. It is true that more than $2,000,000.00 of principal amount of bonds were issued by the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company and sold to the public subsequent to the execution of the lease. It may also be observed that these bonds were authenticated by the trustee for the bondholders, and there is no evidence which justifies the conclusion that such trustee relied upon the lease as security for the payment of such bonds at that time. The money represented by these bonds was used for the benefit of The Indianapolis Gas Company and naturally increased the value of its property and the value of the security of the bondholders. Specific provision for the issuance of these bonds was made in the Trust Indenture. As a matter of fact, at the time of their authentication the lease itself was in the possession of The Indianapolis Gas Company. It is true that certain representations as to the lease were made by brokers who purchased this bond issue and by those who purchased the Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds issued by the City just prior to the taking over of the property by it as trustee, but these representations were made by the purchasers of the bonds and not by the City, and the evidence fails to disclose that 445 such representations were authorized by it. In fact, under the evidence, such representations were not so authorized. Furthermore, the evidence fails to disclose that any present owner of any of the bonds issued by the Gas Company after the execution of the lease even knew of such representations at the time of his or its purchase and, therefore, it necessarily follows that no reliance could have been had thereon. Such purchaser was not in any manner induced to purchase such bonds because of any representation made even by the broker. Even though considerable length of time elapsed between the date of the execution of the lease and the taking over of the property by the City as trustee, and during all of such time the City knew of its existence and terms, it cannot be said that any of its acts during that time, as a municipal corporation, were such as to estop it, as trustee, from denying the validity of the lease. See—Texas and Pacific Railway Company v. Pattorff, 291 U. S. 245; 54 S. Ct. 416; 78 L. Ed. 777; California National Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362; 17 S. Ct. 831; 42 L. Ed. 198. It exercised its rights within the time prescribed by the franchise and prior to the exercise of such right and at the time of taking over of the property it gave notice and took every step possible within its power to inform all interested parties, and the world in general, as to its attitude upon the question of the validity of the lease. Notice was given and public record made of such attitude. The evidence is insufficient to justify the conclusion that the defendant City is estopped by its acts and conduct from denying the invalidity of the lease.

446 It is the contention of the defendant City that the lease was executed in violation of Sections 48-1507 and 48-7302, Burns' Revised Statutes of Indiana (1933) and that it is, therefore, invalid. Section 48-1507 provides in substance that "No executive department, officer or employee thereof shall have power to bind such City to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of such department * * * *; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any kind and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations are declared to be absolutely void; Provided, that the Board of Public Works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for * * * * supplying the City with gas * * * *, on such terms and for such times not exceeding the term fixed by Sec. 254 (Sec. 48-7302) of this Act as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such City and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect * * * *." Section 48-7302 referred to above limits the time to a "term not longer than twenty-five (25) years." The lease was not an agreement by The Indianapolis Gas Company to furnish gas to the citizens of Indianapolis but, on the contrary, it ceased furnishing gas to them upon its execution. It was simply a contract by it with another corporation to permit such other corporation to use its property for a definite time upon payment to it of a definite

447 tion under this statute is necessary, because it was admitted by plaintiff, on oral argument, that it does not contend the payment of the rental, or any part thereof, can be enforced from the general fund of the City or from any other fund than the income derived from the operation of the trust and from such trust property. It is, therefore, apparent that neither of these sections of the statute has any application to the facts in this case.

At the time of the execution of the lease there seemed to be a doubt in the minds of the parties thereto as to their power to enter into it for such a long period of time. The express term being for a period of ninety-nine years. That there was such a doubt may be inferred from the provisions of subsection 32 of the lease, as follows: "* * * * In the event it should be determined by a court of final jurisdiction that the contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of the term created, and that such term is in excess of the authority of either party hereto to contract, then this lease shall nevertheless be binding upon the parties hereto for the longest term for which the parties hereto might lawfully contract." The parties to the lease were the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and the Citizens Gas Company. The defendant, Citizens Gas Company, complied with its term so long as it operated the property and by its transfer of all its property, as provided in the franchise and its Articles of Incorporation, and its attempted assignment of the lease, it is released from any further obligations.

In order that a logical conclusion may be reached as to the validity of the lease, an examination of the franchise, Articles of Incorporation, Amended Articles and By-Laws of the Citizens Gas Company is necessary to ascertain whether or not such instruments contain any provisions granting such authority. These are the instruments which created the trust, and, if no authority for the execution of the lease or a lease of that character can be found 448 within them, then, no such authority exists. Before the franchise became effective it was necessary that it have the approval of the Common Council of the City. The granting and approval of the franchise were the initial steps in the creation of the trust. One of the most important powers with which a corporation can be clothed is the authority to enter into a lease whereby it assumes obligations for the payment of vast sums of money annually as rental over a long period of years. It is natural to conclude, therefore, that where the defendant City deemed it advisable to grant a franchise to three of its citizens expressly providing therein for the assignment of such franchise to a corporation to be thereafter organized for the express purpose of serving as the initial trustee of a public charitable trust, if it had intended to confer such an important power upon such corporation Trustee, it would have done so in language which could not have been misunderstood. It must be remembered that where a franchise is granted by a municipal corporation to an individual or a corporation and the extent of the grant contained in such franchise becomes the subject of construction, the universal rule is that in doubtful points the construction shall be against the grantee and in favor of the municipality. In all grants by the public, the principle is well recognized that nothing passes by implication. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Piedmont Power & Light Company v. Town of Graham, et al., 253 U. S. 193; 40 S. Ct. 453; 64 L. Ed. 855: "Grants of rights and privileges by a state or municipality are strictly construed and whatever is not unequivocally granted is withheld,—nothing passes by implication." See—Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 22; 26 S. Ct. 224; 50 L. Ed. 355; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400; 26 S. Ct. 427; 50 L. Ed. 801; Mitchell v. Dakota Central Telephone Co., 246 U. S. 396; 38 S. Ct. 362; 62 L. Ed. 793.

Obviously, it was the intent and purpose of the defendant City, in granting the franchise, and of the incorporators of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, to create a quasi public corporation for the express purpose of administering a Public Charitable Trust. The de-449 fendant, Citizens Gas Company, obtained all its rights and powers through the franchise. Its Articles of Incorporation, Amended Articles and By-Laws were all so framed as to carry out the duties and responsibilities imposed upon it by such franchise. The franchise provided a method by which the object of the corporation was to be obtained. It safeguarded the interests of the stockholders of the corporation to be thereafter organized, who were the settlers of the trust, by providing for the return to them of the money invested by them, together with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum. It also imposed upon the Directors of the Citizens Gas Company the absolute duty of conveying to the City all its property when it had discharged its obligations to its stockholders, which, according to its express terms, was to be within twenty-five years from its date. The franchise further provided that no obligation could be created by the Citizens Gas Company for the purpose of reimbursing its own stockholders which would extend for a longer period than ten years beyond the termination of such franchise. (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra.) Furthermore, the instruments creating the trust contained detailed instructions upon such subjects as the retirement of the stock of the Citizens Gas Company, the order in which its earnings should be used, the payment of the bonds, the time within which the City was to exercise its right to take over the property, etc., yet, not one word is to be found with reference to the execution of a lease which, by its terms, would bind the trust far beyond the time within which the lessee, Citizens Gas Company, was to surrender title and possession of such trust; far beyond the corporate life of both the Citizens Gas Company and The Indianapolis Gas Company and would anticipate for a period of ninety-nine years a supposed profit on behalf of the Citizens Gas Company sufficient to pay five per cent interest on $4,833,000 of the mortgage bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company issued and outstanding at the time of the execution of the lease and upon all bonds thereafter issued by it, and on all its refunding bonds, on all its escrow bonds, 450 and in addition thereto, the sum of $120,000 per annum as dividends on the capital stock of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and taxes of all description for which The Indianapolis Gas Company is liable. It is inconceivable that the settlors of the trust, the City, the grantees of the franchise, and the incorporators of the Citizens Gas Company intended to provide for the protection of stockholders of another corporation, in this instance, The Indianapolis Gas Company, through the medium of a long term lease whereby such stockholders would be assured of a return of six per cent per annum upon the par value of the common stock held by them for a period of ninety-nine years, while the stockholders of the corporation organized to administer the trust (Citizens Gas Company) would receive nothing upon their investment unless and until such The Indianapolis Gas Company stockholders had been paid their six per cent dividends and interest on the bonds and taxes paid, even though the instruments creating the trust specifically provided for the payment of ten per cent per annum to the stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company. Rather, it was their intention to protect the stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company who made possible the creation of the trust and assure them a return of their money, together with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum, and ample provision is made therefor in the franchise, etc. No provisions are to be found in the trust indentures which would authorize or empower the trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, created by such trust indenture, to enter into a contract which would, of necessity, anticipate sufficient profits on the part of the trustee over a period of ninety-nine years necessary to pay the rental provided in the lease in question, which amounts to more than $500,000.00 per year. (Oregon Railway & Navigation Company v. Oregonian Railway Company, Limited, 130 U. S. 1; 9 S. Ct. 409; 32 L. Ed. 837.) No authority can be found in the instruments creating the trust for the execution of the lease in question. Therefore, such lease, executed as it was without such authority, is ultra vires and void, and is not binding upon the defendant City. It is no part of the trust res. To hold otherwise would be to read into the trust instruments authority not therein contained.

451 At the time of the commencement of this action, no interest was due upon the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company secured by the mortgage of which plaintiff is the sole trustee. Attached to each of these bonds were coupons evidencing the amount of interest due each six months. The coupons last paid were those which fell due on April 1, 1936, and none has been paid since that date. It is apparent that, at the time of the commencement of this action, plaintiff was not entitled to judgment against any of the defendants for any sum of money because of default in the payment of interest, because none was then due. However, default was afterwards made in the payment of coupons due on October 1, 1936 and thereafter, and plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a judgment against the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, for the amount of such interest now in default. The defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, admits that in-452 terest in the total aggregate amount of $1,032,150.00 was due and unpaid on April 1 of this year.

It is the contention of plaintiff that, since the various coupons evidencing the amount of interest due were not paid when due, it is entitled to interest upon the unpaid coupons at the rate of six per cent per annum from and after the date when such coupons became due. In other words, it is seeking to recover a judgment for interest upon the past due and unpaid interest at the Indiana statutory rate in the absence of a contract, in addition to the aggregate amount of the interest due. (Burns' R. S. 1933, Sec. 19-2001). On the other hand, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, contends that there is a provision contained within the mortgage indenture and within the bonds themselves, wherein it is provided that no interest upon interest shall be paid, and that such provision controls.

It is provided in the mortgage that in case of default in the payment of interest when due, and in case of action being taken because of such default by the Trustee upon request of the bondholders, possession of the mortgaged property taken by the Trustee and sold by it pursuant to the provisions of such mortgage the proceeds shall be applied "* * * to the payment of interest on said bonds hereby secured in the order in which the installments of such interest shall have become due, but without interest upon such interest * * *." (Our italics.) It is clear, therefore, that if possession of the mortgaged property is taken by the Trustee and sold by it, and past due and unpaid interest, represented by coupons, upon the bonds is paid from the proceeds of such sale no inter-453 est can be allowed or paid upon such interest coupons.

Upon examination of the bond to ascertain whether or not the aforementioned provisions of the mortgage apply in an action wherein a personal judgment is sought and not a sale of the property for the purpose of paying the past due interest coupons, we find the following provision, "In case of default in the payment of any half yearly installment of interest which shall become payable and which shall have been demanded by presentation at the office of said The Trust Company of America, and a continuance of such default for a period of six months after such demand, the principal of this bond shall become due, in the manner and with the effect and subject to the conditions provided in the Indenture of Mortgage securing the payment of the same * * *." (Our italics.) In substance, the language thus found in the bond is the same as the first part of the paragraph of the Mortgage Indenture from which the above quotation is taken. While this is an acceleration clause, yet, in the institution of an action to collect the due interest and in acquiring a judgment in such action, it must be "subject to the conditions provided in the Indenture of Mortgage securing the payment of same" and one of such conditions is "without interest upon such interest." There can be no valid reason for holding that such provision applies if the property of mortgagor is possessed and sold by the Trustee and the bondholder paid from the proceeds of such sale and that it does not apply where a personal judgment only is sought for the amount of the defaulted interest. In either event, the bondholder receives the amount of the interest due, 454 which is all to which he is entitled under the bond.

Plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment which includes interest upon the interest, but is entitled to a judgment against the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, for the aggregate amount of the past due and unpaid interest. In the cases cited by the plaintiff, and upon which it relies, there are to be found no such provisions and conditions as those found in the bonds and mortgage in this case, and such cases are, therefore, clearly distinguishable.

By virtue of the provisions of the franchise granted to Potts, et al., by the defendant City in 1905, afterwards assigned to the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, and the Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws of such company, it became a quasi-public corporation and, as such, was the original trustee of the Public Charitable Trust created by such franchise, Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. At the time of the execution of the lease in question, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, as a matter of law, was chargeable with knowledge of its status, as such. It was also chargeable with knowledge of the contents and provisions of such franchise, Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, which fixed the duties and responsibilities of the Citizens Gas Company, as well as defined its powers and limited its authority. Acting upon the authority and mandate of the franchise, the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, was organized and began the execution of its trust. It performed its duties through its Board of Directors, Officers, and Voting Trustees, with fidelity, and carried out the original intent and purpose of the citizens of Indianapolis, as expressed in the franchise, its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws. Under authority granted it by such franchise and its Articles of Incorporation and Amended Articles, the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, proceeded to wind up its affairs and, on September 9, 1935, transferred and conveyed all its property to the defendant City, as successor trustee. Having discharged its duties to its stockholders and bondholders, it became its duty to thus convey all its property to the City. As a corporation, it profited nothing by 455 such conveyance, but was simply performing its duty under its contract and was, in effect, carrying out the mandate of the Circuit Court of Appeals wherein it said, in speaking of the duty of the Board of Directors of the Citizens Gas Company, in the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., supra, "The limitations on the rights of stockholders and the duty of the directors to convey to the City were embodied in the charter of the corporation." It did everything within its power to perform the duties of its trust honestly and legitimately, and, having complied with all the terms and conditions of the franchise, its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, and having discharged, or caused to be discharged, its duties and obligations to its stockholders and bondholders, as required by its contract, it is under no further obligation or liability to any one in this action, and no judgment should be rendered against it.

Insofar as any liability of the defendant City, under the lease is concerned, that question was determined by the court when it held such lease to be invalid. Under the issues presented at this time for determination, the plaintiff is entitled to no money judgment against the City.

A judgment will be entered in accordance with the views herein expressed.

458 * * * * *

Pursuant to Rule 52 of the Rules of Federal Procedure, the court now states its Special Findings of Fact upon the issues presented for determination, as follows:

That The Chase National Bank is a corporation established and existing under and by virtue of the banking laws of the United States with its principal place of business located in the City of New York in the State of New York and is engaged in and authorized to engage in a general banking and trust business. It is a resident and citizen of the State of New York, and is the sole trustee under a mortgage executed by the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, on October 1, 1902 and, as such trustee, is the plaintiff in this action.

That each of the defendants, The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, is a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana with its principal place of business in the City of Indianapolis, State of Indiana, and is a citizen and resident of the State of Indiana.

3.

That the City of Indianapolis is a municipal corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana and is located in the Southern United States Judicial District, Indianapolis Division.

4.

That defendants, Thomas D. Sheerin, A. Dailas Hitz, Edward W. Harris and Charles Rauh, are members of the Board of Trustees for Utilities of the City, and each of them is a citizen and resident of the City and of the State of Indiana.

That defendants, Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Donald J. Angus, Isaac E. Woodard, 459 LeRoy J. Keach, and John E. Ohleyer are members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City, and each of them is a citizen and resident of the City and of the State of Indiana.

6.

That the amount in controversy in this cause, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds the sum or value of $3,000.00.

7.

That The Indianapolis Gas Company was incorporated under the general laws of Indiana prior to November 28, 1913, had for many years been engaged in operating a gas manufacturing plant and distributing system in the City of Indianapolis and in selling gas to the inhabitants thereof; that it continued the operation of said gas plant and system until November 28, 1913, when the same was delivered to Citizens Gas Company in accordance with the provisions of a ninety-nine year lease dated September 30, 1913, hereinafter referred to as "the lease."

8.

That on October 1, 1902, The Indianapolis Gas Company executed its mortgage deed of trust of which The Chase National Bank is successor and sole trustee; that a correct copy of said mortgage marked Exhibit A is attached to the bill of complaint in this cause and is by reference made a part of these findings; that said mortgage was given to secure the payment of principal and interest on bonds which were authorized to be issued in the total principal amount of $7,500,000; that said mortgage was duly recorded; that the bonds issued under such mortgage were in the denomination of $1,000 each, payable on October 1, 1952; that the mortgage covers the entire operating property of The Indianapolis Gas Company and contains provisions to secure the payment of such bonds and the ordinary covenants of a large corporate trust deed; and that the mortgage contains an after-acquired property clause and in addition to covering the physical property covers the rents, issues, income, tolls, and profits arising therefrom.

Subdivision 14 of the mortgage contains the following provisions:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows the fifth grammatical paragraph of subdivision XIV of the Mortgage (Exhibit A to the bill of complaint, I R. 46, lines 13-36))."

460 That, pursuant to the provisions of Subdivision 14, supra, this action was begun by the Trustee, at the request of The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company and the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, holders and owners of bonds in the principal amount of $265,000.00 and $150,000.00 respectively.

That there are now issued and outstanding in the hands of the public, and were at the time of the commencement of this action, bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company secured by the mortgage referred to in Findings of Fact No. 8 in the aggregate principal amount of $6,881,000 (which includes $120,000 and $18,000 principal amounts, respectively, of such bonds held by The Indianapolis Gas Company and the City); that each of said bonds and the coupons attached thereto are in the form set forth in the mortgage, a copy of which, marked Exhibit "A," is attached to the bill of complaint in this case and incorporated into these Findings by reference.

10.

That The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company and Savings Bank of Baltimore are the owners and holders of the following amounts, respectively, of the bonds, referred to in Findings of Fact No. 9, together with all interest coupons due on October 1, 1936, and thereafter attached thereto, viz.: $265,000, $150,000 and $163,000.

11.

That The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company purchased its bonds between March 13, 1925, and May, 1931 New England Mutual Life Insurance Company purchased its bonds between July 14, 1916, and August, 1931; Savings Bank of Baltimore purchased its bonds during the years 1924, 1925, 1927 and 1928.

12.

That there is no evidence in this case that Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Savings Bank of Baltimore, or any other owner or holder of the bonds referred to in Findings of Fact No. 9 other than defendant City purchased any of their bonds at any time subsequent to August, 1931, except those purchased by Citizens Gas Company in 1932; that there is no evidence in this case that any present 461 owner of such bonds purchased his or its bonds relying on any acts done or representations made by Citizens Gas Company or the City or any of their authorized officers or agents.

That the last coupons attached to the bonds referred to in Findings of Fact No. 9 which have been paid were those falling due April 1, 1936; that when that interest was paid coupons were presented for payment by and payment was made to more than 940 individual and 210 corporate bondholders.

14.

That Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis was organized on the 23d day of May, 1906, under the general laws of the State of Indiana, providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, its purposes and obligations being fixed and controlled entirely by its Original and Amended Articles of Incorporation, as amended, its By-Laws, and the certain franchise ordinance and contract granted and entered into on the 25th day of August, 1905, by and between the City of Indianapolis, acting by and through its Common Council, and Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker and Lorenz Schmidt. Copies of said instruments and enactment as contained in the stip-

That, by virtue of such instruments and enactment, the Citizens Gas Company became the initial trustee of a public charitable trust for the benefit of the present and prospective gas consumers of the City of Indianapolis, and all of the rights, property and assets then or thereafter acquired by it were held by it as such initial trustee, and for the purposes and upon the terms and conditions set forth in said instruments and enactment, and no other.

16.

That the sole purpose and object of the creation, organization and existence of the Citizens Gas Company was to act and perform the duties of initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, as specifically set forth in the said instruments and enactment, and it had no power or authority, as a corporation, to act otherwise.

17.

That, as a result of such franchise, contract and other relevant trust instruments a public charitable trust was created; that the settlors, beneficiaries, trustees and trust res were as follows:

(a) The settlors were the public spirited citizens of Indianapolis who subscribed for stock of Citizens Gas Company;

(b) The beneficiaries of the trust were the then and future gas users of Indianapolis;

462 (c) The initial trustee was Citizens Gas Company with a definitely fixed and limited term of trusteeship, viz.: 25 years and as soon thereafter as the property of the trust could be conveyed to the successor trustee;

(d) The City was the successor and is the present trustee;

(e) The trust res was the property and plant of Citizens Gas Company, being the property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Company.

That the franchise contract creating the public charitable trust referred to in the last preceding Finding requires the individual grantees to organize an Indiana corporation to which the franchise should be assigned and whose Articles of Incorporation should provide as follows:

(a) The capital stock to be not less than $1,000,000 to be divided into shares of $25 each;

(b) No increase of capital stock shall be made unless the new stock shall be sold at public auction;

(c) The Company shall make and publish a semi-annual public statement of its affairs and the City Controller shall have the right to examine its books and the City Engineer its plant and property;

(d) The entire capital stock shall be placed in the hands of five trustees, one of whom shall be nominated by the Mayor and the capital stock shall be voted as a unit in the selection of directors. Any vacancy occurring on the Board shall be filled by the remaining directors except if a vacancy is created in the case of the member of the Board appointed by the Mayor it shall be filled by him;

(e) The voting trustees shall issue to each subscriber to the capital stock a beneficial certificate which shall entitle him to receive dividends at a rate not exceeding ten per cent per annum;

(f) The earnings of the Company shall be used in the following order:

First. To the payment of maturing debts and operating expenses;

Second. To the payment of dividends at the rate of ten per cent per annum; and Third. In providing for extensions and betterments ordered by the Board of Public Works.

Fourth. The excess to the payment in whole or part of the amounts subscribed for stock.

(g) The franchise provides

* * * * * *

"(Here follows paragraph 1(g) of the Franchise Contract of August 25, 1905 (part of Exhibit C to the bill of complaint, I R. 84, lines 13-26))."

(Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

463 (h) The business and prudential affairs are to be managed by a Board of nine Directors elected annually.

(i) Subdivision 2 of the franchise reads as follows:

• • • • • •

"(Here follows paragraph 1(i) of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 84-85))."

(j) The company to be organized shall secure, acquire or construct and put in operation a fuel gas plant with not less than 100 miles of mains within eighteen months from the sale of the Consumers Gas Trust Company mains then pending and failing therein shall forfeit all rights hereunder, provided that the Board of Public Works may at any time after the sale of the Consumers Gas Trust Company mains require the individual grantees or their assigns to file a bond in the penalty of $25,000 conditioned for the performance of the contract and the acquisition or construction of such fuel gas plant;

(k) The grantees and their assigns are to hold the city harmless from any damages occasioned by the construction of mains and there are elaborate provisions covering the doing of work in the streets, the supervision of that work, the construction of mains and the quality of gas to be furnished;

464 (l) The grantees agreed never to charge the consumer in excess of sixty cents per 1,000 cubic feet of gas and it is provided that if the price exceeds sixty cents the franchise becomes void and the city shall have the right to acquire said plant as upon the termination of the franchise period;

(n) Subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the franchise read as follows:

• • • • • •

"(Here follow subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 93-94))."

465 19.

That the Articles of Incorporation adopted by Citizens Gas Company contain the essential provisions required by the Franchise Contract. Subdivision 7 of such Articles reads as follows:

"Any member of the Board of Trustees may be removed by the Marion Circuit Court upon the showing that said trustee is an employee or holder of any of the securities or capital stock of or delivering gas to consumer residing in, or in the vicinity of the city of Indianapolis, or for any corrupt practice or any misconduct which said court may deem detrimental to the interests of said company. Removal from the city of Indianapolis shall, ipso facto, vacate the office of any trustee."

That there are no provisions in the franchise contract, the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company, except as amended in 1921, or its by-laws authorizing the issuance of preferred stock or the execution of any mortgage, except that a mortgage shall be executed at the time of the transfer of the property to the City, if necessary, to pay the obligations and stock of such company. There is no provision in any of the trust instruments authorizing Citizens Gas Company to become the Lessee of a competing gas property.

That, prior to September 30, 1913, and at all times subsequent thereto, all persons, including the plaintiffs herein, the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, and all of the holders of the bonds of the said defendant, either had actual knowledge of, or were bound in law by knowledge of, all of the terms and provisions of the said instruments and enactment and of the purposes, objects, power and authority of Citizens Gas Company, as aforesaid, including the duty, power and authority of Citizens Gas Company, at the end of the period of said franchise ordinance, to-wit, on August 30, 1930, when the conditions fixed therein precedent to the conveyance and transfer had been fully complied with, to convey and transfer all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis, and thereafter to be wound up.

That, on September 30, 1913, The Indianapolis Gas Company executed and delivered to Citizens Gas Company a certain written instrument of lease (hereafter called "Lease"); that a correct copy of said lease marked Exhibit "B" is attached to the bill of complaint in this case and is by reference made a part of these Findings; that all the property leased by The Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company was covered by and included in the mortgage referred to in Findings of Fact No. 8, and that the trust res did not include any part of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company or any lease on any part of such property.

That the lease contains, among other things, the following provisions:

466 (a) The entire operating plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company is leased to Citizens Gas Company for a period of 99 years from the 1st day of October, 1913.

Subdivision 32 of the lease contains the following provision affecting the term:

"In event it should be determined by a court of final jurisdiction that the contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of the term created, and that such term is in excess of the authority of either party hereto to contract, then this lease shall nevertheless be binding upon the parties hereto for the longest term for which the parties hereto might lawfully contract."

(b) Subdivision 1 of the lease reads, in part, as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows all of the first paragraph of subdivision 1 of the Lease except the last sentence thereof (Exhibit B to the bill of complaint, I R. 55-56))."

(c) The right is given to the Lessee to sell worn or damaged property and to procure a release of such property from the lien of Indianapolis Gas mortgage;

(d) The rent provided for in the lease is the payment of $120,000 a year, which amounts to six per cent dividends on the outstanding stock of Citizens Gas and, in addition, five per cent interest on all outstanding bonds.

When the lease was executed there were outstanding $4,833,000 of bonds and at the present time there are outstanding $6,881,000.

It is further provided that when the maximum price of gas to general consumers shall be fixed at a sum more than forty-five and not more than fifty cents per 1,000 cubic feet the rent shall be increased $10,000 a year, and when such price of gas shall be fixed at a sum not more than forty-five cents the increased annual rental shall be $15,000 instead of $10,000.

(e) Provision is made for the issuance of addi-
467 tional bonds to reimburse Lessee for expenditures made in betterments and extensions to the leased plant which can be drawn down by the Lessee to the extent of eighty-five (85%) per cent of sums so expended.

(f) The Lessee agrees to refund the mortgage debt during the entire period of the lease and if the bonds are sold at a discount to pay the Lessor the difference in cash and if sold at a premium to retain such premium.

(g) An inventory was made of the personal property and at the termination of the lease Lessee agrees to deliver to the Lessor usable merchandise of life value or to pay the Lessor in money the difference between the value of the property returned and the total value of the inventory.

(h) It is agreed that Lessee will do everything necessary to preserve its right to do business in the city. There then appears the following provision:

"That it will so far as the same may be necessary to that end, secure new franchises from time to time from the city of Indianapolis or other public authorities having power to grant such franchises to do business in the city of Indianapolis. That at or before the termination of the corporate life of the lessee, the lessee will so far as it is legally able so to do, either extend its corporate life or cause a new corporation to be formed to which it will transfer all its then property and assets and cause said new company expressly to assume all the obligations of this lease. And the like duty shall be assumed by all successive companies acquiring said property as such successors in title. All of which agreements however are expressly subject to the rights now held by the city of Indianapolis under the terms of the franchise granted to the lessee by said city."

(i) In addition to the agreed rental Lessee agrees to pay all taxes, general and special, ordinary and extraordinary, of every nature and description, not only upon the property but upon the rent reserved so far as such income constitutes the basis for an income tax.

(j) The provisions in respect of maintenance are as follows:

* * * * * *

"(Here follows the first grammatical paragraph of subdivision 15 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 64))." (Inserted pursuant to stipulation filed November 22, 1939.)

468 (k) The right of the Lessor to surrender its existing franchise and accept an indeterminate permit is not to be abridged by the execution of the lease.

(l) Lessee also covenants to insure the leased property but may provide protection against loss by fire by the establishment of an insurance fund.

(m) Lessee agrees to operate the plant leased and to perform all grants to Lessor or contracts by it with the state or any municipal subdivision.

(n) Subdivision 22 of the lease reads as follows:

• • • • • •

(o) Upon approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission, Indianapolis Gas shall file a declaration of a surrender of its franchise and state therein that it desires to receive in lieu thereof by operation of law an indeterminate permit.

(p) That in valuations for rate-making purposes only property actually used and useful shall be included in the rate base and unnecessary duplications of plant shall not be included.

(q) The power to regulate rates remains in the Public Service Commission and while this lease is in force Citizens Gas Company will permit regulation by the Commission.

(r) Lessee binds itself to extend the mains of the 469 combined plants to the extent of at least three miles in any one year. In addition to these minimum requirements Lessee agrees to comply with any orders for extensions made by competent authority.

(s) A schedule of rates is set forth in the lease.

(t) There is a provision for arbitration of disputes.

24.

That on September 30, 1913, the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company included a plant for making and distributing gas to consumers in the City, and approximately 375 miles of mains located in the streets and alleys of the City, which mains were connected with meters of more than 41,000 customers who were served thereby. Citizens Gas Company at that time owned and operated approximately 184 miles of mains and had 11,165 meters in use.

That the City is not named as a party to such lease.

26.

That no ordinance or resolution was ever at any time adopted by the Common Council or the Board of Public Works of the City authorizing the execution of the lease or ratifying it, or agreeing to be bound by its terms.

That no action has ever been taken at any time by the Boards of Trustees or Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City authorizing the acceptance of an assignment of said lease, ratifying the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms.

That the City took over the property of Citizens Gas Company on September 9, 1935, as successor trustee; that several days prior to said date the City advised Citizens Gas Company that it would decline to accept an assignment of the lease; that the written assignment of the lease was on said date delivered physically by a representative of Citizens Gas Company to a representative of the Defendant City and such assignment was placed of record by such representative of the City in the Recorder's office of Marion County, Indiana, along with the other three instruments of conveyance at that time physically delivered by said representative of Citizens Gas Company to said representative of the City of Indianapolis; that at the same time the City, through the Board of Directors for Utilities, adopted resolutions declining to accept an assignment of the lease, caused these resolutions to be recorded in the Recorder's office of Marion County, Indiana, and a duly certified copy of them to be served on Citizens Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company.

That the Citizens Gas Company operated under the terms of the franchise contract referred to in Find-470 ings of Fact No. 18 and the amendments thereto from the date of the assignment thereof by the individuals to whom the franchise had originally been granted until August 27, 1921, at which time, pursuant to the terms of an Indiana statute authorizing it to do so, it filed with the Public Service Commission of Indiana its declaration of surrender of said franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit with the result that from August 27, 1921, until September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas Company operated as a public utility under such indeterminate permit.

That, prior to September 9, 1935, all of the conditions fixed in the said instruments and enactment as precedent to the duty and authority of Citizens Gas Company to convey and transfer the said property had been fully and completely performed so that on said date nothing further remained to be performed or done by the City of Indianapolis to entitle it in law to have all of said property conveyed and transferred to it as aforesaid. On said date, Citizens Gas Company, by its proper corporate officers, executed and delivered instruments of conveyance and transfer of all of the said property to the City of Indianapolis, in the manner and form, and in strict compliance with its duty and authority so to do, as aforesaid.

31.

32.

That, on September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas Company transferred its gas producing and distributing plant and system to the City and since that time the City, as trustee of the Public Charitable Trust created in 1905 and 1906, has operated said gas producing and distributing plant and system. Since September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas Company has not been engaged in any business of any nature whatsoever, and it has no property at this time.

That Citizens Gas Company, its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees and Officers, in making the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all of its property to the City of Indianapolis, fully and completely performed and exhausted all of the duties, powers and authority of Citizens Gas Company as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust. Neither it, nor its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees or any of its officers, from and after September 9, 1935, has any further duties, powers or authority as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, or to hold, own, lease, manage or operate any property or business of any nature whatsoever.

That, prior to the 26th day of February, 1913, the Trustees and Directors of Citizens Gas Company suggested that one Volney T. Malott and a group of Indianap-471 olis businessmen purchase the capital stock of The Indianapolis Gas Company or an amount in excess of three-fourths thereof, thereby making possible a merger of the systems of the two companies under the unified control and operation of Citizens Gas Company; and the purchase of the capital stock of The Indianapolis Gas Company was made by said Indianapolis syndicate pursuant to said suggestion; that prior to such purchase of such stock, it was understood by those promoting the transaction that a lease would be entered into by and between the two gas companies, similar to the one in question.

That, on or about May 21, 1913, The Indianapolis Gas Company, Lessor, and Citizens Gas Company, Lessee, jointly submitted a tentative form of lease to Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana and jointly petitioned said Commission to adopt and approve the terms and conditions set forth in said form of lease and to authorize them to enter into and execute the same. A correct copy of the finding and order of said Commission with respect to said lease is attached to the bill of complaint in this cause marked Exhibit D and is by reference made a part of these Findings.

That it appears in the finding and order of the Public Service Commission last referred to that Joseph B. Kealing, Corporation Counsel of the City, appeared, after being served with notice so to do, for the City in said proceeding, but there is no evidence in this case that the Corporation Counsel for the City had any power or authority to bind the City in respect of said lease or the approval of the lease by said Commission.

That Newton Todd, a beneficial certificate holder of Citizens Gas Company, commenced an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana on April 30, 1929, against the Citizens Gas Company, the individuals who were voting trustees of its common stock, the City, the Mayor, Clerk and Members of the Board of Public Works of the City; that neither The Indianapolis Gas Company, The Chase National Bank, as Trustee, etc., nor any predecessor trustee, nor any bondholder of The Indianapolis Gas Company was a party defendant, or an intervenor in said cause; and that no pleading was filed in the Todd case asserting either the validity or invalidity of the lease.

The issues tendered by the bill in the Todd case were:

(a) That the original agreement between the City and Citizens Gas contained in the franchise contract of 1905 was abrogated and annulled when Citizens Gas Company surrendered the franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit.

(b) That the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit created a new contract between the State and Citizens Gas Company, one of the terms of which was that the City should have the 472 right to acquire the property of Citizens Gas Company at a value to be determined by the Public Service Commission.

(c) That an Act of the Indiana General Assembly of 1929 purporting to legalize all of the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company and particularly those in respect of the mode of acquiring the plant and property of Citizens Gas Company by the City, resulted in an impairment of the obligations of the contract above referred to in violation of the Constitutions of Indiana and of the United States.

(d) That the franchise contract of 1905 merely gave an option to the City to purchase the property of the Citizens Gas Company and this resulted in a violation of the rule against perpetuities.

The issues involved in the present case are wholly different from those involved in the Todd case. The question of the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease was neither involved nor determined in the Todd case and could not have been determined under the issues presented to this court in that case.

The Todd case was finally disposed of on May 18, 1931, when the Supreme Court of the United States denied Todd's application for a writ of certiorari and no controversy had ever arisen or existed in connection with the validity or invalidity of the lease prior to July, 1935. Until the transfer of the trust res by Citizens Gas Company to the City, all payments provided for by the terms of said lease had been made as required therein and there had been no breach or threatened breach by Citizens Gas Company of its covenants under said lease, under the issues presented at this time for determination.

That The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company filed with the Public Service Commission of Indiana a joint petition asking for the approval of the lease; that Frank S. Fishback, a citizen of Indianapolis and a stockholder in the Citizens Gas Company, intervened, raised certain objections to the approval of the lease and after the Commission had entered an order approving the same filed a petition for a rehearing which was overruled; that a correct copy of such joint petition, the intervening petition of Fishback and his petition for rehearing are found in Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13.

That neither The Chase National Bank, as Trustee, etc., nor any predecessor trustee of The Indianapolis Gas Company, nor any bondholder of The Indianapolis Gas Company was a party to said proceedings.

That when the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved the execution of the lease no claim had been asserted that the franchise contract of 1905 and other related papers resulted in the creation of a public charitable trust and at the time the Commission's approval was given to the lease it was 17 years before the date when a transfer of the trust property was required to be made to the City. Fishback did not intervene or resist the approval of the lease by the Public Service Com-473 mission as the beneficiary of a public charitable trust.

A complete copy of the order of the Public Service Commission is attached to the complaint as Exhibit D and made a part hereof.

That, on November 28, 1913, Fishback commenced an action in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, against the Public Service Commission of Indiana, Citizens Gas Company, The Indianapolis Gas Company, and the City to vacate and set aside the order approving the execution of the lease.

Fishback sued as a stockholder of Citizens Gas Company and a resident freeholder of the City and not as a beneficiary of a public charitable trust.

Citizens Gas Company and the City were not made parties defendant as the initial and successor trustees of a public charitable trust, but were parties defendant in their individual capacity. There was no averment in the complaint filed by Fishback that a public charitable trust had been created by the franchise contract of 1905.

Fishback sought to set aside the Commission's order partly on the following grounds:

(a) That the rentals fixed in the lease were excessive and that their payment by the Citizens Gas Company would result in a waste and misapplication of its funds and its inability to pay dividends due its stockholders.

(b) That the Citizens Gas Company was without power to enter into the lease without the consent of the owners of three-fourths (¾) in amount of its capital stock, which consents had not been obtained.

(c) That the City had not given its consent to such lease, had not joined in the execution thereof, and had granted to Citizens Gas Company no right to operate the property of Indianapolis Gas Company.

(d) That the findings and order of the Public Service Commission were not sustained by sufficient evidence and were contrary to law.

(e) That Citizens Gas Company had no power to enter into the agreement contained in the lease permitting the Public Service Commission to fix rates at which it should sell gas.

(f) That the obligation assumed by the Citizens Gas Company under the terms of said lease to pay interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock of The Indianapolis Gas Company impaired the obligation of the contract existing between the Citizens Gas Company and plaintiff and other stockholders of that company in that it prevented it from executing a mortgage at the end of the franchise term in order to pay the stockholders of that company the par value of their stock and accumulated dividends thereon.

(g) That the lease, as executed, would prevent the fulfillment of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas Company and would prevent the City from taking over the gas system.

(h) That the City had not given its consent to such lease.

474 Prior to the entry of final judgment in the Fishback case, Fishback dismissed the City as a party defendant and the following order book entry was made in connection with such dismissal:

"Come now the parties and the plaintiff now dismisses the action, as against the defendant City of Indianapolis, upon which dismissal the court now enters judgment for costs against the plaintiff."

Fishback elected to stand upon his complaint and to abide the ruling of the court upon demurrers which had been sustained to each paragraph of said complaint and judgment was rendered against him.

The City was not a party to the final judgment rendered in the cause.

Neither The Chase National Bank, Trustee, etc., nor any other trustee under The Indianapolis Gas Company mortgage nor any bondholder was a party plaintiff, defendant or intervenor in the Fishback case.

Fishback prayed an appeal from the decree of the Marion Superior Court to the Supreme Court of Indiana, which dismissed the appeal because it was not perfected in time.

The first Indiana Declaratory Judgment Act became effective on May 16, 1927. At the date of the final disposition of the Fishback case there was neither an existing controversy nor the ripening seeds of such controversy between The Indianapolis Gas Company, the trustees of its mortgage or its bondholders and the City as to the enforceability of the lease against the City or the trust property.

Up to the date when Fishback dismissed his cause against the City no issue had been presented between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company as to the validity of the lease.

There was neither in issue nor decided by the Court in the Fishback case any question as to the validity or enforceability against the City of the lease.

The Fishback case was tried and decided on the theory that whether the lease was valid for its entire term or not the action of the Public Service Commission of Indiana in approving the same could not be vacated or set aside.

Since the determination of the Fishback case new facts have occurred which alter the legal rights and relations of the parties thereto, viz.: the transfer of the trust res to the City as successor trustee on September 9, 1935.

After the city had been dismissed as a party defendant in said cause it was not again made a party thereto.

That during the pendency of the Fishback case, certain extensions of the mains of The Indianapolis Gas Company property were made in accordance with the provisions contained in Section 27½ of the lease.

That, on March 12, 1930, Allen G. Williams as a resident and taxpayer of the City on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated commenced an action in which Citizens Gas Company, its voting trustees and directors, The Indianapolis Gas Company, the City of Indianapolis, the then trustees under The Indianapolis Gas Company mortgage, the Mayor, City Clerk, Board of Public Works, Boards of Trustees and Directors for the Department of Utilities of the City and the Public Service Commission of Indiana were defendants. The complaint alleged, in part, that the lease was invalid, that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease was unlawful because the Act creating such Commission was unconstitutional, that the lease was burdensome upon the trust and that it was ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company, etc. A demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint was filed by the Public Service Commission, another by The Indianapolis Gas Company and its mortgage trustees and a third by the remaining defendants. The demurrers so filed were sustained, judgment was rendered against Williams and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana and affirmed.

Neither a controversy nor the ripening seed of such a controversy existed at any time prior to the date of the final disposition of the Williams case between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company or its mortgage trustees or bondholders as to the enforceability against the City of the lease. The transfer of the trust res from Citizens Gas Company to the City as successor trustee was not made until long after the final disposition of the Williams case.

In the Williams case plaintiff attempted to procure a determination of the invalidity of the lease on the ground that execution of the lease violated the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Indiana and had been obtained as the result of conspiracy. None of the questions involved in this case were actually litigated in the Williams case nor could such questions have been litigated under the issues in that case.

No issue was made between The Indianapolis Gas Company, its mortgage trustees or its bondholders and the City or the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Utilities in connection with the enforceability of said lease against the City, although the City had pointed out in a joint motion filed by it and Citizens Gas Company to strike out parts of plaintiffs' complaint that the validity of the public charitable trust was in no wise affected by the validity of such lease.

It was stated in said motion:

"If the lease is valid the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as the property owned by the Citizens Gas Company in its own right. If for any reason the lease is invalid it will fall outside the scope of the trust."

41.

That, at the date of the execution and delivery of the lease $4,833,000 total face amount of Indianapolis
476 Gas Bonds were outstanding. Between June 22,

1914, and February 11, 1932, upon the request of The Indianapolis Gas Company, the mortgage trustees authenticated and delivered to The Indianapolis Gas Company additional bonds in the total principal amount of $2,048,000. Pursuant to the provisions of the lease, The Indianapolis Gas Company, in turn, delivered $1,971,000 principal amount of said additional bonds to Citizens Gas Company for the purpose of reimbursing Citizens Gas Company for eighty-five per cent (85%) of its capital expenditures on account of extensions and betterments to the plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company made and paid for by Citizens Gas Company. As a result of such expenditures for extensions and betterments and the reimbursement by issuance of bonds, Citizens Gas Company has expended for additions and betterments to the plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company approximately $200,000 for which it has received no reimbursement. All additions and betterments to the plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company for which bonds were issued were made with its consent and under the terms of said lease said additions and betterments became and are the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company. All of said bonds in the principal amount of $1,971,000 were sold by Citizens Gas Company except bonds in the principal amount of $18,000 which were retained by it. The proceeds of the bonds sold by Citizens Gas Company were received and used by it. It was many years after the execution of the lease before plaintiff in this action received a copy of the same.

There is no proof that any predecessor trustee of The Chase National Bank which certified bonds either knew of the existence of the lease or relied upon it as a basis for a certification of any The Indianapolis Gas Company bonds.

That the Citizens Gas Company operated the plant and property of The Indianapolis Gas Company under said lease from November [illegible].3, until September 9, 1935. From October 2, 1913, until September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas Company from time to time duly paid the interest on the outstanding Indianapolis Gas Company bonds by making payment thereof to the holders of the bonds either at the office of the trustee or directly to such holders. During that period Citizens Gas Company paid all the rentals payable in cash under the terms of the lease and also paid all the taxes required to be paid by the Lessee under the terms of the lease; that the total payments so made by Citizens Gas Company are shown in Exhibit 20 attached to the Stipulation in this case, which exhibit, by reference, is made a part of and incorporated into these Findings.

That for the five (5) year period immediately preceding September 9, 1935, the aggregate payments made by Citizens Gas Company on account of the lease were approximately $600,000 annually.

That from the period of its organization in 1906 to June 30, 1935, Citizens Gas Company paid dividends
477 to the holders of its common stock at the rate of ten per cent per annum; and that on September 9, 1935, when Citizens Gas Company conveyed, transferred and assigned its property to the City it turned over a sum of approximately $411,000 in cash or current funds to the City.

That between the years 1914 and 1935, in the sale of bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, certain representations with reference to the lease were made by the brokers having such bonds for sale, but the evidence fails to show that any present owner of any such bonds knew of, relied upon, or was in any manner influenced by such representations.

That, on March 20, 1929, the City, through its Board of Public Works, adopted a resolution, a correct copy of which marked Exhibit 22 is attached to the Stipulation in this case and is by reference made a part of these Findings; that on April 3, 1929, the Directors of Citizens Gas Company unanimously adopted two resolutions, copies of which, marked Exhibits 23 and 24, are attached to the Stipulation in this case and by reference made a part of this Finding; that on April 5, 1929, the Board of Trustees of the Citizens Gas Company unanimously adopted a resolution approving resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of Citizens Gas Company; and that the resolutions referred to above in this subdivision of this stipulation contain demands by the City upon Citizens Gas Company that in accordance with the provisions of the franchise contract "the plants, property and assets of said Company be conveyed to said City of Indianapolis" and a recognition by Citizens Gas Company that it was obligated to make such conveyance.

That, in pursuance of a resolution adopted on May 7, 1935, by the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City, a public offering of $8,000,000 of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds was made on May 28, 1935; that a copy of said Resolution, adopted May 7, 1935, is identified as Exhibit 47 to the Stipulation in this case and is by reference incorporated into these Findings; that a correct copy of the notice by the City Controller of the City pursuant to said resolution marked Exhibit A is attached to the answer and counterclaim of the City in this case and is by reference made a part of this Finding; that Resolutions similar to that of May 7th, 1935, were adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities for the City on April 5th, April 10th and April 12th, 1935, and advertisements were published in pursuance of said resolutions on April 8th, April 12th, and April 18th, 1935, respectively; that said resolutions were substantially identical with Exhibit 47 to said Stipulation; that said advertisements were substantially identical with Exhibit A to the answer and counterclaim of the City; and that no bid resulting from said advertisements of April 8th, April 12th and April 18th, 1935, was acceptable to the City.

478 Later, viz. on May 29, 1935, a joint bid of Halsey Stuart & Company, of Chicago, Illinois, and Otis & Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, for said revenue bonds was accepted by the City. The proceeds of the sale of said Revenue Bonds were received by the City June 27, 1935.

That the purchasers of said revenue bonds issued an advertising circular, a correct copy of which marked Exhibit B is attached to the answer and counter-claim of the City and is by reference made a part of this Finding.

Before the issuance of said advertising circular Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Company asked the City to approve the circular which was to be issued by them and were advised by the City and its representatives that the only authority which the City had in connection with the sale of revenue bonds was to make a public offering and that the City had no authority to approve or become responsible for any representations made in connection with the resale of said revenue bonds by the purchasers thereof.

That the circular and newspaper advertising issued by the purchasers of said revenue bonds were issued solely on their own authority and without authorization by the City and that there is no evidence to show that any persons who purchased said Gas Plant Revenue Bonds of the City did so on the faith of any representation made by the City or its authorized agents.

Any representations made by the purchasers of such bonds were never ratified or approved by the City or any of its authorized representatives.

That the City caused the sum of $2,500,000 to be paid on or about July 1, 1935, for the retirement of all of the Citizen Gas Company's common stock; that said $2,500,000 included $2,000,000 as the par value of said common stock and $500,000 as dividends thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from January 1, 1933, to June 30, 1935. The City also caused the sum of $1,050,000 to be paid on or about September 1, 1935, for the redemption of all of the Citizens Gas Company's preferred stock in full satisfaction of the preferred stockholders' interest in the property and assets of Citizens Gas Company; that said $1,050,000 included $1,000,000 as the par value of said preferred stock and $50,000 as the premium of five per cent on the redemption thereof required by the terms of said preferred stock. Citizens Gas Company paid all the dividends on said preferred stock up to the time of said redemption. All of said common stock was retired and all of said preferred stock was redeemed.

That, on August 9, 1935, the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City adopted a resolution with respect to the payment of the mortgage bonds of the Citizens Gas Company dated July 1, 1912, a copy of which resolution is attached to the Stipulation in this cause, marked 479 Exhibit 48 and by reference made a part of this Finding. In pursuance of said resolution the City on August 10, 1935, published a notice, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 49, is attached to the Stipulation in this cause and in September, 1935, published a notice, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 50, is attached to the Stipulation in this cause, both of which exhibits marked 49 and 50 are by reference made a part of this Finding. The principal amount of Citizens Gas Company bonds outstanding on August 12, 1935, was $2,745,000. All of said bonds have been paid and surrendered excepting bonds aggregating the principal amount of $32,000.

Before payment of said bonds had been made by the City it was advised by its counsel that said Citizens Gas Company mortgage had been executed in violation of the terms of said public charitable trust, but that the moneys which Citizens Gas Company had received from the sale of the mortgage bonds had been used in additions to and betterments of the trust res and that the holders of the bonds had an equitable lien on the property for their debt; that it was in pursuance of this advice that the City paid said mortgage bonds.

That in the payment of the common and preferred stock of Citizens Gas Company and the dividends thereon and the premiums on the retirement of the preferred stock the City proceeded in accordance with the decree of this court and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the Todd and Cotter cases, above referred to, and that it was required to make said payments before taking over the res of the public charitable trust hereinbefore described and that in so doing it did not recognize directly or by implication the validity or enforceability against the City of the lease.

That prior to the transfer to the City of the plant and property of Citizens Gas on September 9, 1935, neither the City nor its Department of Utilities gave any notice to The Chase National Bank, Trustee, etc., or any formal notice to any holder of The Indianapolis Gas Company bonds that said transfer and conveyance was to be made, but The Indianapolis Gas Company was fully advised of said transfer and as early as July 23, 1935, was advised that the City would not accept an assignment of the lease; that wide publicity of the fact that said transfer was to be made appeared in the newspapers, including the publicity incident to the sale of the revenue bonds.

That in pursuance of agreements made between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company, which agreements have been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935, the City has operated the gas producing and distributing plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company. Such agreements provided, among other things, in substance that such operation by the City should not prejudice the rights of either the City or The Indianapolis Gas Company, and further provided that the City by operating such plant did not recognize the validity of the lease and The Indianapolis Gas Company by consenting to such operation did not admit that the lease was invalid.

That on March 2, 1936, the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company entered into a written agreement, a correct copy of which is attached to the complaint in this case, marked Exhibit H and is by reference made a part of these Findings; that said agreement has never been modified or supplemented in any respect.

That no settlement agreement as provided for in said contract of March 2, 1936, has ever been agreed upon between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company.

That The Indianapolis Gas Company did not pay any of the interest coupons due on October 1, 1936, April 1, 1937, October 1, 1937, April 1, 1938, October 1, 1938, and on April 1, 1939 on any of The Indianapolis Gas Company bonds and all of said interest coupons remain unpaid.

54.

That the City, pursuant to the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936, has from time to time made deposits with the escrow agent, The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, which deposits on December 31, 1938, aggregated the sum of $1,217,875 which sum is now held by said Bank, and said Bank has never at any time paid out any of the sums so deposited with it. All of the sums so deposited with said Bank have been derived from and are part of the proceeds of the City's operation of the property transferred, conveyed and assigned to it by Citizens Gas Company and the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company covered by the lease.

That the City also has paid pursuant to the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936, the sum of approximately $171,000, being an amount equal to the interest due on The Indianapolis Gas Company bonds on March 30, 1936.

That all payments made by the City of sums of money equal to the interest on the Indianapolis Gas Company bonds, dividends payable under the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913, or any of the moneys now in escrow at The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, would not have been made in the absence of the agreement of March 2, 1936, for the temporary use of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and certain correspondence exchanged between The Indianapolis Gas Company and attorneys for the City in connection with the payments so made, in which contract of March 2, 1936, and correspondence it was agreed that neither the temporary operation of the property nor the payment of such monies by the City should in any way prejudice the City's rights or without such operation and payments or the execution of the agreements constituting an admission on the part of the City of the validity or binding effect upon the City of the lease.

481 The agreement of March 2, 1936, did not result in the default of interest payments due on the bonds because in the absence of such agreement the City would not have made payments of sums equal to the interest, and such agreement was not inimical to the interest of plaintiff or any of the bondholders whom it represents.

That on March 11, 1936, and prior to the date when the City paid the money equal to the interest referred to in subdivision of this finding and before it had deposited any sums in escrow with The Indiana National Bank as escrow agent, the trustee and two of the principal bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company were advised of the making of such agreement and the terms thereof and they made no objection thereto but received and accepted the sum of $171,000 with full knowledge of the terms of said agreement.

That on September 9, 1935, the Directors of Citizens Gas Company adopted a resolution, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 86, is attached to the Stipulation and is by reference made a part of this finding. On the same day, the Board of Trustees of Citizens Gas Company adopted a resolution, a copy of which, marked Exhibit 87, is attached to the stipulation in this case and by reference made a part of this finding.

Pursuant to the requirements contained in each of said resolutions, the City on September 9, 1935, executed and delivered to Citizens Gas Company an indemnifying agreement, a correct copy of which marked Exhibit J, is attached to the second amendment to the complaint in this cause and by reference made a part hereof.

That prior to the commencement of this action neither plaintiff nor any of the bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company made any request or demand upon The Indianapolis Gas Company that it commence or prosecute an action in a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain a determination or declaration of the validity or invalidity of the lease.

60.

That the City has been a first class city within the meaning of the Indiana Statutes continuously since January 1, 1910. No other city of Indiana has been a first class city during any of said period. The City has had a population exceeding 300,000 continuously since January 1, 1920, and no other city of Indiana has had such a population of 300,000 during any of such period.

That as early as September 19, 1935, plaintiff was advised by its bondholders who had seen newspaper reports that the City was attempting to abrogate the lease, as shown by a letter of that date addressed to the President of The Indianapolis Gas Company by plaintiff.

482 62.

That neither the bondholders who requested the Trustee to bring this suit nor The Indianapolis Gas Company, nor any other person, firm or corporation, agreed to indemnify the Trustee for its costs, attorneys' fees or expenses in bringing this suit.

63.

That on September 28, 1935, the firm of which Newton D. Baker was the senior member, was employed by The Indianapolis Gas Company as special counsel in the controversy respecting the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease. That firm gave an opinion on the question of the validity and enforceability against the City of the lease in November, 1935. Mr. Baker's firm continued to represent The Indianapolis Gas Company until May 13, 1936.

That on March 11th and April 10th, 1936, meetings were held at the office of The Chase National Bank in New York attended by representatives of that Bank, The Indianapolis Gas Company, and two of the principal bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company, The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, and New England Mutual Life Insurance Company; that at these meetings it was arranged that the two insurance companies there represented would request the Trustee for the Bondholders to obtain an opinion from the law firm of Newton D. Baker, Esq., of Cleveland, Ohio, as to the validity of the lease and as to its enforceability against the City of Indianapolis, and as to whether certain costs and expenses of litigation necessary to determine those questions would be a prior lien against the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company; that such a letter would be written, and if favorable reply received, employment would be tendered to that firm to institute the proceeding; that no member of Mr. Baker's firm attended either of these meetings, and there is no evidence to indicate that either Mr. Baker or any member of his firm had any prior knowledge of these conferences. The letters written by the two insurance companies above referred to are in evidence as Plaintiffs' Exhibits 125 and 126.

That request was made by plaintiff of Mr. Baker's firm in accordance with the plan devised as set forth in Findings of Fact No. 64, but it was advised by his firm that it was then employed by The Indianapolis Gas Company, and that it could not accept employment for the Trustee unless released by such company. It was afterwards released, accepted employment by Trustee and began this action.

66.

That after Mr. Baker's firm had been released from its employment by The Indianapolis Gas Company, it consulted and advised with The Indianapolis Gas Company's attorneys residing in Indianapolis as to the preparation and form of the complaint, accepted suggestions made 483 by such attorneys in respect thereof and cooperated with them in the preparation and filing of the complaint.

That after the complaint was filed Mr. Baker's firm representing plaintiff, and local attorneys for The Indianapolis Gas Company consulted and advised with each other both as to the facts and the law in the presentation and prosecution of the case, both plaintiff and defendant being interested in upholding the validity of the lease.

68.

That there was no collusion between The Indianapolis Gas Company and plaintiff or any other party to this cause in the bringing or prosecution of this action.

(Signed) Robert C. Baltzell,
Judge, United States District Court.

September 21, 1939.

Conclusions of Law.

Upon the above and foregoing Special Findings of Fact, the court now states its Conclusions of Law, as follows, towit:

That plaintiff has such an interest in the lease as to give it authority to maintain this action; that there was no collusion between plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, prior to, at the time of, or since the commencement of this action; that there is a collision of interest between plaintiff and all defendants, including The Indianapolis Gas Company, and that this court has jurisdiction to try and determine this cause.

That the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease, and the judgments and decrees in the Fishback, Todd and Williams cases are not res adjudicata of the validity and binding effect of the lease upon either the Citizens Gas Company or the City of Indianapolis.

3.

That the City is not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease.

4.

That the Citizens Gas Company is not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease.

That the lease is invalid and unenforceable against the City for each of the following reasons, among others:

(a) Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee of a public charitable trust with a fixed date of expiration of its trusteeship had no power or authority to execute a lease for 82 years beyond the expiration of its term of trusteeship which would be binding upon or enforceable against its successor trustee, the City, a municipal corporation.

(b) The trust instruments conferred no specific power upon the initial trustee to execute such a lease as Lessee and properly construed precluded the initial trustee from executing such a lease.

That the lease is not a valid or enforceable obligation against Citizens Gas Company, and said Company was entirely and completely released and discharged from all present and future obligation and liability under said lease, by the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all of its property and assets to the City on September 9, 1935.

7.

That the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City and Indianapolis Gas Company was not inimical to the interests of plaintiff or the bondholders which it represents.

8.

That the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, in the sum of One Million Thirty-two Thousand One Hundred and Fifty Dollars ($1,032,150.00) with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent (6%) from and after the date of judgment.

9.

That the plaintiff should take nothing in this action as against the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, under the issues presented at this time for determination.

10.

That the plaintiff should take nothing in this action as against the defendant, City of Indianapolis, under the issues presented at this time for determination.

to each of which findings and conclusions, the plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, each excepts.

It Is Therefore Declared, Adjudged and Decreed by the Court:

1. That plaintiff has such interest in the lease dated September 30, 1913, from The Indianapolis Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, as to give it authority to maintain this action; that there was no collusion between plaintiff and defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, prior to, at the time of, or since the commencement of this action; that there is a collision of interest between plaintiff and all defendants, including The Indianapolis Gas Company, and that the Court has jurisdiction to try and determine this cause.

2. That neither the order of the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana approving the above described lease, nor the judgment in the cases of Frank S. Fishback v. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., Newton Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., and Allen G. Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., nor either of them, are res adjudicata of the validity and binding effect of the above described lease upon the City of Indianapolis, Indiana, and the individual defendants, who are members of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Public Utilities of said City nor upon the defendant, Citizens Gas Company.

3. That the lease dated September 30, 1913, from The Indianapolis Gas Company, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, is invalid and unenforceable against either (1) the defendant, City of Indianapolis; (2) the individual defendants, who 486 are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City; (3) the property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by said City through its Department of Utilities; (4) The Indianapolis Gas Company; or (5) the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

4. That the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City of Indianapolis and The Indianapolis Gas Company was not inimical to the interests of the plaintiff or the bondholders which it represents.

5. That the plaintiff recover of and from the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, the sum of $1,032,150.00, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum from and after the date of this judgment.

6. That the plaintiff take nothing in this action as against the defendant, Citizens Gas Company, under the issues presented at this time for determination.

7. That the plaintiff take nothing in this action as against the City of Indianapolis and the individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City or against the property conveyed to said City by the Citizens Gas Company on September 9, 1935, under the issues presented at this time for determination.

To which judgment, the plaintiff and the defendant The Indianapolis Gas Company each excepts.

487 And afterwards towit at the May Term of said Court, on the 20th day of October, 1939, before the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of said Court, the following further proceedings were had herein, towit:

Comes now the plaintiff in the above entitled cause by its attorneys, and files notice of appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which notice of appeal is as follows:

BOND ON APPEAL.

Know All Men By These Presents that we, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, as principal, and American Surety Company of New York, as surety, are held and firmly bound unto Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, a corporation, The Indianapolis Gas Company, a corporation, the City of Indianapolis, a municipal corporation, Thomas D. Sheerin, A. Dallas Hitz, Edward W. Harris, and Charles S. Rauh, as members of the Board of Trustees for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis, and Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Donald J. Angus, Isaac E. Woodard, LeRoy J. Keach, and John E. Ohleyer as members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis (hereinafter referred to as the "obligees") in the full and just sum of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00), to be paid to the said obligees, their heirs, executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, to which payment well and truly to be made we bind ourselves, our successors and assigns, jointly and severally, by these presents.

Executed this 20 day of October, 1939.

The condition of this obligation is such that:

Whereas, on the 21st day of September, 1939, in the above entitled action between the above named The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, plaintiff, and the above named obligees, as defendants, a judgment was rendered against the said plaintiff and the said plaintiff has appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit;

Now, Therefore, if said The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, shall pay the costs if said appeal is dismissed or the judgment affirmed, or such costs as the appellate court may award, if the judgment is modified, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise in full force and effect.

STATEMENT OF THE POINTS ON WHICH PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT INTENDS TO RELY ON APPEAL.

Now comes The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, the plaintiff in the above entitled cause and the appellant in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and in connection with its appeal files the following Statement of Points on which it intends to rely on its appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit from the final decision of the District Court entered on the 21st day of September, 1939.

The said District Court erred in the following respects:

1) In failing to grant plaintiff's motion filed January 14, 1939, to strike immaterial matter from the answer of defendants the City of Indianapolis, et al.

2) In failing to grant plaintiff's motion filed January 14, 1939, to strike immaterial matter from the counterclaim of defendants the City of Indianapolis, et al.

3) In holding that the lease dated September 30, 1913, from The Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company (hereinafter referred to as the "Lease") is invalid and unenforceable against either

a) The defendant City of Indianapolis,

493 b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City,

c) The property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by the said City through its Department of Utilities,

d) The Indianapolis Gas Company,

e) The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, or

f) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust, making this a separate and distinct point as to each of said holdings separately.

4) In failing and refusing to hold that the Lease is binding and enforceable against

a) The defendant City of Indianapolis,

b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City,

c) The property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by said City through its Department of Utilities,

d) The Indianapolis Gas Company,

e) The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and

f) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust, making this a separate and distinct point as to the Court's failure to make each of said holdings.

5) In holding that neither

a) The order of the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana approving the Lease, 494 b) The judgment in the case of Frank S. Fishback v. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al.

c) The judgment in the case of Newton Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al.

d) The judgment in the case of Allen G. Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al.
nor any or all of said orders or judgments, are res judicata of the validity and binding effect of the Lease as against

i) The City of Indianapolis,

ii) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City, iii) The City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust,

iv) The public charitable trust,

v) The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis,

vi) The property of said public charitable trust, or any one or more of them, making this a separate and distinct point as to each of said orders or judgments separately with respect to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, separately.

6) In failing and refusing to hold that the order of the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana approving the Lease is binding upon the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, as to the validity and binding effect of said Lease, making this a separate and distinct point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, separately.

495 7) In failing and refusing to hold that the judgment in the case of Frank S. Fishback v. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., is res judicata of the validity and binding effect of the Lease as against the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, making this a separate and distinct point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, separately.

8) In failing and refusing to hold that the judgment in the case of Allen G. Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., is res judicata of the validity and binding effect of the Lease as against the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, making this a separate and distinct point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of the defendants to this cause, separately.

9) In holding that the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City of Indianapolis and The Indianapolis Gas Company was not inimical to the interests of the plaintiff or the bondholders which it represents.

10) In holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment against The Indianapolis Gas Company for interest on the overdue coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the various dates when such coupons matured.

11) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against The Indianapolis Gas Company for 496 the sum of $106,655.55 (in addition to the sum of $1,032,150), being interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the overdue coupons on bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the dates when such coupons became due to the date of judgment.

12) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis for the sum of $1,032,150, being the amount of the overdue and unpaid coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, which coupons the Citizens Gas Company had agreed to pay.

13) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis for the sum of $106,655.55 (in addition to the sum of $1,032,150), being interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the overdue coupons on bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the dates when such coupons became due to the date of judgment.

14) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against the City of Indianapolis for the sum of $1,032,150, being the amount of the overdue and unpaid coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, for which coupons the City of Indianapolis had become liable.

15) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against the City of Indianapolis for the sum of $106,655.55 (in addition to the sum of $1,032,150), being interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the overdue coupons on bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the dates when such coupons became due to the date of judgment.

16) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against the City of Indianapolis, as trustee of the public charitable trust, for the sum of $1,032,150, being the amount of the overdue and unpaid coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, for which coupons
497 the City of Indianapolis, as trustee of the public charitable trust, had become liable.

17) In failing and refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff against the City of Indianapolis, as trustee of the public charitable trust, for the sum of $106,655.55 (in addition to the sum of $1,032,150), being interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the overdue coupons on bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the dates when such coupons became due to the date of judgment.

18) In failing and refusing to hold that under the issues presented for determination any amounts due the plaintiff from The Indianapolis Gas Company or Citizens Gas Company or the City of Indianapolis or the City of Indianapolis as successor trustee, including said sum of $1,032,150, being the amount of the overdue and unpaid coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and said sum of $106,655.55, being interest at the rate of 6% per annum on the overdue coupons on bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company from the dates when such coupons became due to the date of judgment, are a prior charge and first lien upon the property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by the City of Indianapolis through its Department of Utilities.

19) In failing and refusing to hold that under the issues now presented for determination any amounts due the plaintiff from The Indianapolis Gas Company, Citizens Gas Company, the City of Indianapolis or the City of Indianapolis as successor trustee, including said sum of $1,032,150, being the amount of the overdue coupons on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and said sum of $106,655.55, being the interest on said overdue 498 coupons, are a prior charge and first lien upon all funds held by The Indiana National Bank under the agreement of March 2, 1936.

20) In holding that under the issues presented for determination the plaintiff take nothing in this action as against

a) The City of Indianapolis,

b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City,

c) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust,

d) The property of said public charitable trust conveyed to said City by the Citizens Gas Company on September 9, 1935,

e) Citizens Gas Company, making a separate and distinct point as to each of said holdings separately.

21) In holding that

a) The City of Indianapolis,

b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City,

c) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust,

d) The public charitable trust, and

e) The property of said public charitable trust or any one or more of them, are not estopped by the conduct of the City of Indianapolis or by the conduct of Citizens

499 Gas Company as original trustee of the public charitable trust, or both, from denying the validity and enforceability of the Lease against each of them, making this a separate point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of said defendants, with respect to the conduct of the City of Indianapolis, the Citizens Gas Company, and either of them.

22) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company is not estopped by its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the Lease.

23) In failing and refusing to hold that

a) The City of Indianapolis,

b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City,

c) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust,

d) The public charitable trust, and

e) The property of said public charitable trust, or any one or more of them, are precluded by the laches of the City of Indianapolis or by the laches of Citizens Gas Company as original trustee of the public charitable trust, or both, from denying the validity and enforceability of the Lease against each of them, making this a separate point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of said defendants, with respect to the laches of the City of Indianapolis, the Citizens Gas Company, and either of them.

500 24) In failing to hold that the Citizens Gas Company is precluded by its laches from denying that the Lease is valid and enforceable against it.

25) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee of the public charitable trust, had no power or authority to execute the Lease.

26) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee of the public charitable trust, had no power or authority to execute the Lease and make it effective and binding upon or enforceable against:

a) The City of Indianapolis,

b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City,

c) The defendant City of Indianapolis as successor to

Citizens Gas Company as trustee of the public charitable trust,

d) The public charitable trust, and

e) The property of said public charitable trust, or any one or more of them, making this a separate point as to the public charitable trust, the property of said public charitable trust, and each of said defendants, separately.

27) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee, had no specific power to execute the Lease.

28) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee, was precluded by the trust instruments from executing the Lease.

29) In holding that the Citizens Gas Company was entirely and completely released and discharged from all present and future obligations and liability under the Lease by the conveyance, transfer, and assignment of 501 all of its property and assets to the City on September 9, 1935.

30) In making the parts of Findings of Fact Nos. 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 30, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 44, 47, 49, 50, 51, 56, 57, and 64 hereinafter specifically referred to, each of which parts of said Findings of Fact is

i) Wholly unsupported by the evidence,

ii) Contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence, iii) An inference or conclusion which is wholly unsupported by the evidence, and

iv) An inference or conclusion which is wholly unwarranted as a matter of law.

Each of the parts of Findings hereinafter referred to is objected to on each of the four grounds just stated, and each of said grounds is relied upon as a separate and distinct point as to each part of said Findings hereinafter enumerated. The District Court erred in finding:

a) That there was no evidence that any present owners of Indianapolis Gas bonds purchased such bonds relying on any acts done or representations made by

i) Citizens Gas Company or any of its authorized officers or agents, or

ii) The City of Indianapolis, or any of its authorized officers or agents (Finding 12).

b) That the purposes and obligations of Citizens Gas Company were fixed and controlled entirely by its original and amended Articles of Incorporation, its by-laws, and the Franchise Contract (Finding 14).

c) That all of the rights, property, and assets acquired by Citizens Gas Company were held for the purposes 502 and upon the terms and conditions set forth in its Articles of Incorporation and the Franchise Contract and for no other purpose and upon no other terms and conditions (Finding 15).

d) That the sole purpose and object of the creation and existence of Citizens Gas Company was to act as and perform the duties of the initial trustee of the public charitable trust, as specifically set forth in its Articles of Incorporation and the Franchise Contract (Finding 16).

e) That Citizens Gas Company had no power or authority as a corporation to act otherwise than to perform the duties of initial trustee of said public charitable trust, as specifically set forth in its Articles of Incorporation and the Franchise Contract (Finding 16).

f) That the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust were the then and future gas users of Indianapolis (Finding 17(b)).

g) That Citizens Gas Company was trustee "with a definitely fixed and limited term of trusteeship" (Finding 17(c)).

h) That the trust res under said public charitable trust "was the property and plant of Citizens Gas Company, being the property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Company" (Finding 17(a)).

i) That the Franchise Contract required the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company to contain the provisions set forth in paragraphs (j), (k), (l), (m), and (n) of Finding 18.

j) That the language of Subdivision 7 of the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company is that set forth in Finding 19.

503 k) That there was no provision in any of the trust instruments authorizing Citizens Gas Company to become the lessee of a competing gas property (Finding 20).

l) That plaintiff and all the holders of the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company either

i) Had actual knowledge of, or

ii) Were bound in law by knowledge of the matters and things set forth in Finding 21.

m) That the trust res, the subject of said public charitable trust, did not include any part of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company or any lease on any part of said property (Finding 22).

n) That the specific terms of the Lease are those set forth in Finding 23, particularly those set forth in Subdivisions (d), (e), (h), and (j) of said Finding 23.

o) That no ordinance or resolution was ever adopted by the Common Council or Board of Public Works of the City of Indianapolis

i) Authorizing the execution of the Lease,

ii) Ratifying the Lease, or

iii) Agreeing to be bound by the terms of the Lease (Finding 26).

p) That no action has even been taken by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis

i) Authorizing the acceptance of an assignment of the Lease,

ii) Ratifying the Lease, or

iii) Agreeing to be bound by the terms of the Lease (Finding 27).

504 q) That

i) The adoption of resolutions declining to accept an assignment of the Lease, ii) The recording of such resolutions in the Recorder's office, and

iii) The service of a copy of said resolutions on Citizens Gas Company and The Indianapolis Gas Company, or any one or more of said events, occurred at the same time as the delivery of the assignment of the Lease by Citizens Gas Company to the City, the acceptance of such assignment by the City, and the recording of such assignment by the City in the Recorder's Office of Marion County, Indiana (Finding 28).

r) That prior to September 9, 1935, all of the conditions fixed in its Articles of Incorporation and the Franchise Contract as precedent to the duty and authority of Citizens Gas Company to convey and transfer its property to the City had been fully and completely performed (Finding 30).

s) That on September 9, 1935, nothing further remained to be performed or done by the City of Indianapolis to entitle it to have all of the Citizens Gas property conveyed and transferred to it (Finding 30).

t) That Citizens Gas Company has no property at this time (Finding 32).

u) That the Citizens Gas Company, in making the conveyance and transfer of its property to the City, "fully and completely performed and exhausted all of the duties, powers and authority of Citizens Gas Company as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust." (Finding 33.)

505 v) That after September 9, 1935, neither Citizens Gas Company nor its directors, trustees, or officers had "any further duties, powers or authority as initial trustee of the said public charitable trust, or to hold, own, lease, manage or operate any property or business of any nature whatsoever" (Finding 33).

w) That there is no evidence that Joseph B. Keeling, the Corporation Counsel for the City, had any power or authority to bind the City in respect of the Lease or the approval of the Lease by the Public Service Commission (Finding 36).

x) That no controversy had ever arisen or existed in connection with the validity or invalidity of the Lease prior to July, 1935 (Finding 37).

y) That at the time when the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved the execution of the Lease no claim had been asserted that the Franchise Contract of 1905 and other related papers resulted in the creation of a public charitable trust (Finding 38).

z) That Fishback did not intervene or resist the approval of the Lease by the Public Service Commission as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust (Finding 38).

aa) That Fishback, when he sued in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, sued merely as a stockholder of Citizens Gas Company and a resident freeholder of the City of Indianapolis and not as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust (Finding 39).

bb) That Citizens Gas Company and the City were not made parties defendant to the Fishback case as the initial and successor trustees of the public charitable cc) That there was no averment in the complaint filed by Fishback that a public charitable trust had been created by the Franchise Contract of 1905 (Finding 39).

dd) That the City was dismissed as a party defendant to the Fishback case prior to the entry of a final judgment therein (Finding 39).

ee) That at the date of the final disposition of the Fishback case there was neither an existing controversy nor the ripening seeds of a controversy between The Indianapolis Gas Company, the trustees of its mortgage, or its bondholders, and the City as to the enforceability of the Lease against the City or the trust property (Finding 39).

ff) That up to the date when Fishback dismissed his cause against the City no issue had been presented between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company as to the validity of the Lease (Finding 39).

gg) That there was neither in issue nor decided by the court in the Fishback case any question as to the validity or enforceability of the Lease against the City (Finding 39).

mm) That the Fishback case was tried and decided on the theory that whether the Lease was valid for its entire term or not, the action of the Public Service Commission of Indiana in approving the Lease could not be vacated or set aside (Finding 39).

ii) That new facts have occurred since the determination of the Fishback case which alter the legal rights and relations of the parties thereto (Finding 39).

507 jj) That the transfer of the trust res to the City as succesosr trustee on September 9, 1935, constituted such a new fact since the determination of the Fishback case as to alter the legal rights and relations of the parties to said case (Finding 39).

kk) That neither a controversy as to the enforceability of the Lease against the City nor the ripening seeds of such a controversy existed at any time prior to the date of the final disposition of the Williams case, between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company or its mortgage trustees or bondholders (Finding 40).

ll) That none of the questions involved in the present case were actually litigated in the Williams case (Finding 40).

mm) That none of the questions involved in the present case could have been litigated under the issues in the Williams case (Finding 40).

nn) That no issue was made in the Williams case between The Indianapolis Gas Company, its mortgage trustees, or its bondholders, and the City or the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities in connection with the enforceability of the Lease against the City (Finding 40).

oo) That The Indianapolis Gas Company delivered certain bonds to the Citizens Gas Company "for the purpose of reimbursing Citizens Gas Company for eighty-five per cent (85%) of its capital expenditures on account of extensions and betterments to the plant and system of

The Indianapolis Gas Company made and paid for by Citizens Gas Company" (Finding 41).

508 That it was many years after the execution of the Lease before plaintiff received a copy of said Lease (Finding 41).

qq) That the evidence fails to show that any present owner of bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company knew of, relied upon, or was in any manner influenced by the representations with reference to the Lease made between the years 1914 and 1935 in the sale of such bonds (Finding 44).

rr) That Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Company were advised by the City and its representatives that the only authority which the City had in connection with the sale of its Gas Plant Revenue Bonds was to make a public offering and that the City had no authority to approve or become responsible for any representations made in connection with the resale of said Revenue Bonds by the purchasers thereof (Finding 47).

ss ~~ee~~) That the circulars and advertising issued by the purchasers of the City's Gas Plant Revenue Bonds were issued solely on their own authority and without authorization by the City (Finding 47).

tt) That "there is no evidence to show that any persons who purchased said Gas Plant Revenue Bonds of the City did so on the faith of any representation made by the City or its authorized agents" (Finding 47).

uu) That any representations made by the purchasers of the City's Gas Plant Revenue Bonds were never ratified or approved by the City or any of its authorized representatives (Finding 47).

vv) That in making the payment of the common and preferred stock of Citizens Gas Company and the dividends thereon and the premiums on the retirement of 509 the preferred stock the City did not recognize directly or by implication the validity or enforceability against the City of the Lease (Finding 49).

ww) That The Indianapolis Gas Company was fully advised as early as July 23, 1935, that the City would not accept an assignment of the Lease (Finding 50).

xx) That there were agreements between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company with respect to the operation of the gas producing and distributing plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company, "which agreements have been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935" (Finding 51).

yy) That the City has operated the gas producing and distributing plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company in pursuance of agreements between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company (Finding 51).

zz) That there were agreements between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company which provided in substance that the operation of The Indianapolis Gas Company plant and system by the City should not prejudice the rights of the City (Finding 51).

aaa) That the agreements referred to in Finding 51 as having "been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935," provided that the operation of The Indianapolis Gas Company plant and system by the City should not prejudice the City's rights (Finding 51).

bbb) That the agreements referred to in Finding 51 as having "been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935," provided that the City, by operating The Indianapolis Gas Company plant and system, did not recogccc) That "all payments made by the City of sums of money equal to the interest on The Indianapolis Gas Company bonds, dividends payable under the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913, or any of the monies now in escrow at The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, would not have been made in the absence of the agreement of March 2, 1936, for the temporary use of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and certain correspondence exchanged between The Indianapolis Gas Company and attorneys for the City in connection with the payment so made" (Finding 56).

ddd) That in the contract of March 2, 1936, and the correspondence referred to in Finding 56 "it was agreed that neither the temporary operation of the property nor the payment of such monies by the City should in any way prejudice the City's rights" (Finding 56).

eee) That in the contract of March 2, 1936, and the correspondence referred to in Finding 56 it was agreed that neither the temporary operation of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company nor the payment of the aforesaid monies should constitute an admission on the part of the City as to the validity or binding effect upon the City of the Lease (Finding 56).

fff) That the agreement of March 2, 1936, did not result in the default of interest payments due on the bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company (Finding 56).

ggg) That in the absence of the agreement of March 2, 1936, "the City would not have made payments of sums equal to the interest" (Finding 56).

hhh) That the agreement of March 2, 1936, was 511 not inimical to the interests of plaintiff or any of the bondholders whom it represents (Finding 56).

iii) That the plaintiff and two of the principal bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company were advised on March 11, 1936, of the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936 (Finding 57).

jjj) That the plaintiff and two of the principal bondholders received and accepted the sum of $171,000 with full knowledge of the terms of the agreement of March 2, 1936 (Finding 57).

kkk) That representatives of either

i) two of the principal bondholders of The Indianapolis Gas Company, ii) The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, or

iii) The New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, attended a meeting at the office of the Chase National Bank in New York City on April 10, 1936 (Finding 64).

lll) That an arrangement was made, either at the meeting of March 11, 1936 or at the meeting of April 10, 1936, by which the Chase National Bank would obtain an opinion from the law firm of Newton D. Baker, Esquire, either as to the validity of the Lease or its enforceability against the City of Indianapolis, or both (Finding 64).

31) In sustaining the objection of counsel for the City and refusing to admit in evidence Plaintiffs' Exhibit 135 for Identification, being the appellees' brief in the Supreme Court of Indiana in the case of Allen G. Wil- 512 liams, appellant v. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., appellees.

32) In admitting in evidence City' Exhibit 12, the minutes of a meeting of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City of Indianapolis held on September 9, 1935 (being pages 178 to 236, inclusive, of the minute book of said Board of Directors).

33) In admitting in evidence each of the following exhibits offered by the City of Indianapolis, each of which exhibits was wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in the case and constituted merely self-serving declarations on the part of the City of Indianapolis, its counsel, or Halsey, Stuart & Company:

a) City's Exhibits 28-A and 28-B, the letter of January 4, 1937, from Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson to Halsey, Stuart & Company.

b) City's Deposition Exhibit 2, the letter of September 25, 1935, from Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson to Halsey, Stuart & Company.

c) City's Deposition Exhibits 3 and 3-A, the letter of September 23, 1935, from Halsey, Stuart & Company to Mr. A. L. Rabb.

d) City's Deposition Exhibits 4 and 4-A, the letter of September 21, 1935, from Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson to R. E. Simond.

e) City's Deposition Exhibit 5, the letter of September 18, 1935, from R. E. Simond to Mr. Albert Rabb.

34) In sustaining the objection of the City's counsel to the following question asked by plaintiff's counsel of the witness Gavin L. Payne:

"From your experience in the field of investment banking and particularly in the field of public utility se-513 curities, do you know how those manuals are made up?"

After the Court sustained said objection plaintiff's counsel made an offer of proof as follows:

"We offer to prove by the witness that the practice in making up these manuals is for the publishers of the manuals to send questionnaires to the various companies to receive that information from the companies and that the information, contained in the manuals, as made up from the information received from the various companies upon which the reports are made."

35) In admitting in evidence City's Deposition Exhibit 1, said exhibit being entitled "Memorandum Re: 99 Year Lease from Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company."

Wherefore, for each and all of the errors of the District Court enumerated in the foregoing Statement of Points plaintiff-appellant prays that said final decision of the District Court entered on the 21st day of September, 1939 be reversed; that the Circuit Court of Appeals enter an order granting plaintiff-appellant such relief prayed for in its bill of complaint as amended and supplemented as comes within the issues presented for determination, and denying defendants, the City of Indianapolis, et al., the relief prayed for in their counterclaim; or, in the alternative, that the Circuit Court of Appeals order and direct the District Court to enter a final order reversing its said final decision entered on the 21st day of September, 1939, granting plaintiff-appellant such relief prayed for in its bill of complaint as amended and supplemented as comes within the issues presented for determination, and denying defendants, the City of Indianapolis, et al., the relief prayed for in their counterclaim; and that it be granted such other and further relief as the Court shall deem proper.

STATEMENT OF POINTS ON WHICH THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY, DEFENDANT-APPELLANT INTENDS TO RELY ON ITS APPEAL.

Now comes The Indianapolis Gas Company, a defendant in the above entitled cause both to the complaint of plaintiff and to the counterclaim of each defendant, respectively, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and of City of Indianapolis, and individuals suing, respectively, as members of the Board of Trustees for Utilities and as members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of such City, and an appellant of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and in connection with its appeal files the following Statement of Points on which it intends to rely on its appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit of the United States, from the final decision of the above named District Court entered on the 21st day of September, 1939.

The said District Court erred in each of the following respects:

1. The Court erred in decreeing that the lease dated September 30, 1913 from the Indianapolis Gas Com-
1040 pany to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is invalid and unenforceable against each:

(a) The City of Indianapolis

(b) The individual defendants who are members of the Board of Trustees or of the Board of Directors for Utilities for said City.

(c) The property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by said City through its Department of Utilities,

(d) The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis,

(e) The Indianapolis Gas Company.

2. The Court erred in decreeing that neither the order of the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana approving the said lease nor the judgments in the cases of Frank S. Fishback vs. Public Service Commission of Indiana; and Allen G. Williams vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al., nor either of them are, res adjudicata of the validity and binding effect of said lease upon each of the following defendants:

(a) The City of Indianapolis

(b) The individual defendants-members of the Board of Trustees and Directors of the Department of Utilities of said City,

(c) The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

3. The Court erred in decreeing that the plaintiff below recover against this defendant-appellant the sum of
$1,032,150.00 together with interest thereon from date
1041 of judgment at the rate of six per cent per annum.

4. The Court erred in its conclusion of law that the City of Indianapolis was not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability of the lease against it and the property, which had been formerly owned and operated by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, which it had taken over on September 9, 1935.

5. The Court erred in its conclusion of law that the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis was not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease.

6. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that the City of Indianapolis and the individual members of the Board of Trustees and Board of Directors for Utilities of said City, were precluded by laches from denying the validity and enforceability of the lease against said City and the individual defendants and the property formerly owned and operated by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis which it had taken over on September 9, 1935.

7. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis was precluded by laches from denying the validity and enforceability of the lease against it.

8. The Court erred in its conclusion of law that the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis was completely released of all present and future obligations and liabilities under said lease by the conveyance and assignment to the City of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935, of all its property and assets.

9. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that by reason of the fact that the City
1042 took over all the assets of the Citizens Gas Company and that the sole consideration therefor was paid by it directly to the stockholders and bondholders of said company, leaving it without assets with which to satisfy its obligations, the City and the property taken over by it from the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is now obligated to pay all liabilities of the Citizens Gas Company including those arising under said lease.

10. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that by the provisions of the lease, all obligations of the Indianapolis Gas Company to its bondholders for payment of interest had been assumed and expressly undertaken by Citizens Gas Company and its successors and assigns.

11. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that the obligation to satisfy such judgment as might properly be entered in the cause is that of the City of Indianapolis and the public charitable trust it is administering and the Citizens Gas Company as principals, and the sole obligation of the Indianapolis Gas Company, is that of a surety.

12. The Court erred in refusing to decree as a conclusion of law that the defendants below should be held liable for any judgment entered in the cause in the following order:

First: The City of Indianapolis and the property of the public charitable trust received by said City from Citizens Gas Company, Second: The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and Third: The Indianapolis Gas Company.

1043 (As To erroneous "Special Findings of Facts".)

13. The Court erred in its Findings of Fact Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 30, 32, 33, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51 and 56, as hereinafter specifically referred to, each of which parts of said Special Findings of Facts is

i) wholly unsupported by the evidence.

ii) contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence.

iii) states an inference or conclusion which is wholly unsupported by the evidence, and

iv) states an inference or conclusion that is contrary to law and is wholly unwarranted as a matter of law.

Each of the parts of findings hereinafter referred to is objected to on each of the four grounds just stated above, and each of said grounds is relied upon as a separate and distinct point as to each port of said findings hereinafter enumerated.

The District Court erred in finding:

(a) That the purposes and obligations of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis were and are fixed and controlled entirely by its original and amended Articles of Incorporation, as amended, and its by-laws and the franchise ordinance and contract between the City of Indianapolis and said company's assignors, now in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit one (1), as copied in the stipulation of the parties offered in evidence. (Finding 14.)

(b) That all the rights, property and assets owned and acquired by the defendant counterclaimant, Citizens Gas Company, were held by it as the initial trustee of a public charitable trust for the benefit of present and prospective gas consumers of the City of Indianapolis, and for

1044 the purposes and upon the terms and conditions set forth in said instruments as set out in plaintiff's Exhibit one (1) with the stipulation of the parties, and the enactment providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, for no other purpose and on no other terms and conditions. (Finding 15.)

(c) That the sole purpose and object of the creation, organization and existence of the Citizens Gas Company was to act and perform the duties of initial trustee of said public charitable trust, as specifically set forth in said instruments and enactment contained in the stipulation of the parties as plaintiffs, Exhibit one. (Finding 16.)

(d) That said Citizens Gas Company had no power or authority as a corporation to act otherwise than to act and perform the duties of initial trustee of a public charitable trust as specifically set forth in the said instruments and enactment as contained in the stipulation of the parties as Plaintiff's Exhibit one (Finding 16).

(e) That the settlers of the public charitable trust were (only) the public-spirited citizens who subscribed for stock of Citizens Gas Company (Finding 17a).

(f) That the beneficiaries of the said public charitable trust were (only) the then and future gas users of Indianapolis (Finding 17b).

(g) That Citizens Gas Company was a trustee "with a definitely fixed and limited term of trusteeship" (Finding 17c).

1045 (h) That the City of Indianapolis was the successor of Citizens Gas Company as trustee of said public charitable trust, and is the present trustee (Finding 17d).

(i) That "the trust res was the property and plant of Citizens Gas Company, being the property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Company" (Finding 17e).

(j) That the franchise contract "creating the public charitable trust" required the "articles of Incorporation" of an Indiana Corporation which the individual grantees were to organize to which the franchise should be assigned, to "provide" anything at all other than what the statute (Acts 1905, p. 434, ch. 139, #1) directed to be written therein (Finding 18).

(k) That anything recited in the court's finding as what the Citizens Gas Company's "articles of Incorporation should provide" because of any stipulations in the city "franchise contract" constituted any part of such articles or of that company's charter, or in any way defined or limited its corporate powers, except only the provisions therein that

(a) the capital stock to be not less than $1,000,000; and that

(h) the business and prudential affairs are to be managed by a Board of nine Directors; and that

(j) the company to be organized shall secure, acquire or construct and put in operation a fuel gas plant; which the statute (Acts 1905, p. 434, ch. 139, #1) commands to be written therein (Finding 18).

1046 capital stock, directors and business of supplying "light, heat and power" * * * "to the City of Indianapolis" and the term of existence of "50 years" for which the statute provided, any other of said provisions written into the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company, or stipulated by the franchise contract of its assignors with the City of Indianapolis to be provided therein, operated or could operate in any way to limit the power of such company to make contracts within its statutory powers then possessed or afterward conferred, or that they in any way took away or limited said company's liability under the contracts which it did execute within its statutory powers as a public utility corporation to furnish light, heat and power to a "city". (Finding 18)

(m) That the franchise contract between the City of Indianapolis and those who afterward assigned it to Citizens Gas Company, providing that the company which they should incorporate and to which they should assign the franchise should include provisions in its Articles of Association not commanded by the Statute (Acts 1905, p. 434, supra), could make any such thing written therein to constitute lawful provisions of such articles; more especially could so make what the court has lettered as follows:

(i) that the stockholders should be repaid their investment with 10% per annum, although that amount had not been earned and the company should be left with unperformed obligations;

(j) that the franchise was conditioned on the company acquiring title to an existing gas fuel plant with not less than 100 miles of mains;

1047 (l) limiting the price which should ever be charged the consumer for gas to 60 cents per thousand cubic feet under penalty of the franchise becoming void. (Finding 18)

(n) That any provision which the City of Indianapolis may have written into a franchise contract with individuals as to what should be contained in the Articles of Incorportion of a corporation which such individuals thereby agreed to organize to which they agreed to convey the franchise, other than the six things which the statute authorized and commanded to be expressed therein (Acts 1905, p. 434, supra), controlled or in any degree limited the corporation, when organized, in the exercise of its statutory powers in making contracts with third persons as authorized by law. (Finding 18)

(o) That anything written into the "Articles of Incorporation adopted by Citizens Gas Company" reciting the "essential provisions required by the Franchise Contract" between that company's assignors and the City of Indianapolis, different from or in excess of the six things commanded by the statute (Acts 1905, p. 434, supra) to be contained in the Articles of a corporation for supplying light, heat and power to the city and its inhabitants; to wit, besides (1) the corporate name, (2) the object of incorporation, (3) the amount of stock, (4) the term of existence, (5) the number and names of directors, and (6) its principal place of business; either did or could constitute any lawful part of such Articles of Incor-1048 poration, or amount to anything more than a private contract between the stockholders among themselves and by them with the City of Indianapolis (Finding 19).

(p) That either the franchise contract of the City of Indianapolis with individuals who assigned it to Citizens Gas Company (especially the last ten lines of subdivision (d) the court partly quotes) or the Articles of Incorporation of that company, in Article VII or elsewhere, or purported to contain the provision which the court's finding says was "subdivision 7 of such articles" (Finding 19).

(q) That there was no provision in the "franchise" of Citizens Gas Company, until 1921, authorizing the execution of any mortgage, except one to be executed at the time of the transfer of the property to the city, if then necessary (Finding 20).

(r) That there was no provision in the instruments for the incorporation of Citizens Gas Company authorizing it "to become the lessee of a competing gas property" (Finding 20).

(s) That the "objects" of the Citizens Gas Company, or its duty, power and authority, included "to convey all the said property to the City of Indianapolis" "at the end of the period of franchise ordiance; to wit; on August 30, 1930" upon compliance with any "conditions fixed therein"; or that The Indianapolis Gas Company "had actual knowledge of, or were bound by law by knowledge of" such non-existent fact (Finding 21).

1049 (t) That upon "conveyance and transfer" of all of its "property to the City of Indianapolis" under the "terms and provisions of said instruments", the said franchise contract with said city and what was written into its own articles of association as therein provided, as construed with the law providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, the Citizens Gas Company (incorporated for 50 years) was "to be wound up"; or that The Indianapolis Gas Company knew or was bound to know this non-existent fact (Finding 21).

(u) (1) That any "trust res" in any property of Citizens Gas Company was created or existed until after and except subject to the performance of all said company's obligations under its lease (Ex. B with complaint) of the gas plant and property of The Indianapolis Gas Company; or that with such lease unperformed Citizens Gas Company's conveyance of all it owned could vest any property in the City of Indianapolis upon any trust for itself or its inhabitants using gas, or for paying the stockholders dividends on their shares or repaying their investments (Finding 22).

(2) That on or after September 30, 1913, the "trust res" did not include any part of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company or any lease on any part of such property. (Finding 22).

(v) (1) That the lease (Finding 19) contained the provisions as stated even so far as they purport to be quoted, because the "direct quotations" are incorrect except 1050 only (n) subdivision 22 and (a) the last rhetorical paragraph of subdivision 32 of the lease, but especially that such lease contained the specifications (b), (d), (h), (i), (j), (m) and (o). (Finding 23).

(2) And that the matters set out in the finding in the court's own words are a recital of the "provisions" that the lease contains. (Finding 23)

(w) That the City did not by ordinance or resolution of the Common Council or the Board of Public Works agree to be bound by the terms of the lease.

(x) That no action was ever taken by the Trustees or Directors of the Department of Utilities.

(1) authorizing acceptance of an assignment of the lease,

(2) ratifying the lease,

(3) agreeing to be bound by its terms (Finding 27).

(y) (1) That, prior to September 30, 1935, all of the conditions fixed in the said instruments (of agreement, franchise and articles of association) and enactment (of statutes) as precedent to the duty and authority of Citizens Gas Company to convey and transfer the said property (to the city) had been fully and completely performed;

(2) That on said date nothing further remained to be performed or done by the City of Indianapolis to entitle it in law to have all of said property conveyed and transfered to it;

(3) That on said date Citizens Gas Company by its proper corporate officers, executed and delivered instruments of conveyance and transfer of all of the 1051 said property to the City of Indianapolis, in the manner and form and in strict compliance with its duty and authority so to do. (Finding 30)

(z) (1) That since September 9, 1935, the City has operated the gas producing and distributing plant and system of Citizens Gas Company "as trustee of the Public Charitable Trust created in 1905 and 1906".

(2) That since September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas Company has not been engaged in any business, and has no property at this time: (Finding 32)

(aa) That Citizens Gas Company, its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees and Officers, in making the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all its property to the City of Indianapolis, fully and completely performed and exhausted all of its duties, powers and authorities as initial trustee of said Public Charitable Trust. (Finding 33)

(bb) That neither Citizens Gas Company, nor its Board of Directors, Voting Trustees or any of its officers, from and after September 9, 1935, has any further duties, powers or authority to hold, own, lease, manage or operate any property or business whatsoever, or as initial trustee of said Public Charitable Trust. (Finding 33)

(cc) (1) That the issues tendered by the bill of complaint in the case of Newton Todd against Citizens Gas Company and others in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana on April 30, 1929, were:

(a) That the original agreement between the City and Citizens Gas contained in the franchise contract of 1905 was abrogated and annulled when Citizens Gas Company surrendered the franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit.

1052 (b) That the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit created a new contract between the State and Citizens Gas Company, one of the terms of which was that the City should have the right to acquire the property of Citizens Gas Company at a value to be determined by the Public Service Commission.

(c) That an Act of the Indiana General Assembly of 1929 purporting to legalize all provisions of the Articles of Association of Citizens Gas Company and particularly those in respect to the mode of acquiring the plant and property of Citizens Gas Company by the City, resulted in an impairment of the obligations of the contract above referred to in violation of the Constitutions of the State of Indiana and of the United States.

(d) That the franchise contract of 1905 merely gave an option to the City to purchase the property of Citizens Gas Company, and that this resulted in a violation of the rule against perpetuities. (Finding 37)

(cc) (2) That no controversy had ever arisen or existed in connection with the validity or invalidity of the lease prior to July, 1935.

(dd) That until the transfer of the trust res by Citizens Gas Company to the City, all payments required by the terms of said lease had been made as required therein and there had been no breach or threatened breach by Citizens Gas Company or its covenants under said lease, under the issues presented at this time for determination. (Finding 37)

(ee) That when the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved the execution of the lease, no claim had been asserted that the franchise contract of 1905 and other related papers resulted in the creation of a public charitable trust. (Finding 38)

(ff) (1) That Fishback, in his action in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, against Citizens
1053 Gas Company and The Indianapolis Gas Company of the City of Indianapolis, and others, commenced November 28, 1913, sued as a stockholder of Citizens Gas Company and as a resident freeholder of the City of Indianapolis, and not as a beneficiary of a public charitable trust. (Finding 39)

(2) That Citizens Gas Company and the City were not made parties defendant as the initial and successor trustees of a public charitable trust, but are parties defendant in their individual capacity. (Finding 39.)

(gg) That there was neither in issue nor decided by the court in said Fishback case any question as to the validity or enforceability against the City of the lease. (Finding 39)

(hh) That since the determination of the Fishback case, new facts have occurred which alter the legal rights and relations of the parties, to wit—the transfer of the gas plant and property to the City on September 9, 1935. (Finding 39)

(ii) That none of the questions involved in this case were actually litigated in the case of Allen G. Williams against Citizens Gas Company, commenced on March 12, 1930, in the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, nor could such questions have been litigated under the issues in that case. (Finding 40)

(jj) That Citizens Gas Company has expended for additions and betterments to the plant of The Indianapolis Gas Company approximately $200,000 for which it has received no reimbursement. (Finding 41)

1054 (kk) (1) That it was many years after the execution of the lease before the plaintiff in this action received a copy of the same. That there was any "predecessor trustee of the Chase National Bank", (only the same trustee whose name was changed by consolidation), etc. (Finding 41)

(2) That there is no proof that any predecessor trustee of the Chase National Bank which certified bonds either knew of the existence of the lease or relied upon it as a basis for a certification of any Indianapolis Gas Company Bonds.

(ll) That from the period of its organization in 1906 to June 30, 1935, Citizens Gas Company paid dividends to the holders of its common stock at the rate of ten per cent per annum. (Finding 43)

(mm) (1) That it was "in accordance with the provisions of the franchise contract for 'the plants, property and assets of said (Citizens Gas) Company (to) be conveyed to said City of Indianapolis' ", or that Citizens Gas Company on March 20, 1929, or April 3, 1929, or at any time, "was obligated to make such a conveyance." (Finding 45)

(2) That the circular and newspaper advertising issued by the purchasers of said revenue bonds were issued solely on their own authority and without authorization by the City; and that "any representations made by the purchasers of such bonds were never ratified or approved by the City or any of its authorized representatives." Finding 47)

(nn) That Citizens Gas Company paid all the dividends on said preferred stock (of that company) 1055 up to the time of its redemption (on or about September 1, 1935); that "all of said common stock was retired". (Finding 48)

(oo) That Citizens Gas Company's mortgage on its gas plant and property had been executed in violation of the terms of any Public Charitable Trust. (Finding 49.)

(pp) That payment to holders of the common and preferred stock of Citizens Gas Company of the face value of their stock and dividends thereon out of or in exchange for that company's property without having performed that company's obligations under its contract for the lease of the gas plant and property of The Indianapolis Gas Company, and without making provision for such performance, was "in accordance with the decree of the United States District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the Todd and Cotter cases". (Finding 49)

(qq) That City of Indianapolis was required to make payments to the stockholders of Citizens Gas Company of the face value of their respective shares of stock and unpaid dividends thereon before taking over the gas plant and property of that company as a trust res. (Finding 49)

(rr) That in taking over the gas plant and property of Citizens Gas Company upon payment to its common stockholders of the face value of their respective shares of stock with dividends at 10% per annum for two and one-half years past, so as to make a total reimburse-1056 ment of all the money they had invested with 10% per annum income thereon for the total period of 30 years or less that it was invested, and to its preferred stockholders of the face value of their respective shares with dividends at 5% per annum for one year, so as to reimburse them for their total investment with cumulative dividends at 5% per annum for their total period of their investment, the City of Indianapolis did not "recognize" the enforceability against such City of the lease by that company of The Indianapolis Gas Company's property. (Finding 49)

(ss) That The Indianapolis Gas Company prior to September 9, 1935, was fully advised of the transfer to the City of Indianapolis of the plant and property of Citizens Gas Company, and "as early as July 23d, 1935, was advised that the City would not accept an assignment of the lease." (Finding 50)

(tt) That agreements between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company under which the City has operated the Gas producing and distributing plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company "have been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935." (Finding 51)

(uu) That any "correspondence" exchanged between The Indianapolis Gas Company and attorneys for the City before September 30, 1935, contained any agreement whatever by The Indianapolis Gas Company, or that the contract of March 22, 1936, stipulated as to the effect upon rights of the parties of anything which had already been done, as against the mere future effect of the circumstance that the City "may continue to operate the 1057 plant and equipment covered by said lease" and make certain payments, without such operation or the agreement or the payments constituting an admission by the City that the lease is valid or binding, and without the company's consent thereto or the execution of the agreement or acceptance of specified payments and consent to other payments by the City on the part of the company constituting any admission or estoppel of The Indianapolis Gas Company to insist that said lease is valid and binding. (Finding 56)

(vv) That in the contract of March 2, 1936, and any correspondence between The Indianapolis Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis "it was agreed that neither the temporary operation of the property (described in the lease) nor the payment of such monies by the City should in any way prejudice the City's rights." Finding 56)

The District Court also erred in the further following respects:

14. In stating as so-called "conclusions of law", the further findings that are not conclusions drawn from any findings of facts in the preceding paragraphs numbered one (1) to sixty-eight (68), inclusive, of the Court's "Special Findings of Facts", but each of which constitutes assertions of facts and of conclusions of facts as therein stated; which are numbered, respectively as "conclusions of law" No. five (5), No. six (6) and No. eight (8), as follows:

(ww) That "Citizens Gas Company, as initial trustee of a public charitable trust with a fixed date of expiration of its trusteeship had no power or authority to exe-1058 cute a lease for 82 years beyond the expiration of its term of trusteeship which would be binding upon and enforceable against its successor trustee, the City." (Conclusion 5a)

(xx) That the trust instruments (written into the city franchise, and articles of incorporation, and by-laws of Citizens Gas Company; Finding 14 and 15) "properly construed precluded the initial trustee from executing such a lease." (Conclusion 5b)

(yy) That "the lease is not a valid and enforceable obligation against Citizens Gas Company." (Conclusion 6)

(zz) That Citizens Gas Company "was entirely and completely released and discharged from all present and future obligation and liability under said lease, by the conveyance, transfer and assignment of all its property and assets to the City on September 9, 1935. (Conclusion 6)

Wherefore, for each and all of the errors of the District Court enumerated in the foregoing statement of points, this defendant-appellant and counterclaim defendant-appellant prays that the final decision and judgment of the District Court entered on the 21st day of September, 1939, be reversed; that the Circuit Court of Appeals enter an order denying to the plaintiff the reliefs as against this defendant-appellant of the personal judgment for money prayed for in plaintiff's bill of complaint, as 1059 amended, and denying to each of the counter-claimants, Citizens Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis and individuals suing jointly with it, respectively, as members of the Board of Trustees for Utilities and as members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City, the relief prayed for in each of their said counterclaims; or in the alternative, that the Circuit Court of Appeals order and direct the District Court to enter a final order reversing its said final decision and judgment entered on the 21st day of September, 1939, and denying to the plaintiff, The Chase National Bank of New York, any personal judgment for money as against this defendant-appellant as prayed for in its bill of complaint, as amended, and denying to each of the counter-claimants, Citizens Gas Company and the City of Indianapolis, et al., respectively, any and all relief as against this counterclaim defendant-appellant, prayed for in their respective counterclaims; and that this defendant-appellant also counterclaim defendant-appellant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, be granted such other and further relief as the Court shall deem just and proper.

(c) In place of the last 28 lines on page 9 insert:

"(Here follows paragraph 1(i) of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 84-85))."

(d) In place of all but the first 2 lines on page 11, and the first 22 lines on page 12 insert:

"(Here follow subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 93-94))."

(e) In place of the last 30 lines on page 14 insert:

"(Here follows all of the first paragraph of subdivision 1 of the Lease except the last sentence thereof (Exhibit B to the bill of complaint, I R. 55-56))."

(f) In place of the last 30 lines on page 17 and the first 9 lines on page 18 insert:

"(Here follows the first grammatical paragraph of subdivision 15 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 64))."

(g) In place of the last 11 lines on page 18 and the first 15 lines on page 19 insert:

"(Here follows subdivision 22 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 72))."

2. As to the "Special Findings of Fact" of the Court:

(a) In place of the last 20 lines on page 4 and the first 13 lines on page 5 insert:

"(Here follows the fifth grammatical paragraph of subdivision XIV of the Mortgage (Exhibit A to the bill of complaint, I R. 46, lines 13-36))."

(b) In place of the last 2 lines on page 10 and the first 17 lines on page 11 insert:

(c) In place of the last 15 lines on page 11 and the first 13 lines on page 12 insert:

"(Here follows paragraph 1(i) of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 84-85))."

(d) In place of the last 22 lines on page 13 and all of page 14 insert:

"(Here follow subdivisions 21, 22, 23 and 24 of the Franchise Contract (part of Exhibit C to the bill, I R. 93-94))."

(e) In place of the last 20 lines on page 17 and the first 11 lines on page 18 insert:

"(Here follows all of the first paragraph of subdivision 1 of the Lease except the last sentence thereof (Exhibit B to the bill of complaint, I R. 55-56))."

(f) In place of the last 25 lines on page 20 and the first 15 lines on page 21 insert:

"(Here follows the first grammatical paragraph of subdivision 15 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 64))."

(g) In place of the last 7 lines on page 21 and the first 19 lines on page 22 insert:

"(Here follows subdivision 22 of the Lease (Exhibit B to the bill, I R. 72))."

3. As to the complete stenographic report of the proceedings at the trial, omit:

(a) Page 112, last 8 lines; all of pages 113 and 114, and all of page 115 except the last line.

4. As to Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 (the record in Todd v. Citizens Gas), this exhibit was merely marked for identification and should not be printed, except to the extent that other exhibits hereinafter enumerated were taken therefrom.

5. As to Plaintiffs' Exhibit 3 (Appellants' Brief in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company), this exhibit was merely marked for identification and should not be printed, except to the extent that other exhibits hereinafter enumerated were taken therefrom.

6. There are no Stipulation Exhibits bearing numbers 1 to 4, inclusive, 10, 11, 12, 15 to 19, inclusive, 21, 25 to 29, inclusive, 33, 34, 41 to 46, inclusive, 51 to 54, inclusive, 57, or 71 to 74, inclusive.

7. As to Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 5, the Agreement of Lease set forth therein beginning in the middle of page 3 and continuing through the first 31 lines on page 20 should be omitted and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

"Here is inserted the proposed 'Agreement of Lease'. Said Agreement of Lease is substantially identical with the Lease finally executed between the parties, a copy of which is attached to the bill of complaint as Exhibit B thereto (I R. 51-80), with the following exceptions:

"(a) The proposed 'Agreement of Lease' did not contain:

"(I) The metes and bounds description of the Indianapolis Gas property as it appears in the 4th to 9th grammatical paragraphs, inclusive, of the executed Lease (I R. 52-4).

"(II) The 13th grammatical paragraph of the executed Lease (I R. 55).

"(III) The 3rd grammatical paragraph of Subdivision 6 of the executed Lease (I R. 58).

"(IV) The last grammatical paragraph of Subdivision 7 of the executed Lease (I R. 60).

"(V) The next to the last grammatical paragraph of Subdivision 15 of the executed Lease (I R. 66).

"(VI) All of Subdivision 16 of the executed Lease, except the first sentence thereof (I R. 66-7).

"(VII) Subdivisions 26, 27 and 27½ (containing 19 grammatical paragraphs) of the executed Lease (I R. 73-77).

"(VIII) Subdivision 31 of the executed Lease (I R. 79).

"(b) In place of the 3rd, 4th, and 5th grammatical paragraphs of Subdivision 21 of the Lease as executed (I R. 70, lines 8-43), the proposed Agreement of Lease contained the following provisions:

"'2. The Lessee will pay to the Lessor as additional rental for the demised property:

"'On the 31st day of December, 1913, the sum of ..... thousand Dollars, being at the rate of One Hundred and Twenty Thousand Dollars per year for the period from the beginning of this lease to the 1st day of January, 1914.

"'On the 30th day of June and the 31st day of December, 1914, and thereafter semi-annually on the last days of June and December of each year, the sum of Seventy Thousand Dollars, provided however when the dividends paid on the capital stock of the Lessee Company shall in any calendar year equal eight per cent of the par value thereof, thereupon in the calendar year following the semi-annual rental to be paid the Lessor shall be Eighty Thousand Dollars and being thus once fixed shall, except as hereafter provided, remain at such sum during the remainder of the term created by this lease; provided if in any calendar year during the running of this lease after the rental hereunder has reached the sum of $160,000 a year, the earnings of the Lessee available for dividends to its stockholders shall not be sufficient to enable a dividend of eight per cent to be paid to the Lessee's stockholders (whether or not in fact such dividend be actually declared and paid), then the rental to be paid to the Lessor under this paragraph of the lease for the succeeding calendar year shall be only One Hundred and forty thousand dollars ($140,000), payable in two equal semi-annual payments, as hereinbefore provided. For any fractional six months period immediately preceding the termination of the lease, the rental shall be at the same rate as that paid for the preceding six months period.'

"(c) In place of Subdivision 22 of the Lease as executed (I R. 72), the proposed Agreement of Lease contained Subdivisions 22 and 23, reading as follows:

"'22. The Lessee covenants to perform and observe all the covenants and agreements of the Lessor, except those as to the payment of the principal of the bonds, contained in its mortgage to the Trust Company of America, dated October 1st, 1902, securing an issue of bonds in the sum of Seven Million Five Hundred Thousand Dollars ($7,500,000) hereinabove referred to; and also all covenants and agreements of the Lessor, except those as to the payment of the principal of the bonds contained in any refunding or renewal mortgage executed pursuant to the provisions of Article 7 of this lease.

"'As between the parties hereto it is agreed that the Lessee may at any time invest its funds in the outstanding bonds of the Lessor, but its acquirement thereof shall be not deemed a cancellation or retirement thereof unless the Lessee expressly elects to have the same cancelled or retired.

"'23. The Lessee covenants that it will upon the original or other maturity of any of the obligations secured by the aforesaid mortgage of the Lessor, or by any mortgage or mortgages taking its place, refinance such debts with new bonds secured by mortgage on the leased property, or with other obligations of the Lessor, in such manner and form as the Lessee shall deem advisable and the Lessor in writing approves, and the Lessor covenants to do such acts as may be reasonably required of it to carry out such refinancing.')".

8. Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibits 8 and 9 should be omitted in printing.

9. Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 30, the bill of complaint in Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, appears on pages 2 to 72 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 for Identification (the transcript of the record in said cause). This exhibit should be printed in full with the following exceptions:

(a) In place of the last 28 lines on page 5, all of pages 6 and 7, and the first 23 lines on page 8 insert:

"(Here follows detailed description of real estate owned by Citizens Gas Company)."

(b) In place of the last 25 lines on page 9, all of pages 10 to 21, inclusive, and all of page 22 except the last 10 lines insert:

"(Here follows the Franchise Contract of August 25, 1905, which appears as part of Exhibit C to the bill (I R. 81-94))."

(c) In place of the last 6 lines on page 23, and all of pages 24 to 27, inclusive, insert:

(d) In place of the last 21 lines on page 34, all of pages 35, 36 and 37, and the first 15 lines on page 38 insert:

"(Here follows a certificate of amendment to the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas Company, filed August 27, 1921, which appears as part of Exhibit C to the bill (I R. 112-116))."

(e) In place of the last 25 lines on page 41, all of page 42, and all of page 43 except the last two lines insert:

"(Here follows the resolution adopted by the Board of Public Works on March 20, 1929, a copy of which is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 22)."

(f) In place of the last 26 lines on page 44 and the first 12 lines on page 45 insert:

"(Here follows the first resolution of the Board of Directors of Citizens Gas Company adopted on April 3, 1929, a copy of which is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 23)."

(g) In place of the last 21 lines on page 45, all of page 46, and the first 27 lines on page 47 insert:

"(Here follows the second resolution of the Board of Directors of Citizens Gas Company adopted on April 3, 1929, a copy of which is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 24)."

10. Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 31, the answer of the City of Indianapolis in said Todd case, appears on pages 115 to 152 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 for Identification (the record in said cause). This exhibit should be printed in full.

11. Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 32, plaintiff's amended motion to strike out portions of the answer of the City of Indianapolis, et al. in the Todd case, appears on pages 154 to 161 of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 2 for Identification. This exhibit should be printed in full with the following exceptions:

(a) Omit all but the first 5 lines on page 156 and all of page 157 except the last 6 lines and in lieu thereof insert:

"(Here follows all but the first paragraph of subdivision 8 of the answer of the City of Indianapolis, et al. in the Todd case, a copy of which answer is in evidence as Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 31)."

(b) Omit the last 32 lines on page 160 and the first 16 lines on page 161 and in lieu thereof insert:

"(Here follows all of the first paragraph of subdivision 2 of the answer of the City of Indianapolis, et al. in the Todd case (Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 31) except the first few lines of said paragraph, reading as follows: 'These answering defendants deny the allegations of Subdivision II of the complaint that the plaintiff is the owner of 250 shares of the common capital stock of defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis')."

12. Plaintiffs' Stipulation Exhibit 35, the bill of complaint in Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., et al., appears on pages 110 (last 12 lines) to 228 (all except last 10 lines), inclusive, of Plaintiffs' Exhibit 3 for Identification (being Appellants' Brief in said cause in the Supreme Court of Indiana). This exhibit should be printed in full with the following exceptions:

(a) In place of the matter beginning on the third line of page 115 and continuing through the third line on page 132 insert:

"(Here follows the Franchise Contract of August 25, 1905, which appears as part of Exhibit C to the bill (I R. 81-94))."

(b) In place of the last 11 lines on page 132, pages 133 to 136, and the first 19 lines on page 137 insert:

PLAINTIFFS' EXHIBIT 139.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

For the Southern District of Indiana,

Indianapolis Division.

Newton Todd, Plaintiff.
vs.
Citizens Gas Company, et al., Defendants.
In Equity No. 1191.

The parties hereto agree that for the purpose of the trial and final hearing of this case, the following facts, in addition to those admitted in the answers, are true. All parties reserve the right to object to the introduction of any part of this stipulation on any ground other than that the facts therein contained have not been established by the best evidence.

(2) (d). Plaintiff, Newton Todd, brought and has maintained this suit on behalf of himself and other holders of certificates issued by said Board of Trustees who may wish to join in this suit and contribute to the expense thereof, and plaintiff, Newton Todd, in this suit, is asserting what he claims are corporate rights and immunities of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. At the time of the commencement of this action and now, there were and are approximately 1400 persons who were the owners and holders of such Certificates issued by said Board of Trustees, and in whose names stock certificates were issued by Citizens Gas Company as aforesaid. Plaintiff, Newton Todd, asserts in this suit that rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to Citizens Gas Company and to him and other holders of certificates issued by said Board of Trustees, are being violated by acts of the defendants, under color of certain statutes of the State of Indiana, and seek to enjoin such acts and asks for a decree quieting title of the Citizens Gas Company to certain real and personal property situated within the Southern District of Indiana. The claims of the plaintiff, Newton Todd, with respect to the violation of his constitutional rights and those of other holders of Certificates issued by said Board of Trustees and of the Citizens Gas Company are denied by the defendants.

4. Defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, during its corporate existence, has acquired title to and is now the owner of certain real estate, together with the buildings, fixtures, machinery and equipment used and useful for the manufacture, storage and distribution of artificial gas and the by-products thereof, together with pipe lines, mains and other equipment necessary for distributing artificial gas in the City of Indianapolis, and also a manufacturing plant and ovens for the production, manufacture and sale of commercial coke. Said real estate is situated in the City of Indianapolis, Marion County, State of Indiana, and within the jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division, and said property, so situated, is correctly described in Paragraph IV of the Bill of Complaint.

Defendant Company owns all of the capital stock of Milburn-By-Products Coal Company, a corporation, which has acquired title to and now owns certain leasehold rights in coal lands located in the Counties of Raleigh and Fayette, in the State of West Virginia, used and useful for the purpose of mining and producing therefrom coal for use in the operation of the business of defendant Company which leaseholds are those referred to in Paragraph VI of the bill of complaint. Defendant Company also is the owner of a certain leasehold estate in and to the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, as created by a certain contract of lease for ninety-nine years dated September 30, 1913, and recorded in Miscellaneous Record 78, pages 257-278, inclusive, of the records in the Recorder's office of Marion County, State of Indiana.

Said Indianapolis Gas Company was organized as an Indiana corporation for the purpose of furnishing artificial gas in the City of Indianapolis on the 10th day of January, 1881, and continued actively in business, until the execution of the lease aforesaid, under a franchise granted to its predecessor in title by ordinance of the City of Indianapolis on the 3rd day of April, 1876. On the 7th day of October, 1913, said Indianapolis Gas Company surrendered said Franchise in accordance with the provisions of the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act described in Stipulation 10 hereof, and in lieu thereof accepted an Indeterminate Permit. Said Indianapolis Gas Company now owns, subject to said lease, the legal title in 518.10 miles of gas mains and pipes in the central portion of the city, and said Citizens Gas Company now owns 328.85 miles of gas mains and pipes within such city.

5. This suit is not a collusive one to confer jurisdiction on a court of the United States of a suit of which it would otherwise not have cognizance.

6. On the 25th day of August, 1905, the Common Council of the City of Indianapolis passed an ordinance ratifying, confirming and approving a certain Franchise Contract executed on the 25th day of August, 1905 by and between the Board of Public Works of said City, and Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker and Lorenz Schmidt, contracting for themselves and their associates and assigns, which said ordinance was approved by the Mayor of said City and became effective on the 30th day of August, 1905. Said Franchise Contract and Ordinance ratifying the same are correctly set out in Paragraph VI of the Bill of Complaint.

* * * * * *

8. On the 24th day of May, 1906, the said Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker, and Lorenz Schmidt, who were the parties named in the Franchise set out in Stipulation 6 hereof, assigned and transferred to the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, all of their rights in the aforesaid Franchise Contract, which assignment was accepted by the defendant company, and said defendant company continuously thereafter operated under said Franchise until it surrendered the same as hereinafter stated, and said defendant has had no other franchise granted by the City of Indianapolis.

* * * * * *

(9. (a)) Said company is to be formed on the plans set forth in said franchise for the protection of the public interests, with authority to pay its stockholders dividends of 10% per annum payable semi-annually.

Said company is to accept and operate under said franchise, and may acquire, through the city or by purchase, the pipe lines and other property lately operated by the Consumers Gas Trust Company in said City.

(d) Some subscriptions were also received in consideration of making extensions of the gas mains to reach the property of certain subscribers, which subscriptions were accepted on condition that enough subscriptions be obtained to warrant the proposed extensions. Such subscriptions were taken on a form which is as follows:

"A Bill for an Act relating to corporations organized before May 1, 1913, for the purpose of furnishing gas for fuel or illuminating purposes or electric lights or water, or light, heat and power to any town or city or the citizens or inhabitants thereof, and the articles of incorporation of which provide for the transfer of the property of such corporations to such town or city, legalizing certain provisions in the articles of incorporation thereof and authorizing the conveyance of the property of such corporations to such towns or cities and authorizing such towns or cities to accept such conveyance, repealing all laws in conflict therewith and declaring an emergency."

Said bill was prepared by the legal department and special counsel of the City of Indianapolis employed for the purpose of bringing about a transfer of the plant and property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, to the City of Indianapolis; said bill was introduced in the House of Representatives of the General Assembly by members residing in the City of Indianapolis and elected from Marion County and was passed in the exact form prepared and submitted by said counsel for the defendant City without change or amendment of any kind or character. Said bill contained an emergency clause providing for its taking effect immediately upon its passage, was approved on the 11th day of March, 1929, and, so far as it was valid, became a law on said day.

14. On the 20th day of March, 1929, the defendant City of Indianapolis, acting only by and through its Board of Public Works, but without any action thereon by its Common Council and without an election thereon by the qualified voters of said City, passed a resolution asserting a right to acquire the plant and property of the defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis. Said resolution is correctly set out in Paragraph XIV of the Bill of Complaint. Defendant City of Indianapolis served said resolution upon the defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its directors and trustees, on said 20th day of March, 1929. Defendant City of Indianapolis through its agents and employees, on said 20th day of March, 1929, served a copy of said resolution upon the defendants Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its officers, the members of its Board of Directors and the members of its Board of Trustees.

19. After the passage of the ordinance of August 30, 1905 and the incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company on May 23, 1906, the City of Indianapolis took no affirmative steps in its own behalf in connection with the taking over of the property of the Citizens Gas Company until the 20th day of March, 1929. Defendant City of Indianapolis has not proceeded under the terms of said Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act in making its aforesaid demand, and the Public Service Commission of Indiana has neither ordered nor approved the acquisition by defendant City of said plant and property nor determined the value of said plant and property nor fixed the terms and conditions of said acquisition.

20. At no time has the question of the acquisition of the plant and property of defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, by defendant City been submitted to the qualified voters of said City at a special or general election.

21. The directors of the defendant company have caused the two resolutions set out in Stipulation 15 hereof to be printed and mailed to all holders of certificates issued by said Board of Trustees of the Citizens Gas Company, including plaintiff; said resolutions Nos. 1 and 2 have been published in the newspapers of Indianapolis and elsewhere and said directors have publicly expressed their intention of acceding to the demands of the defendant City and of conveying the plant and property of the defendant company to the City in accordance with the notice, resolution and demand set out in Stipulation 14 hereof. The directors and trustees of the Citizens Gas Company intend to and will carry out their expressed intention and will convey said plant and property of the defendant company pursuant to said demand by the defendant City unless enjoined and restrained from such action.

By agreeing to the statements contained in the above stipulations, the parties hereto are not agreeing as to any legal rights resulting therefrom, and in particular are not agreeing as to the rights flowing to plaintiff and other holders from the issuance of the certificates in the forms set forth in Stipulations 2(b) and 2(c) hereof, nor as to the relation to the Citizens Gas Company of plaintiff and others to whom such certificates were issued; but said legal rights and relations are to be determined by the facts set forth in these stipulations and the facts proved at the trial and the law applicable thereto. Any party to this cause shall have the right at the final hearing to introduce any additional or further evidence in this cause, providing that the same is not in contradiction of any of the facts herein stated.

Appeals from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division.

June 6, 1940.

KERNER, Circuit Judge. This action was brought by Chase National Bank (as trustee under a deed of trust) against (1) the city of Indianapolis and the individual members of its Board of Trustees and its Board of Directors for Utilities, (2) the Citizens Gas Company and (3) the Indianapolis Gas Company. Hereafter Chase National Bank will be referred to as "Chase"; defendant (1) as the "City"; defendant (2) as the "Citizens Gas"; and defendant (3) as the "Indianapolis Gas."

Chase sued as trustee under a mortgage deed of trust securing the payment of principal and interest of the mortgage bonds of Indianapolis Gas. Among other things Chase sought to recover judgment for the overdue interest on the bonds against all of the defendants and also against the property formerly owned by Citizens Gas and now owned and operated by the City. Chase also sought a declaratory judgment holding that a certain lease hereafter described is binding on all the defendants and the property just referred to.

The cause was tried by the District Court who made special findings of fact and pronounced its conclusions of law thereon. In substance the Court concluded that the lease in question was invalid, and that Chase recover the sum of $1,032,150 from Indianapolis Gas (this being the amount of overdue and unpaid coupons on the Indianapolis Gas bonds at the time of the Court's decree). Chase and Indianapolis each prosecuted separate appeals from the Court's decree. These appeals have been consolidated and are now before this Court.

Both Chase and Indianapolis Gas contend that the District Court erred in holding the lease invalid and not binding on Citizens Gas and the City. Moreover Chase contends that the District Court erred in failing to render judgment for unpaid coupons against all the defendants and the property referred to above. These contentions and others as well shall be considered in the course of the opinion. Now we shall relate the pertinent facts which on the whole are not in dispute.

Natural gas was discovered in Indiana in 1886 several miles from Indianapolis. At that time the only gas plant in the City was that of Indianapolis Gas, which supplied artificial gas. Shortly after natural gas was discovered, Indianapolis Gas acquired all the natural gas lines extending from the city to the producing field. The people feared a possible monopoly by Indianapolis Gas. This led to the birth of the Consumers' Gas Trust Company, organized in 1887 for the purpose of furnishing natural gas. For more factual detail, see Consumers' Gas Trust Company v. Quinby, 137 F. 882; Todd v. Citizens' Gas, 46 F. (2) 855, 859-860.

In 1902 Indianapolis Gas executed a mortgage to secure the payment of bonds issued and to be issued in the future. The mortgage contained an after-acquired property clause, and Chase is now the sole trustee under the mortgage deed of trust. Originally $4,000,000 bonds were issued. Later more bonds were issued, and now there are bonds outstanding in the amount of $6,881,000. For more factual detail, see Chase Nat. Bank v. Citizens Gas, 96 F. (2) 363, 364.

The Consumers' Gas Trust Company conducted its gas business until 1904, when the natural gas field failed. This marked the corporate death of this company, for the manufacture and sale of artificial gas was beyond the scope of its charter. Quinby case, 137 F. 882. At this time the City's right to purchase this plant arose, and the doubt was resolved in the City's favor. City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 144 F. 640. See also Act of 1905, Ind., pp. 247, 252, 279, 280, 396, 434; Todd case, supra, pp. 857-858. The City did not purchase the plant, however, but the circumstances at this time gave birth to Citizens Gas (as shall be described below).

On August 25, 1905 the City passed its "franchise ordinance," by virtue of which it entered into a franchise contract granting the right to carry on the business of manufacturing and distributing artificial gas to the City and its inhabitants for 25 years. This franchise was granted on the express condition that the grantees would organize a corporation to which the franchise would be assigned and whose charter would include certain specified provisions. In 1906 Citizens Gas was organized and to it was assigned the franchise just mentioned. The provisions required to be embodied in the charter, described below, in the main related to the capital stock, the creation of the voting trust and the duty of the trustees to convey the plant to the city upon certain conditions.

Citizens Gas was organized for a corporate term of 50 years for the purpose of supplying the city of Indianapolis with light, heat and power. The capital stock was issued immediately and then turned over to the trustees, and certificates of equitable ownership were delivered to the owners of the stock. The trustees and directors elected by them were to operate the gas plant until the time came for them to convey the property to the City. The duty to convey was dependent upon the receipt by the certificate holders of an amount equal to their investment plus a return of 10% per year thereon. Upon the satisfaction of the claims of the certificate holders, the plant and property of Citizens Gas was to be conveyed to the City subject to all outstanding legal obligations of the company.[1]

Once organized Citizens Gas purchased the gas plant property of Consumers Gas Trust Company and soon this public utility was actively engaged in the business of manufacturing and distributing gas. As such, Citizens Gas became "amenable to the law [of Indiana] to the same extent as any other public utility." Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448, 457. Also "the Citizens Gas Company, as a public utility, had the privilege of surrendering its franchise and the right to receive an indeterminate permit," Williams case, supra p. 458, and this it did in 1921 although receiving this benefit under the law carried with it utility consent to a future purchase of its property by the municipality which it served. 10 Burns Indiana Stat. Anno. (1933), Secs. 54-605 and 54-606.

These then were the circumstances which gave birth to Citizens Gas, and to the courts these circumstances spelled out a public charitable trust. As this Court expressed it, Citizens Gas "was a quasi public corporation"; the "legal title to the property which was acquired with the money contributed by the certificate holders was in the Citizens' Company, subject to the trust in favor of the inhabitants of the City * * * *. The conveyance to the City to be made when the charge in

1. The basic provisions of the franchise contract and the articles of incorporation in this regard are the following:

Franchise Contract, Sec. 1 (g). If the certificate holders receive x amount (i. e., their investment plus a 10% return thereon) prior to the expiration of the franchise period, the plant property shall be conveyed to the City and the "corporation shall be wound up."

Franchise Contract, Sec. 1 (i). If x amount not paid up and upon 6 months' notice by the City prior to the expiration of the franchise period, the plant shall be mortgaged in the sum of x amount, x amount paid up and the property transferred to the City "subject to such obligations and other legal obligations against said company."

Franchise Contract, Sec. 22. If x amount not paid up and the period expires, then the plant shall be conveyed upon the City paying up the balance of x amount or, at the option of the City the plant shall be mortgaged in the sum of x amount, the certificate holders paid up, and the plant property then conveyed to the City "subject to such obligations and other legal obligations against said company."

Articles of Incorporation. Sections 10 and 12 are substantially similar to Secs. 1(g) and 1(i) of the Franchise Contract. Sections 10 and 12, as amended, are also substantially similar to Secs. 1(g) and 1(i) of the Franchise Contract, except that Section 12 (as amended) provides for conveyance "subject to such mortgage and other legal obligations against said company."

favor of certificate holders was released was a continuance of the trust; the city being the successor in the fiduciary relationship." Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. (2) 855, 865-866. Yet, even granting the "existence of a trust relationship between the Citizens Gas Company and a class of persons [inhabitants of the City] * * * * *, that relationship cannot qualify the power of control of the State over the Citizens Gas Company as a public utility." Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448, 457.

And thus it came to pass that Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas became and were competing utilities in the city of Indianapolis. This competitive condition existed until 1913 when negotiations between the two rivals were begun which culminated in the execution of the 99 years lease in question. It is to be noted that in 1913 Indianapolis Gas had 375 miles of mains and was completing a modern coke oven and plant, and Citizens Gas had 184 miles of mains. The capital stock of the former was $2,000,000 and bonds in the amount of $4,835,000 were outstanding, while that of the latter was $1,250,000 and $1,247,000 respectively. In addition reports issued by Citizens Gas to its stockholders during this period indicated that it considered the existing competition between the two rivals dangerous to the company and to the community and that a merger would make possible certain important economies.

At any rate in March of 1913 the Indiana legislature passed the Shively-Spencer Act which created the Public Service Commission and conferred upon it certain broad powers of control and regulation over public utilities. 3 Burns R. S. 1926, p. 1238. Among other things the Act provided that when two public utilities are engaged in the same business in the same locality, one may lease or sell its property to the other if the transaction meets with approval by the Commission. Shortly thereafter the two utilities in question jointly petitioned the Public Service Commission for permission to execute the 99 years lease here involved.

The power to execute this 99 years lease was authorized by the Commission in October of 1913. According to the lease as finally approved and executed, Indianapolis Gas leased its gas plant property to Citizens Gas for a term of 99 years. In return the lessee agreed to pay a 6% return on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas (par value

$2,000,000), interest on the mortgage bonds of Indianapolis Gas ($6,881,000 now outstanding), and taxes on the leased property plus certain additional miscellaneous expenditures. During the administrative proceedings one Frank S. Fishback intervened and objected to the execution of the lease. The City was represented by counsel but it did not object to the execution of the lease or to the order of the Commission. The objections were overruled, an order approving the lease entered, and Fishback's petition for rehearing denied.

Fishback intervened as an inhabitant of the city of Indianapolis and as certificate holder of Citizens Gas, and objected in essence that the lease was invalid. Among other things he stated the following: Citizens Gas had no power to execute the lease because (a) the duration of the lease exceeded the corporate life of the lessee and (b) the city of Indianapolis was the real owner of the lessee's property. In his petition for rehearing he stated the following: (1) Compliance with the terms of the lease would make it impossible for Citizens Gas to perform its contract with the City relating to the taking over of the property of Citizens Gas and (2) the City had not given its consent to the lease. The Commission overruled these grounds of objection and approved the lease.

Then Fishback instituted suit in the state court to set aside the order of the Commission, and joined as parties defendant the Commission, Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, and the City. In the main the complaint alleged the grounds urged at the administrative proceedings. The City's answer denied these alleged grounds, and the other defendants demurred thereto. On the day of judgment and prior to entry thereof Fishback dismissed as to the City. A judgment was rendered sustaining the demurrers and an appeal was taken therefrom. Later the appeal was dismissed for failure to perfect it in time. Fishback v. Public Service Commission et al., 193 Ind. 282.

Thus it happened that in 1913 the competition between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas came to an end. Citizens Gas acquired the plant property of the other and from 1913 to September 9, 1935 operated the leased property with its own as part of a consolidated system. During this period Citizens Gas controlled the entire gas business of the city of Indianapolis and after 1921 it operated the two properties in question under an indeterminate permit of the Public Service Commission. In all Citizens Gas made payments under the lease that amounted to $11,668,984.77. It also expended around $2,000,000 for capital improvements on the leased property, but for this it was reimbursed by the issuance of Indianapolis Gas bonds which Citizens Gas then sold to the public through a firm of investment bankers.[2]

On March 11, 1929 the Indiana legislature passed legislation which authorized cities to "take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of acquisition of any utility by any such city." Chapter 77, Laws of 1929, Ind., pp. 252, 257, 259-260. This legislation also provided that the transferee city "shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it * * * and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation [the utility] may have in any lease upon other property." Chapter 78, Laws of 1929, Ind., pp. 268-271. This legislation becomes pertinent in view of certain pleadings in a federal case filed April 30, 1929. Todd v. Citizens Gas et al., 46 F. (2) 855. Therein the city of Indianapolis admitted in its answer to the complaint that the legislation above was introduced and passed at the request of the City and that the particular legislation was prepared by special counsel of the City "employed for the purpose of bringing about a

2. In marketing the Indianapolis Gas bonds the firm of investment bankers used circulars representing that Citizens Gas had a 99 years lease on the property of Indianapolis Gas and that Citizens Gas had guaranteed the payment of the interest on these bonds.

The record shows that copies of these circulars were first sent to the Secretary and General Manager of Citizens Gas for approval and correction. The record also shows that the firm knew the factual history leading up to the organization of Citizens Gas and knew also of Section 32 of the 99 years lease which provided that "In event it should be determined by a court * * * that the contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of term created * * * then this lease shall nevertheless be binding * * * for the longest term for which the parties hereto might lawfully contract."

The record also shows that in various reports to its stockholders Citizens Gas, through its Secretary and General Manager, made reference to the 99 years lease and to the guarantee of the interest on the Indianapolis Gas bonds.

transfer of the plant and property" of Citizens Gas to the City.[3]

Nine days later on March 20, 1929 the City gave Citizens Gas notice that it was exercising its right to take over the trust property as successor trustee of the public charitable trust. Thus in the resolution of March 20 the City resolved that it would take over "all rights, title, interests and ownership, of whatever nature or character * * * * transferred or vested in and to said City in * * * the gas plant, mains and property of said Citizens Gas Company by virtue of" (1) the franchise contract of August 25, 1905, (2) the articles of incorporation of Citizens Gas, (3) the conditions stated in the certificates of the owners of the stock, and (4) all "Statutes of this state and other laws relating to the subject matter hereof."

By this same resolution the City directed Citizens Gas to mortgage the property in a sum sufficient to discharge the certificate holders and then demanded Citizens Gas to convey "the plant, property and assets" subject to "such mortgage and other legal obligations against said company." This resolution was served upon Citizens Gas and on April 3, 1929 that company recognized "the trust created by the franchise * * * and by the Articles of Association," acknowledged the right of the city of Indianapolis to take over the property and assets, and directed its officers to comply with the resolution.

However, on April 30, 1929 one Newton Todd (certificate holder of Citizens Gas) commenced a suit in the Indiana federal court to enjoin Citizens Gas from con-

3. The admission in the Todd case also revealed that the legislation in question was passed in the "exact form prepared and submitted by said counsel." It appears too that the admission goes only to Chapter 78, but it is obvious that Chapters 77 and 78 go hand in glove. Chapter 77 was made available to cities having a population of not less than 300,000 and Chapter 78 referred only to transferor utility corporations organized prior to 1913.

In fact this legislation expressly authorized the transfer of utility property (held in fee or by virtue of a lease) under circumstances peculiarly similar to the factual situation existing between Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas and the City in the instant case. If the legislators had had in mind the exact factual situation here involved, they could not have passed more appropriate legalizing and enabling legislation.

The legislation also provided that the question of acquiring such utility property held by virtue of a lease need not be submitted to a vote of the city electors nor be subjected to the Public Service Commission for approval.

veying its property to the City in the mode proposed in the resolution of March 20. Shortly thereafter a similar action was brought by one Cotter and the cases were tried together. Todd and Cotter claimed that a city purchasing the property of a public utility must comply with the Shively-Spencer Public Utility Act of 1913, that is, it must pay the present day value of the property as determined by the Public Service Commission and obtain the approval of the Commission and city electors.[4] The complaints in the two cases were dismissed for lack of equity, and on appeal the decrees were affirmed. Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. (2) 855; cert. den., 283 U. S. 852. The Court stated on page 866 that the conveyance in the instant case was not a purchase by the City and that "When they [certificate holders] are paid off, as provided [in the articles of incorporation], their interest [in the gas plant] is at an end."

In leaving the Todd and Cotter cases another admission in the pleadings is to be noted. In the Cotter case the City (a party defendant) admitted the following things in its answer to the complaint: (1) "after the passage of the Shively-Spencer Act of 1913 the Citizens Gas, pursuant to an order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana and with the full consent and approval of the city of Indianapolis, * * * leased from the Indianapolis Gas Company all of its plants and property for a period of ninety-nine years"; and (2) "since 1913 the Citizens Gas Company with full knowledge and consent of the City has operated the combined properties." This then brings us to the Williams case which was filed in 1930 while the Todd and Cotter cases were still pending. See Williams v. Citizens Gas et al., 206 Ind. 448.

4. Todd and Cotter also urged the following things: (1) the surrender of the franchise in 1921 ended all rights and obligations and thereby relieved the directors and trustees of Citizens Gas from complying with the articles of incorporation (charter) requiring the conveyance to the City; (2) the legalizing legislation of 1929 was contrary to due process of law. The Court disposed of the contentions in the following way: (1) the franchise contract of 1905 was not a contract for a purchase, but an "agreement by which the City obtained an interest in the plant subject to the charge in favor of the certificate holders"; (2) the surrender of the franchise in 1921 did not relieve the directors and trustees from the duty to convey to the City, a duty inscribed in the charter, for the provisions of the charter "were not a part of the * * * franchise * * * and were not affected by the surrender."

The Court, however, did not pass on the validity of the legalizing legislation of 1929. Nor did the Court discuss whether the leasehold was part of the trust res or whether the particular transfer sought to be enjoined included the property held under the lease.

Williams, an inhabitant and taxpayer of the City, sued as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust (created by the franchise contract of 1905, the articles of incorporation, and the various circumstances already related) and the parties defendant were Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, the City and others. The complaint was based on the theory that the trust was adversely affected and slowly being destroyed by complying with the lease in question which Williams alleged was invalid. He alleged that the lease in question was the product of a conspiracy by the officials of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas and by others, and that some of the overt acts of the conspiracy were the following: (1) the procurement of the enactment of the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act; (2) the approval of the lease by the Commission; and (3) the surrender by Citizens Gas of its franchise and acceptance of an indeterminate permit.

Demurrers filed to the Williams complaint were sustained and the judgment of dismissal rendered thereon was affirmed on appeal.[5] Williams v. Citizens Gas et al., supra. As stated by the Indiana Supreme Court, "it appears from the complaint that the lease was one which the Citizens Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had the power to execute." In passing on, one more thing pertaining to this case may be noted. In the trial court the City (one of the parties defendant) moved to strike out certain parts of the complaint and stated the following in support of its motion: (1) "Inasmuch as said lease was duly approved by the Public Service Commission," its order could not be collaterally attacked; (2) "The lease * * * having been validly made, the actions of any individuals leading up to such lease are wholly immaterial"; and (3) "The validity of the public charitable trust set up in the complaint is in no wise affected by the validity of such lease. If the lease is valid the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust * * *. If * * * the lease is invalid, it would fall without the scope of the trust."

After the resolution of March 20, 1929 came the Todd, Cotter and Williams cases and for five years the history just related was dragged through the courts. The litigation over, negotiations pertaining to the transfer of the utility property were again resumed. Then on May 7, 1935 the City authorized the issuance of Gas Plant Revenue Bonds in the amount of $8,000,000. See Laws of 1935, Ind., Chap. 311. The bonds were issued to provide funds for the taking over of the utility property "owned by Citizens Gas of Indianapolis and/or in which it has an interest." The bonds themselves recited that the payment of principal and interest was "secured by a charge upon all the revenue from the operation of all of the gas system owned and/or operated by the City of Indianapolis."

After the Revenue Bonds were issued, the City offered them for sale to security brokers and there was made available to bidders a prospectus which described the utility property and its history. This prospectus informed bidders that a public charitable trust existed in the "property of Citizens Gas" and that the City was preparing to acquire and to operate this "utility property in which the City has an interest." It described the gas "system operated by Citizens Gas" as "in part owned by Citizens Gas Company and in part * * * leased by it" for a term of 99 years. The prospectus was worded carefully: although the leased property was included expressly as part of the "system operated by Citizens Gas," it was not included expressly as part of the trust or "utility property in which the City has an interest." The unescapable impression, however, from reading the context of the prospectus is that the leased property was treated as being a part of the utility property subject to the trust.

On July 23, 1935 counsel for the City advised Indianapolis Gas by letter that the City would take over "the property which has been operated by Citizens Gas" but that in acquiring this property it did not become liable for the lease obligations of Citizens Gas under the legalizing legislation of 1929 (already discussed). Counsel also suggested in this letter that "the City * * * is willing to enter into negotiations * * * looking toward a revision of this lease to meet the new conditions that will result from municipal operation." By August 27, 1935 counsel for Citizens Gas was also advised that "the City was going to attempt to reject the lease."

On September 9, 1935 Citizens Gas conveyed the entire gas plant operated by it to the City. In return the City had applied around $6,300,000 (part of the proceeds from the sale of the Revenue Bonds) to the retirement of the claims of the certificate holders and bondholders of Citizens Gas, in accordance with the franchise contract and articles of incorporation. In other words, the entire consideration for the transfer was paid to the certificate holders and bondholders of Citizens Gas, and thereafter that corporation had no property and engaged in no business activity. The City did execute an indemnity contract running in the favor of Citizens Gas, however, in which the City agreed to save the corporation harmless from any loss or liability occasioned by the transfer or any action thereafter brought against it.

Thus, on September 9, 1935 Citizens Gas executed and delivered four instruments to the City, which conveyed the entire utility property subject to the legal obligations of the transferring corporation: (1) a deed conveying the real estate; (2) an instrument transferring the personal property; (3) an assignment of a lease covering space in a certain building; and (4) an assignment of the 99 years lease in question. These instruments were received, retained and duly recorded by the City. On the same day the City passed two resolutions: one rejecting the lease and refusing to assume the lease obligations; the other accepting the property held under the lease temporarily and solely to prevent interruption of service.

And on September 9, 1935 the City acquired the utility property of Citizens Gas and assumed operation of the entire gas system including the leased property. On September 30, 1935 Indianapolis Gas notified the City that while it relied on the validity of the lease, it would enter into a stipulation (in the interest of a continued public service) under which the City might continue operation of the plant under the terms of the lease without prejudice to the legal rights of either party.

Nature of the Trust. These then are the facts in the instant case and summarizing they spell out the following situation. In the history of the city of Indianapolis certain events and circumstances occurred. These things combined and the result was the creation of a charitable trust for an indefinite and unlimited period of time. Todd v. Citizens Gas et al., 46 F. (2) 855, 866. The settlors of this trust were specific citizens of the City who subscribed for the capital stock of Citizens Gas, and the cestuis were the gas users of the City. The trust provided for two trustees: (1) the initial trustee, Citizens Gas, a corporate trustee; and (2) the successor trustee, the City, a municipal corporate trustee.

The terms of the trust (the franchise contract and the articles of incorporation) referred generally to the duties of the trustee and the rights of the beneficiaries. Thus the trust provided for a corporate trustee (Citizens Gas) with powers to operate a utility plant for the purpose of supplying the City with light, heat and power. This corporate trustee was to administer the trust until such time as the City exercised its right to succeed to the trusteeship and accepted the trust res. The City was required to exercise its right to succeed as trustee by August 25, 1930.[6]

Soon Citizens Gas was organized with powers to supply the City with light, heat and power and in accordance with the terms of the trust this corporate trustee proceeded to engage in the utility business. In 1907 it purchased the gas plant property of the old Consumers Gas Trust Company. In 1913 it purchased the leasehold interest in question, that is, it leased the gas plant property of its rival for a term of 99 years. Then it operated the two properties as a unit and controlled the entire gas busi-

6. According to the franchise contract and articles of incorporation, the City was to declare its intention to take over the trust res at the end of the franchise period (25 years) or sooner, whenever the claims of the certificate holders were satisfied. See footnote 1. Also Todd case, supra, at p. 866: "The conveyance to the city to be made when the charge in favor of certificate holders was released was a continuance of the trust; the city being the successor in the fiduciary relationship."

In the event that this charge in favor of the certificate holders was not released or that the City failed to accept the trust res, Citizens Gas was to continue operating the plant as trustee. In this regard it is significant to remember that Citizens Gas held an indeterminate permit to operate within the City, subject to the right of the City to succeed to the trusteeship as related above and subject to the right of the City to purchase the plant under Indiana law. Todd case, supra.

It is to be noted too that Citizens Gas had a corporate life of 50 years. This is really immaterial: it is conceivable that at the end of such time corporate rebirth would be in order; at any rate a charitable trust will not ordinarily fail for want of a trustee.

ness of the City. In 1929 the City declared its intention to succeed to the trusteeship. Further action was delayed pending the settlement of interfering litigation. Finally in 1935 the City accepted the property held in fee but rejected the leasehold interest.

What has just been said, reveals the real nature of this public charitable trust. The trust runs for an indefinite and unlimited period of time. Its corporate trustee is given the duty to operate a gas plant under an indeterminable permit, and is instructed to administer the trust for an unlimited period of time subject to the City's power to succeed as trustee. This power to succeed must be exercised by the City within a certain time (25 years) and upon a certain condition (satisfaction of particular claims). Thus this initial trusteeship may be short-lived or it may be coextensive with the life of the corporate trustee.

Nature of the Lease. We have related the factual history of the utility business in the city of Indianapolis and have shown that many courts and many parties have concerned themselves therein over one phase or another. And until this litigation was started it appears that every one proceeded on the basis that the lease contract covered a term of 99 years. In this case the argument is advanced that the lease contract is not a 99 years lease at all but that it is one for 99 years or for such shorter time as Citizens Gas might remain as trustee. We are not convinced by the argument made in this regard.

In making this point counsel for the City and for Citizens Gas emphasize Sections 13 and 32 of the lease contract. Section 13 states that certain agreements of the lease (i. e., to secure new franchises and to extend the corporate life of the lessee) are "subject to the rights now held by the city of Indianapolis under the terms of the franchise." Section 32 (see footnote 2) provides against judicial disapproval of the lease contract because of the length of the term involved. As expressed by counsel for the City, "those who drew the lease intended that Citizens Gas should be bound only for the period of its trusteeship, and that they never intended that the City as successor trustee should be bound."

This construction of the contract lease—that the lease is one for 99 years or for such shorter time as Citizens

Gas might remain as trustee—reduces itself to the absurd in light of the real nature of the trust. Our analysis of the trust indicates that the initial trusteeship might well have terminated in 1914 as at any later time. Under such circumstances it becomes inconceivable that "those who drew the lease" intended that the lease ever be for such shorter time. Moreover the granting clause of the lease contract expressly fixes the term at 99 years. To accept counsel's construction in the face of this, is to ignore the plain statement of the granting clause and to change unduly the contractual obligation. We conclude that the lease contract is a 99 years lease.

Nor are Sections 13 and 32 inconsistent with our conclusion. Section 13 treats certain promises of the lessee, e. g., the promise to extend its corporate life, as being subject to the City's "rights." Obvious it is that if the City chooses to succeed as trustee of the trust res or to take over the plant property subject to the "legal obligations" of Citizens Gas (footnote 1), then it is unnecessary to fulfill the certain promises mentioned. In this regard Section 13 does not compel the construction urged that the contractual obligation ends with the initial trusteeship. Moreover it is confined to the promises therein described and wholly fails to refer to the 99 years obligation. At the most Section 13 presents the question whether this obligation is a "legal obligation" (one which Citizens Gas had power to incur), and whether the City takes over the plant property subject to it.

On the other hand Section 32 anticipates a possible judicial determination as to whether a corporation having a life of 50 years has the power to incur an obligation running for 99 years. Surely this Section does not require the construction urged by counsel that the contractual obligation ends with the initial trusteeship. At the most Section 32 merely anticipates the question possibly presented by Section 13 and soon to be answered, namely, whether the corporate trustee in the instant case had the power to incur the 99 years obligation. In passing we repeat that our consideration of Sections 13 and 32 leaves undisturbed our conclusion that the real nature of the contract in question discloses a lease for a term of 99 years.

Trust Res. What is the trust rest of this particular charitable trust? The answer to this question will dispose of most of the contentions urged by counsel in this appeal. In fact a consideration of the briefs and the various arguments made therein indicate plainly that counsel disagree seriously in this regard. In essence counsel for Chase and Indianapolis Gas argue in the following vein: the lease is valid and therefore a part of the trust res; it follows that the City may not accept a part of the trust res and refuse to accept another part.

On the other hand counsel for the City states his argument thus: the "City has not, as is asserted, accepted a part of the trust res and refused to accept another part. It has accepted the entire trust res and rejected a lease which the initial trustee had no power to make (p. 38) * * * The trust res was the property and plant of Citizens Gas, and this consisted of the property formerly owned by the Consumers Gas Trust Company (p. 56)."

Moreover counsel for Citizens Gas expresses his argument as follows: "Citizens Gas has never denied its power and authority to bind itself as trustee and the trust property for the term of its trusteeship (p. 14) * * * and this lease would have been binding upon Citizens Gas for the full term of 99 years if it had been permitted to act as a public utility for that length of time (p. 15) * * * the Lease was a binding contract between the parties throughout the term of its trusteeship (p. 23)." In this regard the City in its pleadings conceded "for the purpose of this litigation" that the lease in question, if valid at all, was valid during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas.

That a valid leasehold interest may constitute the subject-matter of a trust is not open to dispute, nor do counsel in this case contend differently. If the lease is valid, the rental obligation binds the trust and it matters little that a new trustee succeeds the old one. Otherwise any obligation incurred by a particular trustee would cease with the death, resignation or removal of that trustee: such a rule would lead inevitably to ridiculous results. Therefore, if the lease in question is valid, two conclusions follow: (1) the subject-matter of the lease contract is an asset and becomes part of the trust res; (2) the lease obligation binds the trust and is not discharged by a mere substitution of trustees. Earlier in our opinion we have discussed the real nature of the trust and the City's part in the scheme of things; the City is a successor trustee and as such must accept or disclaim the entire res. We have also discussed the real nature of the lease and its part in the scheme of things: the lease is one for 99 years and if valid the leasehold interest is part of the trust res. We have just related the arguments of counsel which indicate agreement in one regard and disagreement in another. Counsel agree that if the lease is valid, the leasehold interest is part of the trust res. Counsel disagree on the question whether the lease is valid and this we now answer.

Our problem relates to the administration of the trust and particularly concerns itself with the extent of the corporate trustee's powers. Did the trustee have the power to make this lease, i. e., to acquire this leasehold interest and to incur the rental obligation? The rule is that a trustee can properly exercise such powers as are conferred upon him in specific words by the terms of the trust or are necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of the trust and are not forbidden by the terms of the trust. We must apply that rule here.

The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. In truth the terms of the trust remain silent on the subject of trustee's powers. The only applicable language relates to duties and not to powers. This language imposes upon the trustee the duty "to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power." Plainly the extent of the trustee's powers are measured by the scope of the duty imposed in the terms of the trust, and it is reasonable to conclude that the trustee had the power to secure what utility property was necessary or appropriate to enable it to engage in the gas business and to supply the City with light, heat and power.

Counsel for the City argues but not impressively that the trustee lacked the power to lease the property of its rival because such action might contravene public policy. In this connection it is a fact that Citizens Gas leased and operated the Indianapolis Gas property for the period of the initial trusteeship. The actual point urged by counsel for the City is that (1) the trustee lacked the power to lease property from anyone for a term of 99 years and that (2) if the trustee had power to lease, it only had power to lease for a term of years not exceeding the initial trusteeship. On this point counsel for Citizens Gas admits that the trustee had power to lease for a term of years not exceeding the initial trusteeship.

Yet we know that the trustee had the power to acquire adequate gas plant equipment. And it is admitted that the freehold estate in the property purchased in 1907 became part of the trust res: the trustee had the power to purchase in fee simple and consequently the freehold estate became trust property. From what has just been said, certain conclusions follow as a matter of logic: (1) the trustee had the power to purchase the Indianapolis Gas property in 1907 or in 1913; and (2) the trustee had the power to lease this property in 1907 and 1913 for a term of years not exceeding the initial trusteeship. In situation (1) the property would have become a permanent part of the trust res. In situation (2) the property would have become a temporary part of the trust res.

Thus counsel's argument that the trustee lacked the power to make this particular lease narrows to an attack on the mode of the acquisition of the property. In view of the circumstances counsel can not argue, nor does he argue, that the trustee lacked the power to acquire the property in question: manifestly the trustee had the power to acquire either a freehold or a nonfreehold interest in the property. His argument condemns the acquisition in 1913 because of the duration of the term. In effect counsel states that the trustee had power to acquire property but no power to acquire it for a term of 99 years or for any term of years exceeding any particular trusteeship.

Counsel relies considerably on the leading case of In re Hubbell Trust, 113 N. W. (Iowa) 512 as expressing judicial disapproval of long-term leases. In that case the private trust had a probable duration of 71 years and the trustee (an individual) leased the trust property to others for a term of 99 years. The court disapproved of the long-term lease because the duration of the lease exceeded the period of the trust and hence incumbered the rights of the remainderman. The court laid down several rules for the guidance of trustees (page 522): "(1) The trustees may lease for such reasonable terms as are customary * * *; (2) Such terms should not, save on showing of reasonable necessity * * *, extend beyond the period the trust is likely to continue; (3) Should they extend unreasonably beyond such period, the excess only will be void * * *."

We believe that the Hubbell Trust case is a well-reasoned one but it does not support counsel's argument that the trustee did not have the power exercised in 1913. The Hubbell Trust case does not stand for the proposition that a trustee has no power to lease for a term of years. At the most it stands for the rule that a trustee has no power to lease trust property for a term of years exceeding the period of the trust. It does not take much comparison to see that such a rule does not support the proposition here urged, namely, that the trustee lacked the power to lease beyond its period of trusteeship.

Moreover in the instant case the trustee's power to acquire a long-term leasehold interest is in issue, not the trustee's power to lease trust property for a long term of years. Yet even if applicable, and we believe the Hubbell Trust case is analogous, the trustee in our case did not lease for a term of years exceeding the period of the trust. In fact the court in the Hubbell Trust case recognized that charitable trusts were to be treated differently than private trusts in this regard, for it said on page 522 that "the decisions with reference to charitable trusts afford no aid, for the trust period in these is indeterminable, and the length of the lease is considered only as bearing upon the reasonableness of its provisions and of the rentals stipulated. Such leases have been approved where otherwise reasonable with terms varying from 80 to 1000 years. See * * * City of Richmond v. Davis, 103 Ind. 449 * * * [other cases cited]."

Thus counsel's argument that the trustee lacks the power to lease this property because the duration of the lease exceeded the trusteeship (or even the trustee's life), has no real foundation in the law. Obviously the principle of law that a trustee has no power to lease where the term of years exceeds the period of the trust, has no application here. In the end our case is this: under the terms of the lease the trustee had the power to acquire certain property; the power of acquisition might well have assumed at least two forms—acquisition by outright purchase or by long-term lease; the trustee selected the latter mode of acquisition. Selecting one mode of acquisition rather than the other does not alter the situation: the trustee had the power to acquire.

tee has the power to make leases. In making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who in addition may have such a lease set aside. This record discloses that the trustee was justified in selecting the mode of acquisition which it did. When the prudence point was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court, that court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its other terms. Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460.

We therefore conclude that the trustee had the power to make the long-term lease in question and that this particular leasehold interest in the Indianapolis Gas property is part of the trust res. In passing it might be said that the few cases discussed in the opinion above are determinative of the immediate issue here, i. e., as to the validity of the 99 years lease. See in particular Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., 193 Ind. 282; Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448; Todd v. Citizens Gas, et al., 46 F. (2) 855; Chase Nat. Bank v. Citizens Gas, et al., 96 F. (2) 363, 365. No amount of verbal magic resorted to by counsel for the City will avail to brush aside the barrier these cases present to him. Nor have we overlooked the various admissions and apparent inconsistencies of the City during the history of this gas utility controversy in the courts and before the administrative bodies, but these points we find unnecessary to the decision herein reached.

Successor Trustee. In this case the City declared its intention to succeed as trustee and to accept the trust. Then it proceeded to accept the property held in fee and to disclaim the property held under the lease. We have shown that the predecessor trustee had the power to acquire the properties in question and that upon acquisition these properties became the subject-matter of the trust. The facts show that the gas plant is operated as a unit and that the continued operation of both properties is necessary in order to prevent disruption of service to gas consumers.

Thus we have a case where the successor trustee accepts the office of trustee but purports to accept the trust only as to a part of the trust property or only as to some of the duties. This cannot be done. We have shown that the trust res consists of the two properties described. This is not a case of two separate and distinct trusts, one as to a freehold interest in property, the other as to a nonfreehold interest in property. We conclude that acceptance of the office of successor trustee and of part of the trust, operates as an acceptance of the whole trust. The City takes the trust property subject to the lease obligation incurred by Citizens Gas.

Form of Relief. Counsel for Indianapolis Gas contends that the instant suit was one asking for a declaration of rights and that hence the District Court erred in granting both declaratory and coercive relief. The original bill of complaint alleged facts relating to the history of this utility controversy, describing the escrow arrangement between the City and Indianapolis Gas in 1936 whereby a sum equal to the rentals under the lease would be deposited with an escrowee, and indicating the probable effect of these events on Chase's rights to the payment of bond principal and interest coupons. The prayer sought a declaratory judgment concerning the validity of the lease and a "judgment • • • in the amount of all unpaid interest payable under said lease." At the time of this complaint no interest coupons were yet due. Later a supplementary bill was filed, which set up subsequently occurring facts showing default as to interest coupons and which prayed a coercive judgment in the amount of the unpaid coupons.

These pleadings reveal that the pleader joined claims for a declaration of rights and claims for personal coercive relief, and that the pleader requested a declaration as to the validity of the lease and a coercive form of relief as to the unpaid coupons and interest thereon. The lease and coupon claims arose out of the same factual background and represented the aftermath of the instant utility controversy. The supplemental pleading merely presented subsequent matter already related to the claims as presented in the original pleading. See Texarkana v. Arkansas Gas Co., 306 U. S. 188, 203; Rule 15 (d), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Nor does counsel urge that the handling together of these claims interfered with trial convenience.

The District Court did not err in treating the complaint as above stated and in deciding the issues thus presented. Such a procedure is proper under the Federal Declaratory Judgments Act and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. 28 U. S. C. Sec. 400; Federal Rules 18, 54, 57; see also, Borchard, Declaratory Judgments (1934), pp. 175-176. Counsel relies on Brindley v. Meara, 209 Ind. 144, where the Indiana Supreme Court interpreted the Indiana Declaratory Judgments Act. This decision can not bind us in our interpretation of the Federal Declaratory Judgments Act, even if it could be said to be inconsistent with the position we take here.

It is not improper for a pleader under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to combine in one complaint a request for a declaration and for some coercive relief. Nor is it improper for the District Court to render a judgment or judgments granting both forms of relief. Our conclusion in this regard is not at variance with anything said by the United States Supreme Court in the following cases, as counsel would have us believe. Nashville, C. & S. Ry. v. Wallace, 288 U. S. 249; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U. S. 227; Perkins v. Elg, 307 U. S. 325, 349.

Chase's Authority to Sue. In this case Indianapolis Gas issued bonds payable to bearer. To secure the payment of principal and interest thereon, Indianapolis Gas mortgaged its property to certain trustees in behalf of the many bond purchasers. Chase is now the sole Trustee and is here suing for the benefit of the bondholders. Chase's authority to bring this suit is derived from the mortgage deed of trust (or Indenture of Mortgage) executed by Indianapolis Gas and the certain trustees. Our immediate task is to measure the extent of Chase's powers to sue in behalf of the bondholders.

Each bond provided for the payment of $1000 principal in a certain future year and the payment of 5% interest per annum. Payment of the interest was to be made at the office of the trustee of the mortgage deed of trust upon the presentation and surrender of the interest coupons. Each bond also provided for an acceleration clause in case of interest default, subject to the conditions of the mortgage deed of trust. In addition each bond provided that it had been issued by Indianapolis Gas "under and in accordance with the terms and conditions" of the mortgage deed of trust (Indenture of Mortgage).

Among other things the mortgage deed of trust provided in Section IX that Indianapolis Gas "agrees to and with" the Trustee to "pay the principal and interest of and upon the bonds * * * as the same shall become due and payable" and that upon any "default in the due performance of this covenant" due presentment and demand for payment of the "bonds and coupons" is waived. Section XIV then provided that the "right of action under this indenture is vested exclusively in the Trustees, and under no circumstances shall any bondholder or bondholders have any right to institute an action * * * for the purpose of enforcing any right herein and hereby provided, or of foreclosing this mortgage, * * * and all actions and proceedings for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this indenture shall be instituted and conducted by the Trustees according to their sound discretion."

An intelligent reading of the mortgage deed of trust, properly incorporated by reference in each bond sold, is sufficient to dispose of counsel's argument that Chase is without authority to sue for the unpaid interest coupons. The two sections stated above expressly give Chase as Trustee the power to recover judgment for either principal or interest in default. Of course the Trustee holds the judgment or its money equivalent for the benefit of the bondholders. That a trustee has the right to enforce the provisions of a mortgage where as here the mortgagor has made an express promise to the trustee that it will pay the principal and interest, is recognized. See Carey v. Brown, 92 U. S. 171, 172; New York Trust Co. v. Michigan Traction Co., 193 F. 175, 180; First Nat. Bank and Trust Co. v. Dolph, 283 N. W. (Mich.) 35, 38.

We conclude therefore that Chase was authorized to sue for the default in the payment of interest coupons and that the judgment in its favor as Trustee for the benefit of the bondholders was proper. Counsel also objects to the judgment on the following grounds: (1) the original interest coupons (best evidence) were not produced or read in evidence; (2) the judgment failed to provide that the Trustee pay over recovered sums to bondholders only upon the surrender and cancellation of the coupons; and (3) the maker of the bonds owned part of them. Assuming the truth of these objections would not compel reversal, for the objections are not substantial in character.

As for objection (1), a copy of the mortgage (the mortgage deed of trust) was attached to the complaint and this included the form of each bond and coupon held by bondholders. Furthermore the parties by express stipulation waived any necessity for producing the original of each bond or coupon in evidence. As for objection (2), the bond itself provides that coupons are payable only upon presentation and surrender of the coupons. As for objecton (3), the basis thereof was stipulated to be so by the parties, yet counsel waited to urge the objection at this time. These objections, urged for the first time, are technical at the most and merit no further consideration.

Right to Interest on Interest. Our case is one where the bonds in question incorporate by reference the provisions of the mortgage deed of trust. Our case is also one where the Trustee for the bondholders was authorized to sue on the bonds in order to enforce (1) the covenant to pay the interest coupons or (2) the covenant to pay the principal. Had the Trustee elected to enforce covenant (2), it would have had the concomitant power under Section III of the mortgage deed of trust to foreclose the mortgaged property (the security) and to collect the proceeds from the sale thereof. The Trustee however elected to enforce covenant (1). See New York Trust Co. v. Michigan Traction Co., 193 F. 175, 180.

Now the usual rule in these matters is to allow interest on the unpaid interest coupons after default. City of Jeffersonville v. Patterson, 26 Ind. 15, 16; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 175, 206. Yet the District Court denied this claim to interest on the interest coupons from the date of maturity to the date of the judgment. Necessarily the rule applies, unless the bonds themselves or the mortgage deed of trust incorporated by reference therein qualify this right to interest on interest. The District Court pointed to Section III of the mortgage deed of trust as limiting the right to interest on the unpaid interest coupons. That Section relates that after a foreclosure and sale by the Trustee for the bondholders, the proceeds shall be applied first "to the payment of interest on said bonds * * * but without interest upon such interest" and then to the payment of the principal on the bonds.

But in the instant case the Trustee did not elect to enforce covenant (2) above, that is, the Trustee for the bondholders is not seeking here to foreclose the mortgaged property and to collect the proceeds from the sale thereof. Instead the Trustee has elected to enforce covenant (1), that is, it seeks here to recover the unpaid interest coupons in default. Obviously the limitation contained in Section III is not applicable. Nor should it be assumed that the right to interest upon enforcing covenant (1) can not be more extensive than the right to interest upon enforcing covenant (2). The covenants are independent. As to one there is a limitation. It does not follow at all that as to the other a similar limitation is implied. We conclude that the judgment should have included interest on the unpaid coupons from the date of maturity to the date of the judgment.

Rate of Interest. According to the case and statutory law of Indiana, if an obligation bears a specific rate of interest (the contract rate), then the obligation will continue to bear interest at the contract rate after maturity and the judgment thereon will bear interest at the same rate. On the other hand if there is no contract rate, the rate is the statutory 6%, both as to the obligation after maturity and as to the judgment thereon. See Shaw v. Rigby, 84 Ind. 375; Kerr v. Haverstick, 94 Ind. 178; Gale v. Corey, 112 Ind. 39; 5 Burns Indiana Statutes Annotated (1933), Secs. 19-2002 and 19-2003.

It is Chase's contention that in applying the Indiana law in this matter, these results follow: (1) as to the bonds, the contract rate is 5%, and therefore after maturity the bonds will bear interest at 5% and any judgment for the principal will also bear interest at 5%; (2) as to the amount due on the coupons, there is no contract rate specified but instead there is a direct promise to "pay to the bearer * * * Twenty-five dollars * * *" at a specified date, and therefore the rate of interest on the coupons after maturity is 6% and the rate of interest on the judgment for the overdue and unpaid coupons is also 6%.

We disagree with Chase when it contends that there is no rate of interest specified on the coupons. In describing the coupons above, Chase omits the following significant words: "being six months' interest on its First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent. Gold Bond No. ....." Moreover the face of each bond reads as follows: "The Indianapolis Gas Company * * * promises to pay * * * [the principal] * * * with interest * * * at the rate of five percent. per annum * * *; that is to say, on the first day of April and of October * * * upon the presentation and surrender of the annexed coupons respectively." (The emphasis is our contribution.) We conclude that the unpaid interest coupons bear interest at 5% (the contract rate) from the date of maturity to the judgment and that the judgment for the overdue and unpaid coupons also bears interest at 5% until the same is satisfied.

Liability of Citizens Gas. We have considered the complete argument made by counsel for Citizens Gas and conclude without further discussion that its liability under the lease continues but that its liability is secondary to the liability of the City as successor trustee and to the liability of the trust property. We have also concluded that the indemnity contract executed by the City and running in favor of Citizens Gas, is valid and effective. In passing it is to be noted that the lease obligation carries with it the payment as rental of the interest on the bonds of Indianapolis Gas.

Conclusions. Our conclusions in this case follow: (1) the 99 years lease is valid; (2) the assignment of the lease did not relieve Citizens Gas from its obligations as lessee; (3) the indemnity contract is effective; (4) the lease binds the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (5) the leasehold interest is part of the trust res; (6) the City has accepted the trust res; (7) Chase has a right to interest; (8) Chase has a right to interest on interest; and (9) Chase is entitled to interest at the rate of 5%.

Therefore the judgment of the District Court is reversed. Chase is entitled to a declaratory judgment to the effect that the lease is valid and enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability: (1) the City as successor trustee and the trust property; and (2) Citizens Gas. Chase is also entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and overdue interest coupons, the judgment to include interest at 5% both on the coupons from maturity to the judgment and on the judgment from entry to satisfaction. Moreover this coercive judgment is enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability: (1) the City successor trustee and the trust property; (2) Citizens Gas; and (3) Indianapolis Gas. The District Court is directed to proceed in accord with this opinion. It is so ordered.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit.

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, etc., Plaintiff-Appellant, vs. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Defendants-Appellees. } Nos. 7143

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, etc., Plaintiff-Appellee, vs. The Indianapolis Gas Company, Defendant-Appellant. } and 7144.

Defendants-appellees City of Indianapolis and the members of its Board of Trustees for Utilities and its Board of Directors for Utilities, viz.: A. Dallas Hitz, Edward W. Harris, Charles S. Rauh, Merle E. Sidener, Thomas Sheerin, Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Isaac E. Woodard, David J. Angus, Leroy J. Keach and John E. Ohleyer, respectfully petition the Court to grant a rehearing of said cause, to reconsider its opinion of June 6, 1940, and reverse its direction to the lower court to enter judgment against the City and to affirm the judgment of the lower court.

As grounds for this petition, these defendants-appellees submit that:

1. This Court held that a Trustee of a public charitable trust had no right to make a long term burdensome lease; that it incurred liability to the beneficiaries if it did so and that in addition the beneficiaries were entitled to have such a lease set aside. This Court therefore held that if a showing could be made that the lease was in fact burdensome it could be set aside and yet it has directed a final judgment to be entered against the City which by agreement with its opponents and by order of the Court was still to have the right to prove the burdensome character of the lease. If every other question raised by this petition for rehearing should be decided adversely to the defendants-appellees we ask that the order of the Court be modified so as to permit the City to have an opportunity to prove the averments of its counter-claim and to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome.

With no opportunity for a hearing on this reserved issue, the defendants-appellees have been denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The right to a hearing extends both to a determination of question of fact and law by the trial court. The denial of a hearing on either is a denial of due process. The City affirmatively claims the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment.

2. This court for the first time in its opinion of June 6, 1940, held that the Chase National Bank, plaintiff-appellant, was entitled to a decree that the lease of September 30, 1913, was enforceable against the City and that Chase was also entitled to a coercive judgment against the City. The Court on its own motion should have reconsidered its decision in Chase National Bank of New York v. Citizens Gas Company, 96 F. 2d 363, in which it held that The Indianapolis Gas Company was an indispensable party to the controversy, but in which it also sustained the jurisdiction of the lower court on the ground that there was a collision of interest between Chase and Indianapolis Gas on certain questions involved and that this fact prevented a realignment of Indianapolis Gas with Chase. The court erred in sustaining the jurisdiction of the lower court of the subject-matter of this controversy and directing judgment to be entered against the city because Indianapolis Gas should have been realigned with Chase and thus diversity of citizenship destroyed, because alignment of the parties in any case must be determined by their relation to the main controversy. In this case there is no collision of interest between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas on the main issue involved, viz.: the enforceability of the lease against the City. It is clear from the Court's opinion that all questions other than the question of the enforceability of the lease against the city were dependent upon the decision of that question.

3. The Court erred in not realigning Indianapolis Gas with Chase and directing the lower court to dismiss this cause for lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, because:

(a) The Court held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and over-due interest represented by the coupons together with five per cent interest thereon from maturity to judgment and five per cent interest on the judgment from entry to satisfaction, which judgment was to be enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

(1) The City and the trust property.
(2) Citizens Gas.
(3) Indianapolis Gas.

If a coercive judgment is entered against the City it may be mandated to pay that judgment through the medium of a tax levy. Cox v. State, 182 Ind. 497.

Even if this Court should modify or construe its opinion so that the judgment against the City would be payable solely out of the revenues from the property, there is still no possibility of the judgment being paid by Indianapolis Gas because the funds deposited in escrow and those remaining in the hands of the City from the operation of the property are more than sufficient to discharge the full amount of the judgment ordered entered. The judgment will be against Indianapolis Gas in form only; in substance and reality it will be a judgment for the joint benefit of Chase and Indianapolis Gas against the City.

The result is that in a case in which Indianapolis Gas is vitally interested in the enforcement of the lease and in procuring a coercive judgment requiring the City to pay the interest on its mortgage debt, this suit has been maintained in a Federal Court where no federal question is involved, where jurisdiction depends wholly on diversity of citizenship and a judgment ordered entered which as a practical proposition insulates Indianapolis Gas from possible coercion of payment.

(b) The result of the Court's opinion is that a judgment is ordered entered which will be equally beneficial to both Chase and Indianapolis Gas and which in reality will amount to a judgment not against Indianapolis Gas but in its favor.

(c) The dominant question upon the answer to which depended the final decision in this cause was whether the lease was enforceable against the City and in that question Chase and Indianapolis Gas have identical interests.

(d) The decision of this Court is directly in conflict with controlling decisions of the United States Supreme Court wherein it is held that parties must be aligned in interest in accordance with their relation to the main controversy in the cause and the fact that there are dependent controversies in respect of which their interest may be adverse is not sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground of diversity of citizenship.

4. This Court apparently relied on the decisions in the following cases as res adjudicata of some or all of the issues presented in this case and inferentially, although not directly, held that the City was estopped by such judgments:

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282;
Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448;
Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., et al., 46 F. 2d 855;
Cotter v. Citizens Gas Co., et al., 46 F. 2d 855.

None of these cases is res adjudicata of any issue involved in this case and this court should have so held.

(See Jones v. Vert, et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141.)

5. The Court erred in directing that a coercive judgment, presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City, be entered in favor of Chase, thus requiring municipal revenues raised by taxation to be applied if necessary in payment of rentals under a lease which had no municipal sanction and which was executed in direct violation of applicable Indiana statutes. There was no limitation in the Court's opinion that the unpaid coupons and interest on them to the date of judgment and interest on the judgment from date of entry to payment should be collectible only out of the revenues arising from the operation of Indianapolis Gas property. The Court has thus imposed a burden on the City not authorized by any statute and not supported, so far as we know, by any decision and contrary to the very terms of the lease itself.

6. The Court erred in holding and deciding that the lease was valid and enforceable against the City. The decision of the Court in this respect is susceptible of a construction that the rental reserved in the lease may be collected from the City out of revenues raised by taxation whereas in no event could the City lawfully be required to pay such reserved rent except out of the net income of the leased property and or the trust property.

While the proposition urged in Subdivision 5, supra, of this petition for rehearing cannot under the facts of this case result in the use of revenue derived from taxation for the payment of rentals presently due, if the language of the opinion is unmodified it may result in the future in requiring the City to pay rentals out of such revenues.

7. This court apparently relied upon certain acts as showing that the City of Indianapolis was estopped to deny the enforceability against it of the lease of September 30, 1913, although there is no express holding to that effect. The Court erred in giving any weight to the claimed estoppel because there was no proof that any present holder of the bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company knew of or relied upon any such act and in addition under the applicable Indiana law unauthorized acts of city officers cannot be made the basis of a recovery against the city. The court erred in failing to hold that the city was not estopped by any such acts of its officers.

8. This Court erred in holding that the 99 year lease between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was valid and was enforceable against the City.

9. The Court erred in holding that the City accepted the lease.

10. The Court erred in holding that the initial trustee, Citizens Gas and the successor trustee, the City, had power to purchase in fee simple the property of Indianapolis Gas and that therefore the attack of the City was only upon the mode of the acquisition of this property.

11. The Court in its opinion stated that the City did not claim that the lease was unenforceable against it on grounds of public policy. In this it erred because the City made such direct claim and that claim should have been sustained by this Court.

12. The Court erred in holding that the lease of September 30, 1913, executed by Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was enforceable against the City because:

(a) When that lease was originally executed the City was not a party to it and it has never been contended by Chase that the lease was originally binding against the City. Indeed, it could not be known until the property was taken over, which was only in 1935, whether under any theory of the case the City would be bound to the terms of that lease. The whole theory of Chase's presentation of this case in its complaint, the amendments thereto, its evidence and the briefs in this court is that the City became bound to the terms of the lease by estoppel, res adjudicata and the operation of the property. The Court has apparently decided this case on an issue which was not presented to the court by Chase for its determination, and has erroneously held the City liable under the terms of the lease although that lease was never approved by any proper municipal action. Indeed, the only action taken by the City was to reject the lease.

13. This Court erred in not holding the lease invalid because violative of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly, 1905.

14. This Court erred in refusing to abide by the rule of United States Supreme Court laid down in the case of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, in that it did not apply the established law of the State of Indiana to the questions involved in this case, and in particular it did not apply the law of Indiana in its determination of the questions of estoppel against the City and the question of whether or not certain judgments rendered by the Indiana Supreme Court were res adjudicata.

Defendants-Appellees City of Indianapolis and the members of its Board of Trustees and Directors for Utilities, viz.: A. Dallas Hitz, Edward W. Harris, Charles S. Rauh, Merle E. Sidener, Thomas D. Sheerin, Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Isaac E. Woodard, David J. Angus, Leroy J. Keach and John E. Ohleyer, respectfully petition the Court to grant, in connection with the rehearing requested by defendants-appellee, a reargument of this cause.

As grounds for this petition for a reargument these defendants-appellees submit that:

1. Under the decision of this Court as it now stands the Court has directed that a declaratory judgment be entered against the City determining the lease of September 30, 1913, as valid and a coercive judgment for unpaid interest coupons with interest thereon. This order has been made notwithstanding that this Court has held that if the lease was improvident or burdensome it could be declared to be invalid. Because the question of the burdensome character of the lease was reserved for future determination by the court without objection or exception by any parties the City has been deprived of its day in court and it should undoubtedly have the right to be heard on this issue before the lower court is directed to enter final judgment against the City.

2. The questions involved are of grave public importance inasmuch as the Court's decision imposes upon the City of Indianapolis a liability for future rentals of more than $45,000,000 under a lease which did not have the sanction of any proper municipal authority.

3. The Court has directed that a coercive judgment presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City be entered in favor of Chase, thus if necessary requiring revenues raised by taxation to be applied in payment of rentals under a lease which had no municipal sanction. If this be the correct interpretation of the court's decision then it follows that future rentals would be required to be paid by the city out of revenues raised from taxation if the revenue from the operation of the property were insufficient to pay the stipulated rentals. No such result can possibly be authorized by any statute or reported decision and is in direct conflict with the terms of the lease itself.

4. The Court misunderstood the position of the City in many important particulars, as for example, it stated in its opinion:

"Counsel for the City does not argue that the trustees lack the power to lease the property of its rival because such action might contravene public policy."

The Court entirely overlooked the averments contained in the city's answer and counter-claims (R. pp. 141 to 205, 314), and the argument of the City in its brief in this cause at pages 111-118, inclusive, where the point is expressly made that the lease in question was executed in direct violation of prohibitive Indiana statutes, was therefore void and could not be ratified or enforced by estoppel.

5. Because of the long record and the complicated nature of the factual situation the Court, in its written opinion, has inadvertently fallen into error in respect of important facts, and also in respect of the position taken by the City, all as pointed out in the City's brief on its petition for rehearing. The City should have an opportunity through its counsel to re-present its case orally to the Court so that the case may be decided in view of the correct facts and the actual position taken by the City on such facts.

STIPULATION RE AMPLIFICATION OF RECORD.

It Is Hereby Stipulated by all of the parties to these two causes that this Stipulation and the facts recited herein and the exhibits attached hereto may be made a part of the record in the two above entitled causes as fully and completely as though all of said matters had been included in the Transcript of Record as originally certified to this Court by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division.

The signing and execution of this Stipulation by the parties hereto shall not be considered as an admission by any of the parties of the materiality or relevance of any of the material so added to the record.

It Is Further Stipulated that the following facts are true:

(1) On January 4, 1939, a pre-trial conference was held before the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of the United States District Court, in causes 1844 and 1950, In Equity, on the docket of said District Court. An excerpt from the official Reporter's transcript of said proceedings is attached hereto, marked "Exhibit A", and made a part hereof.

(2) The two causes now pending in this Court, namely, Nos. 7143 and 7144, are appeals from the judgment in cause No. 1844, In Equity, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. Cause No. 1950, In Equity on the docket of said District Court, entitled "Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, et al., plaintiffs, vs. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., defendants", was tried with cause No. 1844 but has not yet been decided by the District Court.

(3) On the 14th day of January, 1939, at a pre-trial conference held before the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, in causes 1844 and 1950, In Equity, William H. Thompson, counsel for the City of Indianapolis, et al., in both of said causes, presented a proposed form of order respecting the separate trial of certain issues in Cause 1844, a copy of which proposed form of order is attached hereto, marked "Exhibit D", and made a part hereof.

(4) On January 16, 1939, Howard F. Burns, counsel for plaintiffs in both causes 1844 and 1950, wrote and mailed a letter to Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of the United States District Court, enclosing a proposed form of order entitled "Order Directing Separate Trial of Certain Claims and Causes of Action and Reserving Other Claims and Causes of Action for Subsequent Trial." Copies of said letter of January 16, 1939, and the enclosed form of order are attached hereto, marked "Exhibit B" and "Exhibit C", respectively, and made a part hereof. Copies of said letter of January 16th (Exhibit B) and of the enclosed form of order (Exhibit C) were mailed on January 16, 1939 to counsel for each of the defendants in said causes.

(5) On February 27, 1939, counsel for plaintiffs in said causes 1844 and 1950 filed with the District Court a brief entitled "Plaintiffs' Brief on the Admissibility of Evidence to Support Allegations That the Lease of September 30, 1913 Is or Was Burdensome", and on the same day served copies of said brief on counsel for each of the defendants in said causes. An excerpt from said brief is attached hereto, marked "Exhibit E", and made a part hereof.

Appearances:

The plaintiff, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, appeared by Thompson Kurrie, Esq., representing Messrs. Taylor & Carter, its attorneys.

The plaintiff, Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, appeared by Harvey J. Elam, Esq., representing Messrs. Fesler, Elam, Young & Fauvre, its attorneys.

The defendant, Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, appeared by Paul Y. Davis, Esq., and William G. Sparks, Esq., representing Messrs. Davis, Pantzer, Baltzell & Sparks, its attorneys.

"Mr. Elam: I think there was a motion to strike out parts of their Answer, that you haven't mentioned.

The Court. You mean in the Chase case?

Mr. Elam: I think it is in both the Chase case and the bondholders case.

The Court: There was a motion, there on the consolidation, that I didn't think was necessary to mention at this time.

Mr. Thompson: There is a motion in each case, your Honor, by the plaintiff to strike out that part of our Answer which alleges that this lease was burdensome.

The Court: Is it necessary to go into that at this time? Wouldn't that come under the further hearing, if it is necessary?

Mr. Thompson: We claim that that goes to the question of the validity and the binding effect of this lease upon the City of Indianapolis and, inasmuch as we didn't sign the lease—the City didn't sign the lease—and inasmuch as the leased property was not a part of the corpus of the public charitable trust when the City took it over,—

The Court: I don't have that motion. It doesn't seem to be among these papers which I have here. I had in mind that those questions and the question with reference to the burdensome lease perhaps might not enter into the question of the validity of the lease so much. They are seeking to strike that from your Answer?

Mr. Thompson: Yes. My thought on that was that, if there is nothing in his proposition as a legal proposition, we don't need to go into the fact, whether it is a fact or not.

The Court: It would require some proof, wouldn't it?

Mr. Thompson: A substantial amount.

The Court: Well, I didn't have in mind going into that question at this time. I don't know whether that would be necessary to determine the validity of the lease or not.

Mr. Elam: Well, I suppose when we have our hearing, we could prove that question then in connection with the validity of the lease, on the assumption that the fact is one way or the other and, then, let it go until later to find out what the fact is.

The Court: That motion is just to strike out those allegations. I would think the allegations would be proper. It is in the Massachusetts Mutual case, a motion to strike immaterial matter from the Answer and the counterclaim of the defendant, City of Indianapolis. I assume that is the motion. I will go into that. I will examine that question and pass on it before the time for the hearing.

I notice there is cited here Public Service Commission versus Indianapolis, 193 Indiana. Somebody gave me that citation.

Mr. Thompson: When you have reached a conclusion on that question, your Honor, will you also notify counsel as to whether any evidence is to be heard in respect to that issue?

The Court: Yes. My present thought would be, if it just goes to the question of striking that out, that the motion would not be well taken. However, I want to go into that question.

Mr. Elam: I think the motion is well taken and it will simplify the case a good deal if it is sustained.

The Court: I thought I had it simplified once, but the other court said I didn't.

Is that in both cases?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, sir, I think so.

The Court: I don't find it in the Chase National Bank case. I will look through the file later.

I will take up this matter of the motion to strike within a very short time.

Mr. Elam: All right.

The Court: I am sorry I did not have that in mind. I thought I had in mind everything that had been presented."

Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge,
United States District Court,
Federal Building,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

Dear Judge Baltzell:

re: Chase National Bank, Trustee, vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al.; In equity No. 1844.

Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, et al. vs. Citizens Gas Company, et al.; In Equity No. 1950.

I am taking the liberty of writing you further in regard to the proposed order directing separate trial of certain claims and causes of action because I had no opportunity to see the order proposed by Mr. Thompson until he presented it to you Saturday morning. I am sending a copy of this letter to counsel for each of the defendants.

It seems to us that the form of order presented by Mr. Thompson on Saturday is designed to prevent the trial of many issues which are purely matters of law and should be decided at the first trial of the case. The order presented by the City would almost certainly require a second trial.

Plaintiffs on the other hand, are anxious to have the validity of the lease determined and all other questions which may be presented upon the same evidence without any additional burden upon the Court, because they feel that this will in all probability avoid the necessity of any further trial.

Several issues which we wish to have presented at the first trial, but which are excluded by the City's form of order, will require no evidence in addition to that produced on the question of the validity of the lease. Among these issues are:

(1) Whether plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment against The Indianapolis Gas Company.

This issue does not relate in any way to the validity of the lease, but is fully presented by the allegations and admissions of the pleadings as they now stand.

(2) Whether plaintiffs are entitled to interest on the unpaid instalments of interest on said bonds from the time when such instalments became due and are entitled to their costs and expenses in the prosecution of these cases.

No additional evidence will be required on these issues and the question as to the amount, if any, of the allowance for plaintiffs' expenses is expressly reserved.

We believe that it is particularly necessary to have express provisions in the order such as those included in our tendered form of order, one of which reads as follows:

"In the determination of said questions all grounds based upon the facts alleged in plaintiff's bill of complaint as amended and supplemented, or in any of the answers or counterclaims filed herein, for entering judgment, or refusing to enter judgment, against any of said persons or any of said property for the items enumerated shall be tried and determined."

A single example will illustrate why we consider this language necessary. It is admitted by the pleadings that the Citizens Gas Company conveyed all of its property to the City, thus leaving it no assets with which to satisfy any of its creditors. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the lease is binding upon the Citizens Gas Company but not binding upon the City, the obligations of the lease or the judgment against Citizens Gas Company for the rent under the lease would be a valid claim against the property of Citizens Gas Company which was transferred to the City in violation of the rights of the creditors of Citizens Gas. This and other similar questions will require no additional evidence and should be submitted and passed upon at the first trial so that we can have one trial and one review of all these questions.

Since Mr. Thompson objected to the length of the order which we presented to the Court and defendants' counsel on Friday, we have redrafted the order and I am enclosing a copy of the order as redrafted herewith. There are two principal changes in this order from the one which we originally submitted. First, we have simply reserved for the subsequent trial all issues not enumerated, without enumerating any of the reserved issues. Second, with respect to the burdensomeness of the lease, we have in large part adopted Mr. Thompson's language in his form of order as presented on Saturday.

We believe it is important to have an explicit order defining which issues are to be tried and which reserved, because it may be necessary two or three years from now for counsel and some appellate court to know precisely what issues were presented and what issues were reserved. A definite order which makes these distinctions clear is essential to the protection of the Court and all parties.

It is the earnest wish of the plaintiffs and plaintiffs' counsel that the first trial shall include those issues which will in all probability dispose of the entire controversy. They hope by this method to dispose of the entire case by one trial and one review. We believe the order tendered by the City will effectually prevent this very desirable result.

Respectfully submitted,
(signed) Howard F. Burns.

EXHIBIT C.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

For the Southern District of Indiana,

Indianapolis Division.

In Equity No. 1844.

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, Plaintiff, vs.
Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Defendants.

ORDER DIRECTING SEPARATE TRIAL OF CERTAIN CLAIMS AND CAUSES OF ACTION AND RESERVING OTHER CLAIMS AND CAUSES OF ACTION FOR SUBSEQUENT TRIAL.

This day this matter came on to be heard upon the application of the parties for an order directing a separate trial of certain claims, causes of action, questions, and issues, and reserving certain other claims, causes of action, questions, and issues for a subsequent trial, and the Court being fully advised in the premises finds that it will be to the advantage and convenience of both the Court and the parties to make such a separation of claims, causes of action, questions, and issues.

It is therefore ordered, in pursuance of the provisions of Rules 42 and 54 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, that the following claims, causes of action, questions, and issues shall be determined upon the first trial of this action and appropriate judgments entered accordingly:

I. Whether the obligations of the lease between The Indianapolis Gas Company and Citizens Gas Company dated September 30, 1913, particularly as to the payment of rental and performance of other executory obligations to be paid or performed after September 9, 1935, are binding on

a. The Indianapolis Gas Company,
b. The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis,
c. The City of Indianapolis,

d. The Utility District of the City of Indianapolis, and

e. The property formerly owned by Citizens Gas Company and conveyed to the City of Indianapolis on or about September 9, 1935, or any one of more of said persons or said property. In the determination of said questions all grounds based upon the facts alleged in plaintiff's bill of complaint as amended and supplemented, or in any of the answers or counterclaims filed herein, for imposing or refusing to impose, the obligations of said lease upon any of said persons or said property shall be tried and determined.

II. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against

a. The Indianapolis Gas Company,

b. The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis,

c. The City of Indianapolis,

d. The Utility District of the City of Indianapolis, and

e. The property formerly owned by Citizens Gas Company and conveyed to the City of Indianapolis on or about September 9, 1935, or any one or more of said persons or said property, for any one or more of the following items:

(1) Interest on the First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, and the amount of such interest;

(2) Interest on the unpaid instalments of interest on said Bonds, from the time when such instalments became due to the time of judgment, and the amount of such interest;

(3) The costs and expenses of the plaintiff in and about the bringing and prosecution of this suit, including reasonable attorney's fees for plaintiff's solicitors, reserving, however, the question of the amount of such costs, expenses, and fees for later determination.

In the determination of said questions all grounds based upon the facts alleged in plaintiff's bill of complaint as amended and supplemented, or in any of the answers or counterclaims filed herein, for entering judgment, or refusing to enter judgment, against any of said persons or any of said property for the items enumerated shall be tried and determined.

It is further ordered that all other claims, causes of action, questions, and issues raised by the pleadings herein be reserved for subsequent trial.

It appearing further to the Court that one certain reason has been asserted in the separate answer and counter-claim of the City of Indianapolis, et al., why said lease of September 30, 1913, [illegible]t be enforceable against the City of Indianapo[illegible]gainst the property formerly owned by the C[illegible]as Company and conveyed to the City of Indianapolis on or about September 9, 1935, viz., that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject the assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust, and it further appearing that a substantial amount of evidence may be required on this issue and will put an unwarranted burden upon the time of the Court, and that such questions should, if material, be referred to a Special Master for report prior to the final decision of the claims, causes of action, questions, and issues to be separately heard at the first trial;

It is hereby ordered that the issues arising out of said certain reason for the claimed unenforceability of said lease and all evidence as to the burdensomeness of said lease or the value of said leasehold estate shall not be presented to the Court at the time of the first trial of the claims, causes of action, questions, and issues hereinbefore enumerated in subdivisions I and II of this order, but that as a part of the first trial of said claims, causes of action, questions, and issues the Court will decide whether such evidence is material to the determination of the claims, causes of action, questions, and issues to be determined at said first trial. If the Court then decides that such allegations of the City of Indianapolis, et al., are material to the determination of the issues before it at the first trial, the Court will then refer the issues made by such allegations of the City of Indianapolis, et al., to a special master to be appointed by the Court.

No. 1844 in Equity.

ORDER.

There shall first be tried the issue as to whether the lease dated September 30, 1913, from The Indianapolis Gas Company to Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis or any of the property acquired by it from Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935; or against The Indianapolis Gas Company; or against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis; with the one exception, that there shall not be tried therewith but the trial thereof shall be deferred, one certain reason for claimed unenforceability of such lease against the City of Indianapolis or its said property, viz. that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust.

The trial of all other issues in this case is deferred until the further order of the court, with the right reserved to refer any or all of such issues to a special master.

EXHIBIT E.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

For the Southern District of Indiana,

Indianapolis Division.

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, Plaintiff, vs. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Defendants.	In Equity No. 1844.
Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Defendants.	In Equity No. 1950.

PLAINTIFFS' BRIEF ON THE ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT ALLEGATIONS THAT THE LEASE OF SEPTEMBER 30, 1913 IS OR WAS BURDENSOME.

The plaintiff in cause 1844 and plaintiffs in cause 1950 (hereinafter collectively called the "plaintiffs") moved the Court to strike from the answer and counterclaim of the City of Indianapolis and its Trustees and Directors for Utilities (hereinafter collectively called the "City") in each cause, all allegations that the rentals required by the lease of September 30, 1913 are excessive or that the lease is burdensome. Although those motions were overruled, it plainly appears that none of these allegations is in any way material or relevant to the issue as to the validity and present binding effect of the lease, whatever possible relevancy they might have to some of the issues reserved for trial at a later date.

The order entered by this Court on January 18, 1939, provides that the evidence as to one alleged reason for the City's claim that the lease of September 30, 1913 (hereinafter called the "Lease") is not enforceable against it or the property which it received from Citizens Gas Company, namely that the City can reject the Lease on the ground that it is burdensome, shall be deferred, this matter to be tried at a later date if found to be relevant or necessary to the determination of the question whether the Lease is now valid and binding. The plaintiffs will object to the admission of any such evidence and to having a subsequent trial for the presentation of such evidence, on the ground that none of it is relevant to the question whether the Lease is binding upon the City or any of its property. This brief is submitted in support of plaintiffs' contentions on this point.

There are three distinct reasons why the evidence proffered by the City as to the burdensomeness of the Lease is wholly immaterial in determining whether the Lease is binding upon the City.

First: The parties, including the City, are estopped by prior adjudications of this question.

Second: Both the Citizens Gas Company and the City are estopped by their laches in failing to object for a period of twenty-two years that the Lease was burdensome and in accepting during the meantime all of the benefits arising from said Lease.

Third: A party to a contract—otherwise valid—or its successor in interest, cannot escape the obligations of such contract by proving that such obligations either were originally or have later become burdensome.

[Here follows on pages 3 to 20, inclusive, a discussion of the facts and the law presented by counsel for plaintiffs.]

Conclusion.

It is respectfully submitted that the evidence tendered by the City to establish the burdensomeness of the Lease cannot properly be admitted unless the Court finds affirmatively for the City on every one of the following propositions:

First: That the Public Service Commission did not determine that the Lease was in the public interest or that the City is now entitled to make a collateral attack upon that determination.

Second: That the City is now entitled to repudiate the positions which it took in the Fishback and Williams cases that the Lease was entirely valid and was not burdensome.

Third: That the City is not concluded by the judgment in the Williams case, to which it was a party, establishing the validity of the Lease and holding that evidence as to the burdensomeness of the Lease did not justify invalidating it at the suit of a beneficiary of the trust.

Fourth: That the acquiescence in the Lease and the acceptance of the benefits thereunder, for a period of twenty-two years, by the City, and Citizens Gas Company, its predecessor in title, and by the inhabitants of Indianapolis as beneficiaries of the public charitable trust, do not constitute laches.

Fifth: That a party to a contract, or its successor, is entitled to escape from the obligations of an otherwise binding contract, which has been recognized and acted under for twenty-two years, because in the light of the present facts the contract is an improvident one.

As shown by the foregoing brief, the City cannot establish any one of these five propositions and since the failure to establish any one of them requires the exclusion of the evidence, we submit that any evidence as to the burdensomeness of the Lease should be excluded.

IN THE

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, Trustee, etc., Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS, ET AL.,
Defendants-Appellees.

Nos. 7143

THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, Trustee, etc., Plaintiff-Appellee,
v.
THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY,

and 7144.

Defendants-appellees City of Indianapolis and the members of its Board of Trustees for Utilities and its Board of Directors for Utilities, viz: A. Dallas Hitz, Edward W. Harris, Charles S. Rauh, Merle E. Sidener, Thomas Sheerin, Henry L. Dithmer, Brodehurst Elsey, Roy Sahm, Isaac E. Woodard, David J. Angus, Leroy J. Keach and John E. Ohleyer, respectfully petition the Court to grant a rehearing of said cause, to reconsider its opinion of June 6, 1940, as modified and reverse its direction to the lower court to enter judgment against the City and to affirm the judgment of the lower court.

As grounds for this petition, these defendants-appellees submit that:

1. This Court held that a Trustee of a public charitable trust had no right to make a long term burdensome lease; that it incurred liability to the beneficiaries if it did so and that in addition the beneficiaries were entitled to have such a lease set aside. This Court therefore held that if a showing could be made that the lease was in fact burdensome it could be set aside and yet it has directed a final judgment to be entered against the City which by order of the Court entered without objection or exception by any of the parties was still to have the right to prove the burdensome character of the lease. If every other question raised by this petition for rehearing should be decided adversely to the defendants-appellees we ask that the order of the Court be modified so as to permit the City to have an opportunity to prove the averments of its counter-claim and to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome.

With no opportunity for a hearing on this reserved issue, the defendants-appellees have been denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and each of them.

The right to a hearing extends both to a determination of question of fact and law by the trial court. The denial of a hearing on either is a denial of due process. The City affirmatively claims the protection of the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and each of them.

2. This court for the first time in its opinion of June 6, 1940, held that the Chase National Bank, plaintiff-appellant, was entitled to a decree that the lease of September 30, 1913, was enforceable against the City and that Chase was also entitled to a coercive judgment against the City. The Court on its own motion should have reconsidered its decision in Chase National Bank of New York v. Citizens Gas Company, 96 F. 2d 363, in which it held that The Indianapolis Gas Company was an indispensable party to the controversy, but in which it also sustained the jurisdiction of the lower court on the ground that there was a collision of interest between Chase and Indianapolis Gas on certain questions involved and that this fact prevented a realignment of Indianapolis Gas with Chase. The court erred in sustaining the jurisdiction of the lower court of the subject-matter of this controversy and directing judgment to be entered against the city because Indianapolis Gas should have been realigned with Chase and thus diversity of citizenship destroyed, because alignment of the parties in any case must be determined by their relation to the main controversy. In this case there is no collision of interest between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas on the main issue involved, viz: the enforceability of the lease against the City. It is clear from the Court's opinion that all questions other than the question of the enforceability of the lease against the city were dependent upon the decision of that question.

3. The Court erred in not realigning Indianapolis Gas with Chase and directing the lower court to dismiss this cause for lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, because:

(a) The Court held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and over-due interest represented by the coupons together with five per cent interest thereon from maturity to judgment and five per cent interest on the judgment from entry to satisfaction, which judgment was to be enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

(1) The City and the trust property.

(2) Citizens Gas.

(3) Indianapolis Gas.

If a coercive judgment is entered against the City it may be mandated to pay that judgment through the medium of a tax levy. Cox v. State, 182 Ind. 497.

Even if this Court should modify or construe its opinion so that the judgment against the City would be payable solely out of the revenues from the property, there is still no possibility of the judgment being paid by Indianapolis Gas because the funds deposited in escrow and those remaining in the hands of the City from the operation of the property are more than sufficient to discharge the full amount of the judgment ordered entered. The judgment will be against Indianapolis Gas in form only; in substance and reality it will be a judgment for the joint benefit of Chase and Indianapolis Gas against the City.

The result is that in a case in which Indianapolis Gas is vitally interested in the enforcement of the lease and in procuring a coercive judgment requiring the City to pay the interest on its mortgage debt, this suit has been maintained in a Federal Court where no federal question is involved, where jurisdiction depends wholly on diversity of citizenship and a judgment ordered entered which as a practical proposition insulates Indianapolis Gas from possible coercion of payment.

(b) The result of the Court's opinion is that a judgment is ordered entered which will be equally beneficial to both Chase and Indianaplois Gas and which in reality will amount to a judgment not against Indianapolis Gas but in its favor.

(c) The dominant question upon the answer to which depended the final decision in this cause was whether the lease was enforceable against the City and in that question Chase and Indianapolis Gas have identical interests.

(d) The decision of this Court is directly in conflict with controlling decisions of the United States Supreme Court wherein it is held that parties must be aligned in interest in accordance with their relation to the main controversy in the cause and the fact that there are dependent controversies in respect of which their interest may be adverse is not sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground of diversity of citizenship.

4. This Court apparently relied on the decisions in the following cases as res adjudicata of some or all of the issues presented in this case and inferentially, although not directly, held that the City was estopped by such judgments:

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282;
Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448;
Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., et al, 46 F. 2d 855;
Cotter v. Citizens Gas Co., et al, 46 F. 2d 855.

None of these cases is res adjudicata of any issue involved in this case and this court should have so held.

5. The Court erred in directing that a coercive judgment, presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City, be entered in favor of Chase, thus requiring municipal revenues raised by taxation to be applied if necessary in payment of rentals under a lease which had no municipal sanction and which was executed in direct violation of applicable Indiana statutes. There was no limitation in the Court's opinion that the unpaid coupons and interest on them to the date of judgment and interest on the judgment from date of entry to payment should be collectible only out of the revenues arising from the operation of Indianapolis Gas property. The Court has thus imposed a burden on the City not authorized by any statute and not supported, so far as we know, by any decision and contrary to the very terms of the lease itself.

6. The Court erred in holding and deciding that the lease was valid and enforceable against the City. The decision of the Court in this respect is susceptible of a construction that the rental reserved in the lease may be collected from the City out of revenues raised by taxation whereas in no event could the City lawfully be required to pay such reserved rent except out of the net income of the leased property and/or the trust property.

While the proposition urged in Subdivision 5, supra, of this petition for rehearing cannot under the facts of this case result in the use of revenue derived from taxation for the payment of rentals presently due, if the language of the opinion is unmodified it may result in the future in requiring the City to pay rentals out of such revenues.

7. This court apparently relied upon certain acts as showing that the City of Indianapolis was estopped to deny the enforceability against it of the lease of September 30, 1913, although there is no express holding to that effect. The Court erred in giving any weight to the claimed estoppel because there was no proof that any present holder of the bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company knew of or relied upon any such act and in addition under the applicable Indiana law unauthorized acts of city officers cannot be made the basis of a recovery against the city. The court erred in failing to hold that the city was not estopped by any such acts of its officers.

8. This Court erred in holding that the 99 years lease between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was valid and was enforceable against the City.

9. The Court erred in holding that the City accepted the lease.

10. The Court erred in holding that the initial trustee, Citizens Gas and the successor trustee, the City, had power to purchase in fee simple the property of Indianapolis Gas and that therefore the attack of the City was only upon the mode of the acquisition of this property.

11. The Court in its opinion stated that the City did not claim that the lease was unenforceable against it on grounds of public policy. In this it erred because the City made such direct claim and that claim should have been sustained by this Court.

12. The Court erred in holding that the lease of September 30, 1913, executed by Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was enforceable against the City because:

> (a) When that lease was originally executed the City was not a party to it and it has never been contended by Chase that the lease was originally binding against the City. Indeed, it could not be known until the property was taken over, which was only in 1935, whether under any theory of the case the City would be bound to the terms of that lease. The whole theory of Chase's presentation of this case in its complaint, the amendments thereto, its evidence and the briefs in this court is that the City became bound to the terms of the lease by estoppel, res adjudicata and the operation of the property. The Court has apparently decided this case on an issue which was not presented to the court by Chase for its determination, and has erroneously held the City liable under the terms of the lease although that lease was never approved by any proper municipal action. Indeed, the only action taken by the City was to reject the lease.

13. This Court erred in not holding the lease invalid because violative of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly, 1905.

14. This Court erred in refusing to abide by the rule of United States Supreme Court laid down in the case of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, in that it did not apply the established law of the State of Indiana to the questions involved in this case, and in particular it did not apply the law of Indiana in its determination of the questions of estoppel against the City and the question of whether or not certain judgments rendered by the Indiana Supreme Court were res adjudicata.

STATUTES

Acts Indiana General Assembly, 1905, Sections 85 and 254, Chapter 129, Acts 1905 30

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I.

The decision of this Court entered on June 6, 1940, as modified, denies to the City and individual defendants due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and each of them, in this:

(a) The lower court, by agreement of parties, reserved for future determination the question of the burdensome character of the lease entered into on September 30, 1913. The judgment ordered entered by this Court declaring the lease to be enforceable against the City and a coercive judgment for unpaid interest, denies to the defendants their day in court on the question of whether Citizens Gas as initial trustee executed a lease burdensome in character and beyond its power to agree to.

(b) Due process of law entitles defendants to a hearing and a decision by the trial court on the law questions (as well as the facts) as to whether the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease or the decision in the Williams case decided the question of burdensomeness. This hearing to which defendants are entitled has never been given them, and the judgment ordered entered by this Court precludes them from such hearing and thus denies to them the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the United States Constitution.

The Court erred in sustaining the jurisdiction of the lower court on the subject-matter of this controversy and directing judgment to be entered against the City for the reason that Indianapolis Gas should have been realigned with Chase, the plaintiff, and thus diversity of citizenship, the sole ground upon which Federal jurisdiction is based, would thereby be destroyed.

The opinion of this Court, and particularly the conclusions appearing on page 26 thereof, show that there was no collision of interest between Chase and Indianapolis Gas because the judgment ordered entered will be equally beneficial to both Chase and Indianapolis Gas. The City is named as first in liability. The taxing power of the City, according to this Court's opinion, is available to pay the lease rentals; the Citizens Gas plant and the Indianapolis Gas plant properties art available, and the revenues from the operation of the plant are available. With these levied on first, it is clear that Indianapolis Gas being third in order of liability, is more thoroughly insulated against execution than ever before. In reality the judgment ordered entered will not be against Indianapolis Gas but will be a judgment in its favor. Upon the dominant question in this case and the dominant point in the decision of this Court: whether the lease was enforceable against the City, Chase and Indianapolis Gas have identical interests.

Chase and Indianapolis Gas have a unity and identity of interest not only on the main issue involved in this cause, but on every other issue involved.

It is the duty of this Court to determine the fundamental question (the jurisdiction of the subject-matter), and to order the dismissal of the case at any time whether the question has been suggested by counsel or not.

III.

(Brief, pages 14-16.)

The Court erred in directing that a coercive judgment presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City be entered in favor of Chase, thus requiring, if necessary, municipal revenues raised by taxation to be applied in payment of rentals under the lease. Section 29 of the lease shows the intention of the parties to have been that the corporate assets and franchises were the sole security relied on. As to future rentals, it may well be that the revenues of the City are subjected to this liability even though the property of Indianapolis Gas be destroyed by competition.

(Brief, pages 16-20.)

Neither the Fishback case (193 Ind. 282), the Williams case (206 Ind. 448), the Todd case (46 F. 2d 855), nor the Cotter case (46 F. 2d 855), is res adjudicata of the issues presented in this case, and this court in relying on such decisions as res adjudicata, and inferentially although not directly, holding that the City was estopped by such judgment, has erred in that it has not followed the rule laid down in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, wherein it is held that there is no general Federal common law and that except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by the Acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state.

The above enumerated decisions are not res adjudicata of the issues here involved when measured by the firmly established principles laid down by the Indiana Supreme Court, nor is the City estopped by any of such judgments.

V.

(Brief, pages 20-22.)

The Court apparently relied upon certain acts as showing that the City was estopped to deny the enforceability against it of the lease of September 30, 1913, although there is no express holding to that effect. No such estoppel can be made the basis of any liability against the City. There is no proof that any present holder of Indianapolis Gas bonds knew of any such claimed acts of estoppel or relied upon them in the purchase of their bonds.

An estoppel cannot be made the basis of liability against the City, a municipal subdivision, because such municipal subdivision cannot be estopped by an act of any officer beyond the scope of his authority.

This rule is firmly settled by decisions of the Indiana Supreme Court.

VI.

(Brief, pages 22-29.)

The Court erred in holding that the 99 years lease between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas is enforceable against the City for the additional reasons that the Shively-Spencer Act (Chapter 76, Acts 1913) did not give the Public Service Commission the power to abrogate the contract between the City and Citizens Gas as expressed in the trust instrument.

The charter of a corporation such as Citizens Gas cannot be changed by subsequently enacted laws unless there is reserve power so to do.

The record in this case shows that the City did not accept the lease; but, on the contrary, expressly rejected it.

The trust instruments, as the Court says on page 17 of its opinion, neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. It is well settled that grants of rights and privileges by a state or municipality are strictly construed, and whatever is not unequivocably granted is withheld, and nothing passes by implication. The trust instruments being silent on the trustee's power, such power cannot be implied.

VII.

The Court erred in holding that the lease of September 30, 1913, was enforceable against the City for the reasons that the City never executed it nor signed it; was not a party to it; was not named as a party obligated; was not an assignee (an assignment was tendered and rejected); no municipal authority having the power to do so ever authorized the execution of the lease, ratified it, or agreed to be bound by its terms.

VIII.

(Brief, pages 30-33.)

The Court erred in not holding the lease invalid because against public policy of the State of Indiana and because in violation of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1905. These sections expressly limit power of City officials and City departments to contract, and Section 254 expressly limits the power of a City to contract for the furnishing of utilities for a term longer than 25 years.

The Court erred in refusing to abide by the rule of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins. Except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by Acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state whether declared by its Legislature in a statute or by the highest court in a decision. There is no Federal general common law.

In this case the Court has not followed the Indiana rule respecting any of the questions submitted in this case.

CONCLUSION.

(Brief, page 37.)

A rehearing and a reargument of this cause should be granted. The opinion of this Court entered on June 6, 1940, should be reconsidered and the opinion of the District Court affirmed, or in the alternative the case should be remanded to the District Court with instructions to hear and decide the issues of law and fact of burdensomeness.

We submit that if the alternative course is chosen that the cause be remanded to the District Court for a hearing and decision on the issues of law and fact of the burdensome character of the lease.

PROPOSITIONS OF LAW.

I.

Since the District Court with the agreement of all parties reserved the issue of the burdensomeness of the lease for future determination, it is a denial of due process of law to defendants, as guaranteed to them by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the Constitution of the United States, for this Court to order a judgment entered declaring the lease of September 30, 1913, to be enforceable against it and directing the entry of a coercive judgment for past instalments of rental.

Hocaq v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 221.

(a) Defendants are entitled to be heard on both the questions of law and fact as to whether the order of the Public Service Commission, approving the lease, and the Williams case (206 Ind. 448) are res adjudicata. To deny such a hearing is to deny the process of law.

Requirements of due process are satisfied only by a hearing in the trial court.

Ohio Water Works Co. v. Ben Avon, 253 U. S. 287, 64 L. ed. 908, 914.

II.

The District Court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter. This court's opinion shows that the interests of Chase and Indianapolis Gas are identical and thus Indianapolis Gas should be realigned with Chase, which would destroy diversity of citizenship, the sole ground upon which jurisdiction is asserted.

Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 62 L. ed. 644;

City of Dawson, etc. v. Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713.

III.

None of the following cases, viz:

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282;

Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448;

Cotter v. Citizens Gas Co., 46 F. 2d 855;

is res adjudicata of any of the issues presented in this case nor is the City or any of the individual defendants estopped by any of such judgments, under the settled law of Indiana as announced by its highest courts, which this court by reason of the decision in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, is bound to follow.

Jones v. Vert et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141;
Maple et al. v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, 59;
Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604, 610.

IV.

Neither the City nor any of the individual defendants is estopped to deny the enforceability of the lease of September 30, 1913, because there is no proof that any present holder of Indianapolis Gas bonds knew of or relied upon any of the claimed acts of estoppel; and, furthermore, no municipal subdivision in Indiana can be estopped by an act of any officer beyond the scope of his authority.

Ross et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150;

Union School Township v. First National Bank, 102 Ind. 464, 476;

Hosford v. Johnson et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485;

Platter v. Board of Commissioners, etc., 103 Ind. 360, 381.

V.

The Public Service Commission law of Indiana (Chapter 76, Acts of 1913) did not affect the powers or duties of Citizens Gas as initial trustee because the charter of a corporation such as Citizens Gas cannot be changed by subsequently enacted laws unless there is reserve power to do so.

Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodard, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.

VI.

The lease executed on September 30, 1913, by Citizens Gas is not enforceable against the City because the City was not a party to it; it did not sign or execute it; it is not named as a party obligated; it is not an assignee of the lease; no ordinance was ever adopted by the Common Council, nor any resolution by the Board of Public Works of the City, authorizing the execution of the lease, ratifying it or agreeing to be bound by its terms. No action was ever taken by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities accepting the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms. The only action which the City took in connection with this lease was to reject it.

III R. pp. 982–986.

VII.

The lease of September 30, 1913, is invalid as against public policy because violative of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1905.

Chapter 192, Acts 1905.

VIII.

This Court erred in refusing to abide by the rule of the U. S. Supreme Court laid down in the case of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins (304 U. S. 64) in determining the questions of estoppel, res adjudicata, the powers of an Indiana corporation, and the powers of a trustee of an Indiana public charitable trust.

There is no general Federal common law, and this Court in this case is bound by the law of Indiana as it has been declared by the Indiana Legislature and by the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana.

I.

This Court has directed that a final judgment be entered against the City declaring the lease of September 30, 1913, to be enforceable against it and directing the entry of a coercive judgment for unpaid interest without there having been any hearing on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. This the Court has done although it has held that if the lease was in fact improvident or burdensome Citizens Gas as initial trustee had no power to execute it and such lease can be set aside at the instance of the beneficiaries of the trust.

1. The lease of September 30, 1913, between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas has been held by this court to be enforceable against the City without the City having its day in Court on the question of whether Citizens Gas as initial trustee executed a lease which was burdensome in character and, therefore, beyond its power to agree to. This issue was reserved for further determination by the lower court by agreement of counsel for all parties. Without an opportunity to be heard on this reserved issue defendants-appellees have been denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the Constitution of the United States.

2. If all other points, upon all of which we confidently rely, are decided against the City by this Court we assert the undoubted right to be heard on the evidence on the issue of whether the initial trustee agreed to a burdensome lease which may, under the decision of the Court in this case, be held invalid at the instance of the City as successor trustee on behalf of the beneficiaries of the trust.

(a) Certainly, when this Court has ruled that an initial trustee is without power to execute a burdensome lease that issue may not be decided against the City with-> under the terms of the lease, no facts are alleged to support such a conclusion. And if such a conclusion were justified, the complaint does not make out a case for equitable relief of cancellation and "recapture" of the rentals paid over a period of seventeen years during which the Citizens Gas Company had the use of the physical equipment and the benefit of the income derived from this use. Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public Service Commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the Public Service Commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the Commission in approving the same."

Furthermore, due process of law entitles defendants-appellees to a hearing and decision by the trial court on the law questions as to whether the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease, or the decision in the Williams case, decided the question of burdensomeness. It make no difference if defendants after a hearing are found to be wrong, they are nevertheless entitled to a hearing.

In Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 221, it was said:

> "Can it be doubted that due process of law signifies a right to be heard in one's defense? If the legislative department of the government were to enact a statute conferring the right to condemn the citizen without any opportunity whatever of being heard, would it be pretended that such an enactment would not be violative of the Constitution? If this be true, as it undoubtedly is, how can it be said that the judicial department, the source and fountain of justice itself, has yet the authority to render lawful that which if done under express legislative sanction would be violative of the Constitution. If such power obtains, then the judicial department of the government sitting to uphold and out the right, inherent in our system of law, to be heard on the factual question involved.

3. The proposition for which the City contends in this connection is expressly recognized by this Court in its opinion as modified in these causes. We quote from page 20 of the opinion of this Court the following relevant language:

> "In making a long term lease a Trustee is under duty to act with prudence. If a Trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a Trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who in addition may have such a lease set aside * * *."

(a) It is no answer to this argument to suggest that the Public Service Commission of Indiana approved the lease because, admittedly, it possesses and can exercise no judicial power. This Court recognized the administrative character of the Public Service Commission (opinion pp. 5 and 6). Nor is it an answer to the contention to state that the Supreme Court of Indiana in the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Ind. 448, did not find that the lease had been improvidently executed or was burdensome because, admittedly, no such issue was before that Court. We quote below the relevant language of the Supreme Court of Indiana in Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448.

In Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, at 458, it was said:

> "In respect to the alleged invalidity of the lease executed between the Citizens Gas Company and the Indianapolis Gas Company it appears from the complaint that the lease was one which the Citizens Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had the power to execute and one which would result in great advantage to the Citizens Gas Company. If the lease was improvident from the standpoint of the lessee in that the consideration was excessive in view of the value of the use of the assets required > enforce the Constitution is the only one possessing a power to disregard it. If such authority exists then in consequence of their establishment, to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice, courts possess the right to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent."

> "And that the judicial department of the government is, in the nature of things, necessarily governed in the exercise of its functions by the rule of due process of law, is well illustrated by another observation of Judge Cooley, immediately following the language just quoted, saying: 'The definition here given is apt and suitable as applied to judicial proceedings, which cannot be valid unless they "proceed upon inquiry," and "render judgment only after trial." ' "

The doctrine of res adjudicata is based on the ground that the party to be affected has litigated or had an opportunity to litigate a question before a court of competent jurisdiction.

Due process under the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the United States Constitution requires a hearing be given a party before conclusive effect is given to a prior judgment.

An appeal is a matter of grace; a hearing a matter of right. As was said in Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon, 253 U. S. 287, 64 L. ed. 908, 911, "the state must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts; otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due process clause. . . ." (Our emphasis.)

This rule is certainly applicable in the case of a municipality, where it has had no opportunity to be head on either the law or the facts on the issue of the burdensome character of a lease imposing upon it under this court's decision a liability of $45,000,000 and where all parties have agreed that there should be such a hearing and the trial court has so ordered.

Defendants are entitled to be heard on whether the lease is burdensome. They are entitled to a hearing on whether the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease is res adjudicata. They are entitled to hearing as to whether the Williams case (206 Ind. 448) adjudicated the issue of burdensomeness.

4. That the question of the burdensomeness of the lease was directly in issue does not admit of debate. The counter-claim of the City (R. p. 186) contains the following averments:

> "Fourth. That said lease of September 30, 1913, was and is onerous and burdensome upon the City of Indianapolis and the property of said Public Charitable Trust and for that reason was a lease which the initial trustee had no power to make beyond the definitely fixed term of its trusteeship; that among its burdensome provisions are the following:
>
> (a) The payment of annual rent in a sum largely exceeding a fair return on the fair value of the property of The Indianapolis Gas Company.
> (b) The requirements heretofore referred to that the Lessee should during the entire term of the lease re-finance the bond issue of The Indianapolis Gas Company and if it should sell said bonds below par to pay the difference to said The Indianapolis Gas Company.
>
> (c) The requirement heretofore referred to penalizing the Lessee in the event it reduced the price of gas.
> Fifth. That said lease being burdensome and onerous in its character, as hereinbefore averred, was not binding upon the City of Indianapolis as successor Trustee and did not constitute an asset of said trust which it was bound to accept, but on the contrary it had the right under the law of Indiana to reject the same."

On the 18th day of January, 1939, the court entered pursuant to Rule 42(b) of Rules of Civil Procedure the following order without objection from or exception by any party:

> "It is ordered that evidence shall be heard upon the issues as to whether the lease dated September 30, 1913, from the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis or any of the property acquired by it from the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935, or against the Indianapolis Gas Company or against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the rental under said lease or for the interest on the First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, against any of said defendants or said property, with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis in its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property, viz: that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust; reserving the right to make such order or decree as may seem just and appropriate to the Court at any stage of this proceeding.
> The trial of all other issues in this case is deferred until the further order of the Court with the right reserved to refer any or all issues to a Master." (Our emphasis.) R. pp. 321 and 322.

Chase's counsel at the time Chase's case was rested said:

"Of course there are other issues to be reserved for later trial." (R. p. 475.) (Our emphasis.)

It thus appears that one of the issues upon which, admittedly, the City had the right to be heard has been reserved for future determination. This was Chase's understanding at the trial.

The City has no desire or right to deny the validity of this order which was entered without objection by the City, Chase or any other party. Chase cannot in good faith deny its validity. If Chase should do so, then Chase's appeal should be dismissed because in such event the case has only been partially determined and there would be no appealable final judgment.

5. The fact that such reservation had been made was pointed out to this Court both in the briefs of Chase and the City.

"By order of the Court entered January 18, 1939 (II R. p. 321), the other issues raised by the bill as amended and supplemented were reserved for trial at a later date."

(b) But this point was more clearly made in the City's brief. We quote from page 124 of our brief in No. 7143 as follows:

"The Court reserved the issue of the burdensomeness of the lease and there is therefore no evidence before the Court on this question, but this court can ascertain from the record some of the conditions imposed upon the City by the lease. In the first place the rental is absolutely fixed. The rental consists of 5% interest on the bonds, 6% dividends on the stock and taxes (see page 7 of this brief where the total payments made on these various accounts are set forth). When it is borne in mind that these payments were irrevocably fixed and cannot be changed in any way, some idea of the character and extent of the claimed obligation of the City can be realized. No matter what the price level and a fair rate base may be, no matter what the condition of the property is, no matter what the economic condition is, and no matter what the prevailing interest rates may happen to be, it follows that if the lease is held to be valid and within the power of the initial trustee to execute, these large and fixed payments must be made. If at the present time, a municipal corporation may borrow money at $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 per cent, as this court will judicially notice, the payments go on to the stockholders and bondholders of Indianapolis Gas at approximately twice that rate. Can any one imagine that it was within the contemplation of the settlors of the trust that such a lease was within the granted authority of Citizens Gas to make." (Our emphasis.)

6. The fact that such a reservation was made was mentioned, but not stressed in oral argument at the Bar of this Court but apparently has been overlooked. There is no adjudication and there is no estoppel which prevents the City from having a determination of this issue on the facts.

We respectfully urge that whatever disposition may be made of the other points raised by us on this petition for a rehearing that if the Court should still hold that this cause should be reversed that it should not be reversed with directions to enter a final judgment but with instructions to determine on the fact and the law the issue of the burdensome character of the lease. Nothing short of such a hearing will satisfy the requirements of due process under the Federal Constitution. No party should have its cause determined against it without its day in court.

Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Kell, 281 U. S. 673, 74 L. ed. 1107.

II.

The Court erred in sustaining the jurisdiction of the lower court of the subject-matter of this controversy and directing judgment to be entered against the City because Indianapolis Gas should have been re-aligned with Chase, and thus diversity of citizenship would have been destroyed. Alignment of the parties in any case must be determined by their relation to the main controversy and not by their relation to dependent or subsidiary questions.

1. The Court on its own motion should have reconsidered its opinion in Chase National Bank of New York v. Citizens Gas Co., 96 F. 2d 363, in which it held that the Indianapolis Gas Company was an indispensable party to the controversy, but in which it also sustained the jurisdiction of the lower court on the ground that there were questions involved in the case in which Chase and Indianapolis Gas were not aligned in interest.

2. The real controversy is whether the lease between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas is valid and enforceable against defendant City of Indianapolis.

3. The actual position taker on the record by the parties to this controversy, is:

Defendant Citizens Gas Company says that whether or not the City is subject to this lease it has itself fully performed its duties and is under no further obligation to plaintiff or any other defendant. (R. p. 221, 230).

Defendant City maintains that the lease is invalid and unenforceable against the City. (R. p. 141-208, 209-212, 266-269).

On the other hand, plaintiff asserts that the lease is a binding obligation against the City. (R. p. 3, 20, 21). Defendant Indianapolis Gas also asserts the lease is binding upon the City (R. p. 137, 138; 215, 219).

4. The opinion of this Court holds that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and overdue interest represented by the coupons, together with 5% interest thereon from maturity to judgment, and 5% interest on the judgment from entry to satisfaction, which judgment was to be enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

First. The City and the trust property.

Second. Citizens Gas.

Third. Indianapolis Gas.

If a coercive judgment is entered against the City it may be mandated to pay that judgment through the medium of a tax levy. Cox v. State, 182 Ind. 497.

5. There is no possibility that Indianapolis Gas will be required to pay this coercive judgment.

Certainly this is true if the court intended to hold that the coercive judgment should be payable out of the general revenues of the City raised by taxation.

Even if the court should modify its opinion in this respect it is still true that the Indianapolis Gas Company cannot from a practical standpoint ever be required to pay the judgment. This results from the facts thoroughly established in the record:

First. That there has been deposited in escrow under the agreement of March 2, 1936, sums of money equal to the interest on the bonds and the dividends on the stock of Indianapolis Gas which are immediately to be paid over to the interested parties in the event there is a final decree determining that the lease of September 30, 1913, is valid. There, therefore, remains to be paid only the interest on the coupons from the date of their respective maturities at the rate of five per cent per annum and the interest on the judgment from the date of rendition to the date of satisfaction. The record shows the entire ability of the City to pay these sums out of the revenues arising from the operation of the trust property. (R. pp. 542, 543.)

The opinion of the court and particularly the conclusions appearing on page 26 of the opinion show that there was no collision of interest between Chase and Indianapolis Gas. This is true because the judgment which was ordered entered will be equally beneficial to both Chase and Indianapolis Gas in in reality will amount to a judgment not against Indianapolis Gas but a judgment in its favor.

The dominant question upon the answer to which depended the final decision in this cause and the dominant point in the decision of this court was whether the lease was enforceable against the City, and in that judgment which has been ordered entered Chase and Indianapolis Gas will have identical interests.

It has been held that Indianapolis Gas is an indispensable party to this controversy, and it is.

> Chase National Bank v. Citizens Gas Co., 96 F. 2d 363, 366.

Where federal jurisdiction is wholly dependent on diversity of citizenship it is the duty of the court to align the parties in accordance with their interests regardless of whether they are named as plaintiffs or defendants.

> Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 62 L. ed. 664;
> Niles Bement Pond Co. v. Iron Moulders, 254 U. S. 77, 65 L. ed. 145.
> City of Dawson, etc., Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713.

Looking at the judgment which this court ordered entered, we see that the City is named as first in liability. The taxing power of the City is available to pay the lease rentals; the Citizens Gas plant and the Indianapolis Gas plant properties are available, and the revenues from the operation of the plant are available. With these to be levied on first it is crystal clear that Indianapolis Gas being third in order of liability is more thoroughly insulated against execution than ever before. This opinion shows that Chase and Indianapolis Gas have interests which are identical.

If Indianapolis Gas be realigned according to its real interest in the dispute involved in this controversy, viz: the enforceability of the 99-year lease against the City it is inevitably realigned with Chase. This is true because the City has now been held to be bound by the lease and required to pay the obligations of Indianapolis Gas. No matter what the form of the judgment may be no one can realistically suppose that Indianapolis Gas has been harmed by the entry of this judgment or that it will be required to pay a single penny as a result of it. On the contrary, it will have obtained as a result of the decision of this Court exactly what it sought from the commencement of this litigation: A decree requiring the City to make the payment and as a practical proposition exempting it from all responsibility to Chase.

Chase and Indianapolis Gas have a unity and identity of interest not only on the main issue involved in this cause but on every other issue involved. It was to the interest of both to obtain a decree declaring that the lease was valid and enforceable against the City. It was to the interest of both to obtain a coercive judgment against the City requiring that the City pay either out of its general revenues raised by taxation, from the fund escrowed under the agreement of March 2, 1936, or from the revenues arising from the operation of the trust property, the interest on the bonds and the dividends on the stock of Indianapolis Gas. When this was done Indianapolis Gas was insulated from liability. The result is that Chase and Indianapolis Gas together have maintained an action in the Federal Court where this Court has recognized that Indianapolis Gas is an indispensable party and where the interest of Chase and Indianapolis Gas is a joint interest.

This they have done when in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the City of Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713,

> "The arrangement of the parties is merely a contrivance between friends for the purpose of founding a jurisdiction which otherwise would not exist."

It is the duty of this court to determine the fundamental question of jurisdiction of the subject-matter and to order the dismissal of the bill at any time. In this respect it makes no difference whether the question has been suggested by counsel or not.

> Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 191 U. S. 184, 48 L. ed. 140;
> Continental National v. Buford, 191 U. S. 119, 48 L. ed. 119.

III.

The Court erred in directing that a coercive judgment, presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City, be entered in favor of Chase, thus requiring, if necessary, municipal revenues raised by taxation to be applied in payment of rentals under this lease.

There was no limitation in the Court's opinion that the unpaid coupons and interest on them to the date of judgment and interest on the judgment from the date of entry to satisfaction, should be collectible only out of revenues arising from the operation of the Gas property.

The lease itself shows that it was clearly the intention of the parties that the rental payments were to be made from revenue. Section 29 of the lease provides in part that:

> "The lessor and lessee mutually convenant that they will each look for the carrying out of the obligations of this lease solely to the corporate assets and franchises of the other . . ." (R. p. 78).

Under the facts shown by the record in this case it is clear that the City will be able to pay the amount of the coercive judgment directed to be entered against it for the past due interest together with interest thereon and interest on the judgment without a resort to a tax levy. We make no claim that in respect to the past due instalments of rent there is any danger to the City because of the failure of the Court to impose any limitation upon the City's liability for rental. But the case in respect of future rentals is far different. There are now outstanding $6,881,000 of bonds on which the annual interest is $344,050 and $2,000,000 of stock on which the annual dividends are $120,000. The City's liability under this lease thus amounts to $464,079 annually without giving and consideration to income taxes, property taxes or organization expenses of Indianapolis Gas. These additional expenses amounted for the last 4 years to an average of $245,000 annually. (R. pp. 1020-1031.)

With the heavy overhead burden imposed upon the City as a result of the declaration of the validity of this lease it is entirely possible and indeed probable that future operation of this Company may be at a loss or alternatively that competition from many sources may be encountered by the City. We do not believe that this court intended by its decision that there should be guaranteed to the bondholders and stockholders of Indianapolis Gas for a period of more than 75 years in the future these tremendous sums of money irrespective of whether the plant might be successfully operated by the City and even though it may be destroyed by competition.

IV.

This Court apparently relied on the decisions in the following cases as res adjudicata of some or all of the issues presented in this case and inferentially, although not directly, held that the City was estopped by such judgments.

1. Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282;
2. Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448;
3. Todd v. Citizens Gas Co. et al, 46 F. 2d 855;
4. Cotter v. Citizens Gas Co., 46 F. 2d 855.

The settled rule of law in Indiana in order for a judgment to operate as res adjudicata has been well expressed in Jones v. Vert, et al, 121 Ind. 140, 141, where it is said:

> "Ordinarily, four things must concur before the principles of res adjudicata can be invoked: 1. A suit. 2. A final judgment. 3. Identity of subject-matter. 4. Identity of parties."

A long line of decisions by the Supreme and Appellate Court of Indiana from which counsel have found no departure hold, first, that a judgment in a former suit is binding as res adjudicata in a subsequent action only between the same parties; second, that a former judgment is not res adjudicata in a subsequent action even between the same parties except when the issues in the two cases are the same, unless the exact point involved in the second case was actually litigated in the first suit and the facts have not changed; and third, that any judgment in a prior action cannot be successfully pleaded as a bar unless it is mutually binding on the parties.

See Maple, et al. v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, 59;
Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604, 610.

This Court under the decision in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, is bound by the law of Indiana as announced by its highest courts.

1. The Fishback case is not res adjudicata of the issues presented here because:

> (a) Neither the City, any trustee under Indianapolis Gas mortgage nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas was a party to the final judgment. There is, therefore, a total lack of mutuality of estoppel.
> (b) The issues in the Fishback case were wholly different from the issues in this case and the question of the validity and enforceability of the lease against the City was not and could not have been decided in that case.

(c) The capacity in which the parties sued and were sued negatives any claim of estoppel by judgment. No claim was asserted in the Fishback case that any public charitable trust existed.

(d) The transfer of the trust res to the City on September 9, 1935, has so altered the rights of the parties as to prevent the judgment in that case being an adjudication in this.

2. The Williams case is not res adjudicata because:

(a) The issues in the Williams case were essentially different from the issues in these cases. In the Williams case plaintiff attempted to procure a determination of the invalidity of the lease on the ground that the execution of the lease violated rights guaranteed to Williams by both State and Federal Constitutions and that said lease had been executed as the result of a fraudulent conspiracy. The enforceability of the lease against the City and the right of the initial trustee to bind the City to the terms of the lease were not actually litigated and could not have been litigated under the issues in the Williams case.

(b) The transfer to the City of the trust res on September 9, 1935, creates a situation which so alters the rights of the parties as to prevent a successful assertion of res adjudicata. When the Williams case was finally decided, the City had not taken over the trust res and until that was done the questions here involved were not in issue. No attempt was made to obtain a declaratory judgment against the City in respect of any obligation supposed to be imposed on it under the terms of the lease.

(c) Although Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees and the City were co-defendants, and although the City formally asserted in a pleading filed that the validity of the public charitable trust was in no wise affected by the question of whether the lease was valid or invalid, Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees tendered no issue to their co-defendant, the City, in respect of the enforceability of the lease against it. Under settled rules of law, the judgment cannot adjudicate the issues here presented as between such co-defendants.

3. The Todd judgment is not res adjudicata because:

(a) Neither Indianapolis Gas, its mortgage trustee nor any of its bondholders were parties in any capacity. There is a total lack of mutuality of estoppel. Had the enforceability of the lease against the City been in issue and had the Court decided that the lease was unenforceable, none of these plaintiffs would have been bound by the judgment. How then can they successfully claim the benefit of it?

(b) The cause of action in the Todd case, and the cause of action in these cases are essentially different and the question of the enforceability of the lease against the City was not litigated, and could not have been litigated, under the issues presented in the Todd case.

(c) The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in question as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered and does not prevent an examination of the same questions even between the same parties, where at a later time the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the parties. At the time of the entry of the decree in the Todd case there was no existing controversy in respect of the enforceability of the lease between Indianapolis Gas and its bondholders on the one side and the City on the other. The Todd case was finally disposed of on May 29, 1930. The facts and circumstances have altered and changed since the date of the decree in the Todd case by reason of the transfer of the trust property on September 9, 1935, to the City as successor trustee and because of the fact that shortly before the time of such transfer and in July, 1935, the first indication of a controversy arose as to the binding effect of the lease on the City.

The Cotter case was not pleaded as res adjudicata. Apparently, some weight is given to the admission made by former counsel for the City in the answer in that case that the lease in question was valid.

In the first place, the validity of the lease was not in issue but in the second place the answer was signed only by counsel, was unverified and there was no attempt to show that the information contained in the answer could have been furnished solely by the City.

Under such circumstances it is settled law that the answer could not bind the City.

Habirshaw etc. Cable Co. v. Cable Company, 296 Fed. 875.

V.

This Court apparently relied upon certain acts as showing that the City of Indianapolis was estopped to deny the enforceability against it of the lease of September 30, 1913, although there is no express holding to that effect. There are outstanding reasons why such an estoppel cannot be made the basis of any liability against the City. The first of these is that it has been admitted throughout the entire conduct of this case that no attempt whatever has been made to prove and no proof has been made that any present holder of Indianapolis Gas bonds knew of any such claimed acts of estoppel or relied upon them in the purchase of their bonds. Under the controlling decisions in the following cases decided by the Supreme Court of Indiana this is one of the precedent conditions to the assertion of estoppel.

Hosford v. Johnson, et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485;

Ross et al., v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150.

In Ross, et al., v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150, the Supreme Court of Indiana thus announced the applicable rule which is absolutely decisive of the question of estoppel relied upon by our opponents:

> "Persons who set up acts of another as an estoppel must show that they acted upon the same, and were influenced thereby to do some act which would work injury, if such other party is allowed to deny the truth of what he did."

So far as the evidence in this case shows the last purchase made of Indianapolis Gas bonds for any bondholder represented by Chase was made in August, 1931, except certain bonds purchased by the Citizens Gas in 1932. We have repeatedly argued that no act or representation done or made by the City at any time subsequent to these dates could be relied upon as an estoppel. This argument has never been answered.

The second and controlling reason why estoppel cannot be made the basis of liability against the City is that no municipal subdivision can be estopped by an act of any officer beyond the scope of his authority.

Union School Township v. First National Bank, 102 Ind. 464, 476;

Platter v. Board of Commissioners, etc., 103 Ind. 360, 381;

Citizens Bank, etc., v. Town of Burnettsville, 98 Ind. App. 92, 191.

These decisions, the controlling effect of which has never been challenged by any citation of authority by our opponents have been wholly disregarded by this Court and thus this court if it places any reliance upon the question of estoppel has disregarded the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188.

Under the decision last cited it is held there is no general federal common law. This court is bound to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court of Indiana in determining the question of estoppel and we respectfully request that this court now hold that the City cannot be bound to the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913 on the doctrine of estoppel.

We have pointed out in our original brief that no representations as to the validity of this lease were ever made by any authorized officer of the City. This question of fact we do not desire to discuss further because no matter how it may be decided the City cannot be bound in this case by an estoppel.

VI.

This Court erred in holding that the 99 years lease between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas is enforceable against the City for these additional reasons:

1. The Court in its opinion said:

> "The power to execute this 99 years lease was authorized by the Commission in 1913."

The Court refers to the Public Service Commission of Indiana which was created by the Shively-Spencer Act. Thus, the Court apparently holds that the Shively-Spencer Act gave the Public Service Commission the power to abrogate the contract between the City and Citizens Gas as expressed in the trust instruments including the corporate charter of Citizens Gas.

Citizens Gas charter was neither legally abrogated nor legally altered by the enactment of the Shively-Spencer Act. As was said by this Court in the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. 2d, 855, 868:

> "We find nothing in the language of the statute (Chapter 76, Acts 1913) or in the decisions of Wisconsin prior to its enactment which would indicate an intention on the part of the Legislature that a public utility, by surrendering its franchise, might thereby destroy vested property rights which it had voluntarily created, and release itself from obligations respecting those rights which it had voluntarily undertaken before the existence of the franchise and as an inducement to the municipality to make the grant of the privilege." (Our emphasis.)

That the charter of a corporation such as Citizens Gas, cannot be changed by subsequently enacted laws unless there is reserved power, is settled by the case of Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat, 518, 4 L. ed. 629 (1819).

Furthermore, the Public Service Commission had no power to determine the validity of the lease, and therefore could bind no one on that proposition. The Public Service Commission being an instrument of the executive department of the State is neither legislative nor judicial in character, and any order made by the Public Service Commission are wholly administrative.

In Northwestern Telephone Co., 201 Ind. 667, 680, 685, the Indiana Supreme Court pointed out that the Indiana Legislature by the enactment of the Shively-Spencer law, vested the Public Service Commission with authority subject to review by the courts, to supervise or regulate the terms of sale "in so far only as they affect the public" (Our emphasis).

See: Public Service Commission, et al. v. City of La-Porte, 207 Ind. 462, 465;

New York etc. Railroad Co. v. Singleton, et al., 207 Ind. 449, 458.

2. By holding that the City accepted the lease. (Opinion p. 12).

The record shows the exact contrary. At page 330 the record shows that Mr. Thompson representing the City stipulated that:

> "For the City of Indianapolis we will agree the instruments to which Mr. Burns has just referred (among them the lease) were presented to the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana, for recordation at 3:45 P. M. on the 9th day of September, 1935 . . .
> And that they were thereafter properly recorded."

Mr. William G. Sparks, one of the attorneys representing Citizens Gas Company, testified (R. p. 464, 467, 468) that he was advised on August 27, 1935, of the attitude of the City respecting the lease.

The record also shows that the assignments of the properties of Citizens Gas were made by four separate instruments. Respecting one of these instruments, viz: the assignment of the 99 years lease, Mr. William Sparks testified that Mr. Rastenburg (an officer of Citizens Gas Co.) handed it to either Mr. Rabb (of Thompson & Rabb, attorneys for the City) or to Mr. Dithmer (President of the Board of Directors). "They were all four handed either to Mr. Rabb or to Mr. Dithmer, or somebody there representing the City." On re-direct examination Mr. Sparks (R. p. 468) testified that at this same meeting there was delivered to him a rejection of the 99 year lease which had been signed by Mr. Dithmer as President of the Board of Directors for Utilities, along with a certified copy of a resolution of rejection and a resolution for the temporary use and occupancy of the property. He further testified as follows:

> "Q. You knew, when you went to the office of Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson, that the City was going to deliver the rejection to you when you turned over physically this assignment of the lease?
> A. That is right."

3. This Court held that the terms of the trust remained silent on the trustees' powers and that the only applicable language relates to duties.

On page 13 of the opinion the Court states quite to the contrary, as follows:

> "The terms of the trust (the franchise contract and the Articles of Incorporation) refer generally to the duties and powers of the trustee and the rights of the beneficiaries." (Our emphasis.)

The trust instruments were the franchise contract from the City to Citizens Gas and the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas. The franchise provided a method for the obtaining of the objects of the corporation to be formed, and safeguarded the interests of the stockholders of such corporation by providing for the return of their money, together with interest. The duty of conveying to the City all the property of the trust was imposed upon the directors of Citizens Gas Company after the obligations to its stockholders had been discharged. The franchise also provided quite significantly that Citizens Gas Company could create no obligation for the purpose of reimbursing its stockholders which would extend for a longer period than ten years beyond the term of the franchise. The term of the franchise was twenty-five years.

The trust instruments contained detailed instructions respecting the retirement of the stock; the order in which the earnings should be used; the payment of the bonds; the time within which the City was to exercise its right to take over. Great space was given to these details, yet there is not one word granting power for the execution of a 99-year lease. As this Court said at page 17:

> "The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. In truth the terms of the trust remained silent on the subject of trustees' powers."

Since the trust instruments were the franchise contract from the City of Indianapolis which was a grant of right for the use of the streets and alleys for the laying of gas mains, and the corporate charter of Citizens Gas carrying out the directions of the franchise contract respecting rights, powers and duties, the rule announced in Piedmont Power & Light Co. v. Town of Graham, et al., 253 U. S. 193, 64 L. ed. 855, is controlling. There it was said that:

> "Grants of rights and privileges by a state or municipality are strictly construed and whatever is not unequivocably granted—is withheld,—nothing passes by implication."

Thus if the terms of the trust (the franchise corporation and Articles of Incorporation) remain silent on the trustees' powers, the power to make the lease cannot be imp .

4. That the trustee had the power to purchase in fee simple the Indianapolis Gas property and that the attack of the City was as to the mode of acquisition. (Opinion p. 18.)

The initial basis upon which the Court founds this statement is that the City's counsel did not argue that the trustee lacked the power to lease the property of its rival because such action might contravene public policy. This statement entirely overlooks the City's position. The City in Cause No. 7143, at pp. 111, 112, and 113 of its brief made the point that the lease in question was executed in violation of the Indiana statutes, viz: Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly, 1905. The second basis upon which the Court founds this statement is that:

> "Yet we know that the trustee had the power to acquire adequate gas plant equipment. And it is ad> mitted that the freehold estate in the property purchased in 1907 (the Consumers Gas Trust Co. mains) became part of the trust res. The trustee had the power to purchase in fee simple and consequently the freehold estate became trust property. From what has just been said certain conclusions follow as a matter of logic: (1) The trustee had the power to purchase the Indianapolis Gas property in 1907 or in 1913; and (2) the trustee had the power to lease this property in 1907 and 1913 for a term of years not exceeding the initial trusteeship." (Opinion p. 18.)

What the Court has definitely overlooked in connection with the lease by Citizens Gas of the property of Indianapolis Gas is the historical background of this public charitable trust. Citizens Gas as Trustee of the Trust was organized to foster and maintain competition against Indianapolis Gas. The citizens of Indianapolis who contributed to that enterprise were interested not in a combination and consolidation of the two properties, but in competition between them.

We call attention to subdivision 7 of the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas (R. p. 97) which reads as follows:

> "Any member of the Board of Trustees may be removed by the Marion Circuit Court upon the showing that said Trustee is an employe or holder of any of the securities or common stock of any other company organized for the purpose of manufacturing or delivering gas to consumers residing in, or in the vicinity of the City of Indianapolis, or for any corrupt practice or any misconduct which said court may deem detrimental to the interests of said Company. * * * *"

If the settlors of the public charitable trust, the res of which was the property belonging to the Consumers Gas Trust Company regarded employment of the trustee by Indianapolis Gas or ownership of its securities as sufficient reason for the removal of the Trustee it is difficult for us to understand why they should have contemplated an implied power to merge the two properties by means of a lease.

The Acts of 1905 gave to the Common Council the power to license and regulate the supply, distribution, and consumption of artificial gas and to designate streets and alleys through which pipes might be laid (p. 252).

Power was also given to the Board of Public Works of the City to purchase gas works "provided, that none of the powers conferred by this paragraph shall be exercised except pursuant to an ordinance specifically directing the same, and after an election had in relation thereto * * *"

Also power was given such Board to authorize gas companies to use the streets and alleys and to prescribe the terms and conditions of such use. (Pp. 279, 280.)

Power was given the City to enter into a contract for the furnishing of heat and light provided such contract was for a term not longer than twenty-five years (p. 396).

Citizens Gas under such circumstances had no right to acquire a competing utility without the consent of proper municipal authority. The undisputed evidence in this case shows that no action was ever taken by the Board of Public Works or the Common Council of the City authorizing the lease of this property.

It is one thing for an existing utility to extend or enlarge its own plant by construction and it is an entirely different proposition for it to purchase or acquire the plant of a competing company.

VII.

The Court erred in holding that the lease of September 30, 1913, executed by Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was enforceable against the City because:

1. When that lease was originally executed the City was not a party to it; it did not sign or execute it; it is not named as a party obligated; it is not an assignee of the lease, an assignment having been tendered and rejected; no ordinance was ever adopted by the Common Council nor any resolution ever adopted by the Board of Public Works of the City authorizing the execution of the lease, ratifying it or agreeing to be bound by its terms; no action was ever taken by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities accepting the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms.

It has never been contended by Chase that the lease was originally binding on the City. Indeed it could not be known until the property was taken over, which was not until September 9, 1935, whether under any theory of the case the City would be bound by the terms of the lease.

The whole theory of Chase's presentation of this case in its complaint, the amendments thereto, its evidence and its briefs heretofore filed in this Court is that the City became bound to the terms of the lease by estoppel, res adjudicata, and the operation of the property. As has already been pointed out there could have been no estoppel. The decisions relied on by Chase could not have operated as res adjudicata, and the operation of the property was pursuant to an agreement between Indianapolis Gas and the City which expressly reserved the rights of all parties.

VIII.

This Court erred in not holding the lease invalid because violative of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1905. Section 85 pro. les:

> "No executive department, officer or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of such department; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations are declared to be absolutely void: Provided, That the board of public works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys and other public places or for suppiy ing the City with gas, water, steam, power, heat or electricity, and for the collection, removal and disposal of garbage, ashes or refuse on such terms and for such times, not exceeding the term fixed by section 254 (Sec. 48-7302) of this act, as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such city and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect, and, if so approved, shall immediately become effective: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any such department from issuing any bond or other obligation expressly authorized by this act and provided for by ordinance."

Section 254 provides:

"Any city or town may enter into contract with any person, corporation or association to furnish such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat or light, or drainage or sewerage facilities, or to build or extend railroads, interurban or street-car lines, telegraph or telephone lines, drainage or sewerage system, or other public conveniences, into or through such city or town; and may provide in such contract the terms and conditions on which such water, motive power, heat, light, drainage, sewerage, railroad, interurban, street-car, telegraph or telephone service, or other uses and accommodations of such and other public conveniences may be furnished by such person, corporation or association to such city or town, and to its inhabitants; Provided, That no such contract shall be entered into by any such city or town for furnishing such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, drainage, sewerage, heat or light, upon or along the streets of such city or town for a term longer than twenty-five (25) years: And, provided further, That before any such contract shall be made by any city of the first, second, third, or fourth class such contract shall be first agreed to by the board of public works of such city, after which agreement, such board shall cause a proper ordinance approving and confirming such contract to be presented for adoption by the common council of such city."

The 99-year lease was clearly within the terms of the above quoted statutes because such lease was a contract for supplying the City and its inhabitants with gas, heat and light for a period of years. The lease was not authorized or approved by the Board of Public Works or by an ordinance of the Common Council. (III R. 982, 983.) It was never approved by the Department of Utilities nor ratified by it. (III R. p. 984, 985.)

The decision of this court that the lease is enforceable against the City and that a coercive judgment should be rendered against the City for the unpaid interest with interest thereon is susceptible of construction that the rentals reserved in the lease may be collected from the City out of revenues raised by taxation. This question is of no practical importance so far as the past due rentals are concerned.[1] But this is not true as to future rentals.

The parties themselves did not intend that the reserved rentals should be collected through taxation. The lease provided in part the parties would each look "for the carrying out of the obligations of this lease solely to the corporate assets and franchises of the other . . ." (R. p. 78.)

If the rentals can be collected from the City out of revenues raised by taxation for approximately seventy-five years in the future, then even if the property should be destroyed by competition such rental payments would continue. Surely such a result was not contemplated.

[1] This is true because the amount of the unpaid interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock has been deposited with the Indiana National Bank as escrow agent under the agreement of March 2, 1936. In addition the record in this case shows that the revenues derived from the operation of the total property are more than sufficient to pay the interest on the unpaid coupons. (R. pp. 542, 543.)

IX.

This Court erred in refusing to abide by the rule of the United States Supreme Court laid down in the case of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188.

In the Erie Railroad case it was said:

> "Except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by acts of Congress the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state. And whether the law of the state shall be declared by its legislature in a statute or by its highest court in a decision is not a matter of federal concern. There is no federal general common law."

The questions involved in this case deal with the powers of trustees of a public charitable trust which was formed in accordance with Indiana law. Also involved was the interpretation of a franchise from a city, the articles of incorporation of an Indiana corporation, as well as other instruments. The complaint seeks to impose the burdens of a 99 years lease upon the City on a theory of estoppel and res adjudicata, all of which must of necessity under the Erie Railroad case involve Indiana law. Thus the rule announced in that case is applicable here.

IN CONCLUSION.

The lease in question was executed in 1913 and approved by the Public Service Commission. That Body is purely an administrative one and can exercise no judicial authority. The lease, in our opinion, is burdensome and disadvantageous to the city and will impose upon future generations of gas users in Indianapolis a liability for payment of rentals wholly disproportionate to a fair return on the fair value of the property. This the City has alleged in its counter claim and stands ready to prove.

There are, in our opinion, two courses available in connection with the issue of the burdensome character of the lease:

1. The first would be to remand this case to the District Court with instructions to hear and decide the issue of burdensomeness on both the facts and the law.

2. The second would be to dismiss this appeal on the ground that there is no final appealable judgment.

We stand on the agreement which we made consenting to an order of the District Court reserving the issue of burdensomeness and submit that the first course is the proper one to be pursued.

Summary Statement of Matters Involved

A. Nature of the Actions and Decrees Below.

In earlier litigation, the property owned by Citizens Gas was held to be the corpus of a public charitable trust created for the benefit of the gas users of the City.[1]

Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855.

This is a suit in equity commenced against petitioners, impleaded with Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas by Chase.

Chase, as Trustee (R. 4) under a mortgage to secure bonds executed by Indianapolis Gas (R. 4), sought a decree, the main relief requested being a declaration that a lease for 99 years (R. 5, 6, 21) executed by Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas on September 30, 1913, (R. 5) was binding upon and enforceable against the City, as successor trustee of a public charitable trust (R. 20, 21, 22), as a claimed assignee of the lease (R. 16, 17) and allegedly because of estoppel (R. 18, 19) and res adjudicata. (R. 8, 9, 10, 11.)

Chase also sought to obtain an injunction requiring the City to make the payments and perform the covenants contained in the lease (R. 21, 306); to obtain judgment for unpaid interest and interest on overdue interest on the bonds (R. 21, 301), together with attorneys' fees and expenses (R. 22).

As relief against Indianapolis Gas, Chase asked that the lease be declared a valid obligation and part of the security which it, as trustee, held for the mortgage bonds of Indianapolis Gas; that pending final hearing Indianapolis Gas be enjoined from attempting to impair the lease; that the court declare Chase's rights as trustee are not altered by the temporary agreement (hereafter referred to) between Indianapolis Gas and the City; that the escrowed moneys (hereafter referred to) be declared the property of the bondholders of Indianapolis Gas; and that Chase have interest on overdue interest, its expenses and attorneys' fees (R. 20-22; 259-260).

The District Court entered a decree that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the relief sought by Chase and should be realigned with Chase and that when so realigned there was no diversity of citizenship and Chase's bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, no federal question being involved (R. 271).

The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed with opinions (R. 285-292, 293) reported in 96 F. (2d) 363. The majority opinion held that although Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the essential question as to whether the lease was binding upon the City (R. 288) and although both Chase and Indianapolis Gas were contending that the lease was enforceable against the City, nevertheless there could be no realignment because on other questions tendered by the complaint there were controversies between Chase and Indianapolis Gas (R. 292).

Petitioners' petition for a rehearing was overruled with-

After the case was remanded to the District Court, there was a trial by that court of certain issues on the merits (other issues being reserved for future determination) (R. 321, 322). The District Court made special findings of fact (R. 1160-1190), stated its conclusions of law thereon (R. 1190-1193) and entered a decree that the lease was unenforceable against either City or Citizens Gas (R. 1192, 1193). The District Court entered judgment in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas for past due interest but denied interest on overdue interest (R. 1193). The District Court's memorandum opinion is unreported but appears at pages 1122 to 1159 of the record.

Both Chase and Indianapolis Gas appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed the decree of the District Court so far as it held the lease to be unenforceable against the City and in denying interest on interest against Indianapolis Gas and affirmed the District Court in entering judgment in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas (R. 1281-1306, 1307, 1308).

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that while Citizens Gas as initial trustee of a public charitable trust had no express power to execute a lease for 99 years that it had the implied power to do so, provided the lease was not burdensome in character (R. 1300).

Petitioners, in their answer to the bill, included a counter claim (R. 182-187) in which they directly and specifically put in issue the burdensome character of the lease and alleged that for that reason, among others, Citizens Gas had no right as initial trustee to execute the lease (R. 186).

On January 18, 1939, pursuant to Rule 42(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure the District Judge entered the following order without objection or exception by any party:

"It is ordered that evidence shall be heard upon the issues as to whether the lease dated September 30, 1913, from the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis or any of the property acquired by it from the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935, or against the Indianapolis Gas Company or against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the rental under said lease or for the interest on the First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, against any of said defendants or said property, with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis in its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property, viz: that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust; reserving the right to make such order or decree as may seem just and appropriate to the Court at any stage of this proceeding.

The trial of all other issues in this case is deferred until the further order of the Court with the right reserved to refer any or all issues to a Master." (Our emphasis). (R. 321, 322.)

The District Court, in its memorandum opinion, pointed out that only part of the issues in the case had been presented (R. 1159).

Counsel for Chase stated in resting his case that, "Of course, there are other issues which are to be reserved for later trial." (R. 475.)

In the petitioners' petitions for a rehearing (hereafter more specifically referred to), they made the express point that since the District Court had reserved the issue of the burdensome character of the lease, that it was a denial of due process of law to refuse the petitioners the right to be heard on this reserved issue.

We quote the following portion of petitioners' petition for a rehearing addressed to the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals as modified:

> "1. This Court held that a Trustee of a public charitable trust had no right to make a long term burdensome lease; that it incurred liability to the beneficiaries if it did so and that in addition the beneficiaries were entitled to have such a lease set aside. This Court therefore held that if a showing could be made that the lease was in fact burdensome it could be set aside and yet it has directed a final judgment to be entered against the City which by order of the Court entered without objection or exception by any of the parties was still to have the right to prove the burdensome character of the lease. If every other question raised by this petition for rehearing should be decided adversely to the defendants-appellees we ask that the order of the Court be modified so as to permit the City to have an opportunity to prove the averments of its counterclaim and to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome." (R. 1346.)

> "With no opportunity for a hearing on this reserved issue, the defendants-appellees have been denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and each of them.

> "The right to a hearing extends both to a determination of questions of fact and law by the trial court. The denial of a hearing on either is a denial of due process. The City affirmatively claims the protection of the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them." (R. 1346.)

In the petition for a rehearing it is also stated:

> "The Circuit Court of Appeals held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and over-due interest represented by the coupons together with five per cent interest thereon from maturity to judgment and five per cent interest on the judgment from entry to satisfaction, which judgment was to be enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:
>
> (1) The City as successor trustee and the trust property.
>
> (2) Citizens Gas.
> (3) Indianapolis Gas. (R. 1347, 1348.)"

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the City was bound by estoppel and res adjudicata by the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913, although admittedly the City never executed the lease (R. 80), was not a party to it; was not named as a party obligated (R. 51-80); was not an assignee (an assignment was tendered and rejected (R. 468)) and no municipal authority having the power to do so ever authorized the execution of the lease, ratified it or agreed to be bound by its terms. (R. 982-986.)

The petitioners filed their petition for a rehearing within the time allowed (R. 1280, 1309) which was denied by the Circuit Court of Appeals without opinion (R. 1336); the Circuit Court of Appeals modified its opinion in unimportant particulars (R. 1335). Petitioners then filed a motion for permission to file a petition for rehearing addressed to the opinion as modified (R. 1340, 1341). The motion was granted (R. 1405). The petition was filed (R. 1341) and denied without an opinion (R. 1405).

All questions here presented were urged on the Circuit Court of Appeals.

II

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, C-229 (43 Stat. 938; 28 U.S.C. Sect. 347). The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals on the merits was entered, a petition for rehearing was filed within the time allowed by the rules of said court, to-wit: on June 20, 1940, (R. 1280, 1309) and was denied without opinion on July 19, 1940 (R. 1336). On July 19, 1940 the opinion of the Court was modified. A motion for permission to file a petition for rehearing, addressed to the opinion as modified, was filed on August 7, 1940 (R. 1340, 1341). The motion was granted (R. 1405). The petition for rehearing addressed to the opinion as modified filed (R. 1341) and denied (R. 1405). This petition for certiorari was filed before the expiration of three months from July 19, 1940.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

(a) Indianapolis Gas, as lessor, and Citizens Gas, as lessee, entered into a written contract of lease for a term of 99 years (R. 51-80; 55, 77) or for the longest term for which the parties might lawfully contract (R. 80). The lessee was to use and maintain lessor's utility property and to pay as rental the interest upon the lessor's outstanding mortgage indebtedness, being the bonds whereunder Chase is trustee (R. 69-70), also the sum of $120,000 annually for payment to lessor's stockholders as dividends (subject to increase if the price of gas was decreased) (R. 70), also certain expenses; in default of which payments the lease was terminable (R. 78).

(b) In 1935 all the property of Citizens Gas, except this lease, was transferred to the city (R. 635) in order to perform the terms of the public charitable trust approved in Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 F. (2d) 855 (C. C. A. 7; certiorari denied 283 U. S. 852).

(c) An assignment of the lease was tendered to the City but was rejected by it (R. 468, 202-204).

(d) The City took temporary possession of the property covered by the lease in order to prevent interruption of service to consumers, without prejudice to its rejection of the lease (R. 200) and Indianapolis Gas consented to such temporary possession and operation without waiving any of its rights (R. 17, 204, 205).

(e) The City and Indianapolis Gas then entered into a separate agreement, distinct from the lease, by the terms of which the City was to continue such temporary operation and meanwhile pay into a bank, to be held in escrow, sums equal to the amounts specified in the lease, as compensation for such temporary use of Indianapolis Gas property, until further arrangements could be made, or until the present controversy was finally adjusted or terminated by a decree of court; all without prejudice to the position taken by each party as to the binding effect of the lease on the city (R. 19, 205-208, 257, 261). Payments were accordingly made to and are held by the escrow (R. 258-260, 638).

(f) Chase claimed in its complaint (R. 3-22) that the City was estopped to deny the validity of the 99 year lease by reason of the following:

> (1) Findings and orders of the Indiana Public Service Commission on an intervening petition of one Frank S. Fishback (R. 8, 9, 18).

(2) Sale of Indianapolis Gas bonds by Citizens Gas (R. 11, 12).

(3) "The City of Indianapolis and the residents and inhabitants thereof have had the full benefit and advantage of such operations, and of the profits produced thereby and of the protection thus given to the public charitable purposes to which the property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis were dedicated." (R. 12.)

(4) Sale of revenue bonds and alleged representations made by the City (R. 14, 15).

(5) Claimed assignment by Citizens Gas to the City of the 99 year lease.

(6) The following decisions:

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282 (R. 10, 18);
Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, 46 F. (2d) 855 (R. 13, 18);
Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448 (R. 14, 18).

Chase also claimed that the foregoing decisions were res adjudicata of the question of the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City (R. 8, 10, 13, 14).

IV

The Questions Presented.

Upon the record and the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, three important Federal questions are presented.

First. Whether the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals denies to the City due process of law as guaranteed by (a) the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and (b) the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in this:

The District Court, by an order entered without objection or exception by any party (the relevant parts of which are set out at page 5 of this petition), reserved for future determination the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913 (R. 321, 322). The Circuit Court of Appeals held (R. 1300) that if the lease were in fact burdensome Citizens Gas, as initial trustee, had no authority to execute the same, but held, without any trial in the lower court, that a certain order (non-judicial in character) of the Public Service Commission of Indiana and a judgment of the Supreme Court of Indiana were res adjudicata.[2]

The City was thus denied a hearing in a trial court on the issue of the burdensome character of the lease. The right to such a hearing by the trial court extends both to a determination of the law and the facts.

Second. The Circuit Court of Appeals held for the first time in its opinion of June 6, 1940, that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment enforceable in the following order:

(1) Against the City as Successor Trustee and the trust property.

(2) Against Citizens Gas.

(3) Against Indianapolis Gas.

The evidence shows that from the funds deposited in escrow (R. 638) and the funds arising from the operation of the property (R. 542, 543) the City will be required and is abundantly able to pay the entire judgment and that Indianapolis Gas has thus been insulated from liability.

The result of the decision is that a judgment has been ordered entered which is equally beneficial to Chase and

Indianapolis Gas and which amounts in effect not to judgment against Indianapolis Gas but one in its favor.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is directly in conflict with controlling decisions of this Court to the effect that parties must be realigned in accordance with their relation to the main controversy in the case and the fact that there are dependent controversies in respect of which their interest may be adverse is not sufficient to sustain jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship, viz:

City of Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713.

An examination of the record will show that Chase and Indianapolis Gas are friends attempting to assert hostility only for the purpose of conferring a jurisdiction which would otherwise not exist.

Third. The Circuit Court of Appeals wholly disregarded the applicable Indiana law in four important particulars and thus violated the rule established by this court in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188 as follows:

1. It impliedly held that the City was bound by the ... se by the doctrine of estoppel, although admittedly there was no effort to prove that any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas knew of any of the acts asserted as the basis of such estoppel, much less relied upon the same, and under a long line of Indiana cases the unauthorized act of a City official cannot be made the basis of an estoppel.

2. It applied the doctrine of res adjudicata to a decision of the Public Service Commission, to a case in which the City had been dismissed as a party before final judgment, to a case in which Indianapolis Gas and Chase were not parties and to a case in which Indianapolis Gas, a predecessor trustee of Chase and City were defendants and in which neither of said defendants had tendered any issue against the other, although the City had directed the attention of the Court to the fact that whether the lease was valid or invalid was immaterial.

3. It held a municipal corporation liable (presumably out of revenues raised from taxation) for future payments of more than $45,000,000 under a lease solely because of the implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same although the Indiana law is that all powers granted by a municipal corporation must be strictly construed against the grantee and that nothing passes by implication. Among other things, the holding, in effect, guarantees to the stockholders of Indianapolis Gas 6% interest on their stock for approximately 77 years in the future or until 2013.

4. Sections 85 and 254 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1905 expressly prohibit any such lease for more than 25 years and prohibit its execution without municipal sanction. The Indiana cases hold that any agreement made in violation of these sections is void ab initio and cannot be ratified. The Circuit Court of Appeals held the lease valid for its full term of 99 years, although the lease had no municipal sanction of any kind.

Reasons Relied Upon for Allowance of Writ.

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has decided three Federal questions in a manner in conflict with the applicable decisions of this court, towit:

First. It has denied the City a hearing and trial on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. The City was entitled to a trial in the District Court on all questions of fact and law. Without such hearing the requirements of due process are not satisfied.

Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, 281 U. S. 673, 74 L. ed. 1107.

(a) An attempt by an appellate tribunal to determine the question of res adjudicata does not satisfy the requirements of due process.

(b) The City was entitled to be heard in the trial court on both the questions of law and fact as to whether the order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana approving the lease and the Williams case (206 Ind. 448) were res adjudicata and whether the lease was in fact burdensome. To refuse such a hearing is to deny due process of law.

Ohio Water Works Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 64 L. ed. 908, 914.

Requirements of due process are satisfied only by a hearing in the trial court.

Second. The Circuit Court of Appeals has decided that in determining the existence of federal jurisdiction, where that jurisdiction is wholly dependent on diversity of citizenship, it is not the duty of the court to realign the parties in accordance with their interests in the dominant controversy where more than one controversy or issue is tendered, unless they are also in accord upon all other and minor issues; a decision which conflicts with the ruling of this Court in Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 62 L. ed. 664.

Third. The Circuit Court of Appeals disregarded the rule laid down by this Court in Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, in that:

1. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions set out below on estoppel of a City.

Ross, et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150;

Union School Twp. v. First National Bank, 102 Ind. 464, 476;

Hosford v. Johnson, et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485;

Platter v. Board, 103 Ind. 360, 381.

2. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions on the question of res adjudicata, viz:

Jones v. Vert, et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141;

Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604, 610.

3. It refused to follow the rule of the Indiana decision set out below that a grant made by a municipality is to be taken most strongly against the grantee and nothing is to be taken by implication against the public and enforced a lease against the City where the right to execute such a lease was based solely on implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same.

Indianapolis Cable R. R. Co. v. Citizens Street R. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 390.

And it likewise refused to follow the same rule laid down by this Court in the following cases:

Mitchell v. Dakota Central Telephone Co., 246 U. S. 396, 62 L. ed. 793.

4. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes.

City of Indianapolis v. Wann, Receiver, 144 Ind. 175, 187.

The Indiana cases cited above to propositions 1, 2, 3, and 4 are the law of Indiana. There are no Indiana decisions to the contrary. There was thus an arbitrary refusal to follow the applicable Indiana law, in violation of the rule established by this Court in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188.

Fourth. An important public question is involved, viz: whether a municipal corporation shall have imposed upon it an obligation for 77 years in the future aggregating more than $45,000,000 in amount under a lease without any municipal sanction, where the Court does not limit the payments of the obligation to the revenues arising from the operation of the plant, but presumably imposes the burden on revenues raised by taxation.

WHEREFORE, your petitioners respectfully pray that a writ of certiorari be issued out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit commanding that Court to certify and to send to this Court for its review and determination on a day certain to be named therein a full and complete transcript of the record and all proceedings in the case numbered and entitled on its docket No. 7143, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, etc. v. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., and that the decree of said United States Circuit Court of Appeals in said cause be reversed by this Court, and that petitioners have such other and further relief in the premises as to this Court may seem just.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR A WRIT OR CERTIORARI

I

THE OPINIONS OF THE COURTS BELOW

The District Court neither gave nor filed a written opinion in dismissing the bill of complaint for want of jurisdiction (R. 271).

The majority opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (filed April 8, 1938) reversing the District Court on the jurisdictional question appears at pages 285 to 292 of the record and is reported in 96 F. 2d at pages 363 and following. The dissenting opinion of Judge Treanor appears in the record at page 293 and is reported in 96 F. 2d. at page 368.

Petitioners' petition for Writ of Certiorari was denied 305 U. S. 600, 83 L. ed. 381.

The memorandum opinion of the District Court on the merits, filed September 21, 1939, is unreported, but appears at pages 1122 to 1159 of the record. The decree of the District Court is to be found at pages 1192 and 1193 of the record.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, filed June 6, 1940, appears at pages 1281 to 1306 of the record and is as yet unreported. The opinion was amended on July 19, 1940 (R. 1335).

No opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals was filed in overruling petitioners' petition for a rehearing or in overruling petitioners' second petition for a rehearing addressed to the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals as modified (R. 1335, 1405).

II

JURISDICTION

A statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which it is contended that this court has jurisdiction is set out in the petition for the Writ of Certiorari at page 8.

III

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A full statement of the case having been given in the petition for certiorari for brevity is not here repeated.

IV

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in each of the following particulars:

1. In directing the entry of a judgment against the City, when the City had not had its day in court on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. This was a denial of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the Constitution of the United States.

The requirements of due process are not satisfied unless a party has the right in a trial court to a determination of all issues of fact and law. This requirement has been denied the City.

2. In holding that defendant Indianapolis Gas should not be realigned as a party plaintiff for the reason that Chase and Indianapolis Gas were in accord on the principal controversy, against petitioners, although Chase and Indianapolis Gas (but not the City) were adverse in attitude on other and minor issues.

3. In holding that the attitude of the parties on minor or subsidiary issues prevents their realignment on the major and substantial issue, in order to test the jurisdiction of the court.

4. In refusing to follow the rule announced by this court in Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188 in that the Circuit Court of Appeals refused to follow the controlling Indiana decisions on (a) the questions of estoppel of a municipal corporation, (b) the doctrine of res adjudicata, (c) the question of the denial of all powers granted by a municipal corporation except those expressly granted and (d) the question of the violation of Sections 85 and 254 of the acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1905 prohibiting the execution of any such lease as that here involved for a longer period than 25 years and even for such a period without proper municipal sanction.

ARGUMENT

A. Complete jurisdiction in the Supreme Court of the United States is shown by the record since this is a civil case in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. The petitioners were parties to such case. (R. 1280) Judicial Code Section 240 (a), amended February 13, 1925. C. 229, 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. A. 347.

B. The Circuit Court of Appeals has denied the City a hearing and trial on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913, a trial to which the City was entitled in the District Court on all questions of fact and law. Without this hearing the requirements of due process of law are not satisfied.

The question of the burdensomeness of the lease was put in issue by the counter-claim of the City (R. 186).

On January 18, 1939, the District Court without objection or exception by any party, entered an order reserving the issue of the burdensome character of the lease for future trial (R. 321, 322). (The relevant portions of the order are set out on page 5 of the petition for writ of certiorari.)

On March 2, 1939, a trial was commenced (R. 323) on the issues which by the order of January 18, 1939 (R. 321) were to be tried. The District Court on September 21, 1939, filed its written memorandum (R. 1122).

The next to the concluding paragraph of the memorandum recited that:

> "Under the issues presented at this time for determination, the plaintiff is entitled to no money judgment against the City." (R. 1159.)

The Court's Conclusion of law No. 10 recited:

> "That the plaintiff should take nothing in this action as against the defendant, City of Indianapolis, under the issues presented at this time for determination." (R. 1192.)

An appeal was taken to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (R. 1194) and on June 6, 1940, the Circuit Court rendered an opinion (R. 1281-1306) which was subsequently modified on July 19, 1940. (R. 1335.)

Among other things, the Circuit Court decided that:

> "In making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who in addition may have such a lease set aside. This record discloses that the trustee was justified in selecting the mode of acquisition which it did. When the prudence point was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court, that court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its other terms. Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460." (R. 1300.)

The same Court also decided that:

> "Our conclusions in this case follow: (1) the 99 years lease is valid; (2) the assignment of the lease did not relieve Citizens Gas from its obligations as lessee; (3) the indemnity contract is effective; (4) the lease binds the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (5) the leasehold interest is part of the trust res; (6) the City has accepted the trust res; (7) Chase has a right to interest;

> (8) Chase has a right to interest on interest; and (9) Chase is entitled to interest at the rate of 5%." (R. 1306.)

It is clear that the issue of burdensomeness on which the City has had no opportunity to be heard, either on the questions of fact or law, and which was expressly reserved by the trial court (R. 321), was decided against the City by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The petitioners pleaded in their answer specifically the reasons why the several decisions relied upon by plaintiffs were not res adjudicata. (R. 141-187, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 159, 160, 172, 173.) Whether the cases relied upon by plaintiff were res adjudicata of the burdensomeness of the lease, was a mixed question of law and fact, and petitioners were entitled to a trial and findings by the Court (Rule 52, Rules of Civil Procedure for the District Courts of the United States) upon which the District Court's decision could be reviewed. No hearing was had on the issue of burdensomeness and no findings were made, and for the reason, as pointed out, that the issue was expressly reserved for future trial.

Due process of law means notice and an opportunity to be heard. In the instant case the requirements of due process are satisfied only by a hearing in the trial court.

In Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 221, it was said:

> "Can it be doubted that due process of law signifies a right to be heard in one's defense? If the legislative department of the government were to enact a statute conferring the right to condemn the citizen without any opportunity whatever of being heard, would it be pretended that such an > enactment would not be violative of the Constitution? If this be true, as it undoubtedly is, how can it be said that the judicial department, the source and fountain of justice itself, has yet the authority to render lawful that which if done under express legislative sanction would be violative of the Constitution. If such power obtains, then the judicial department of the government sitting to uphold and enforce the Constitution is the only one possessing a power to disregard it. If such authority exists then in consequence of their establishment, to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice, courts possess the right to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent."

In Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Com., 301 U. S. 292, 304-306, 81 L. ed. 1093, 1102, it was said:

> "The right to such a hearing is one of 'the rudiments of fair play' * * * assured to every litigant by the Fourteenth Amendment as a minimal requirement. * * * There can be no compromise on the footing of convenience or expediency, or because of a natural desire to be rid of harassing delay, when that minimal requirement has been neglected or ignored."

In Ohio Water Works v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 289, 64 L. ed. 908, 914, this Court had before it the complaint of the Water Company that it was denied the right to a hearing.

Mr. Justice McReynolds, speaking for the Court, said that:

> "In all such cases, if the owner claims confiscation of his property will result, the state must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts; otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due process clause, 14th Amendment * * *.

> Plaintiff in error has not had proper opportunity for an adequate judicial hearing as to confiscation; and unless such an opportunity is now available, and can be definitely indicated by the court below in the exercise of its power finally to construe laws of the state * * * the challenged order is invalid." (Our emphasis.)

The prohibitions of the 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution are measured by the settled scope of the 14th Amendment. This Court has said:

> "that the legal import of the phrase 'due process of law' is the same in both amendments."
>
> French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 329, 45 L. ed. 879, 884.

To hold that the 99 year lease is valid and binding on the City as trustee, and on the trust property, and thereby to impose upon the City by the Court's decision a liability of $45,000,000, and to hold that the lease is enforceable against the City as successor trustee and the trust property, when the question of the burdensome character of such lease was expressly reserved without objection or exception by any party (R. 321), and the City has had no opportunity to be heard, either on the law or on the facts of this issue, is a denial of due process of law which is guaranteed to all by the 5th Amendment, and by the 14th Amendment.

The denial of due process in this case is a question of gravity and importance. If such power exists in the Circuit Court of Appeals, then the judicial department of the Government which sits to uphold and enforce the Constitution, is the only department possessing the power to deny a hearing to litigants. If such authority exists in the Courts, then in consequence of their establishment to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice, courts possess the right to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent. Judicial proceedings cannot be valid unless they proceed upon inquiry and render judgment only after trial. In the instant case there was no inquiry; there was no trial, on the reserved issue of burdensomeness.

An appeal to an appellate tribunal is a matter of grace.

A hearing in the trial court is a matter of right, the denial of which is prohibited by the 5th and 14th Amendments.

The hearing guaranteed by the due process clauses cannot be in an appellate tribunal.

It is a fundamental rule that in judicial proceedings affecting rights there shall be given an opportunity to be heard before any judgment, decree, order or demand shall be given and established.

Kuntz v. Sumption, Treasu. r, 117 Ind. 1, 5.

C. The Circuit Court of Appeals has decided that in determining the existence of Federal jurisdiction where dependent upon diversity of citizenship, parties need not be realigned in accordance with their interests in the dominant controversy, and before such realignment can occur, must be in accord upon all other and minor issues.

The Court held that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the controversy. (R. 288.) It then said:

> "The rule seems to be that before such realignment may be required, the parties must be in substantial accord upon all issues presented * * *. It is not sufficient that they merely be in accord upon one issue or some of the issues." (R. 291.)
> (Chase National Bank, etc., et al., v. Citizens Gas, et al., 96 F. 2d. 363, 366, 367; certiorari denied: 305 U. S. 600, 83 L. ed. 381.)

This is a Federal question decided in a way probably in conflict with prior decisions of this Court, viz: Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 62 L. ed. 644; City of Dawson, etc. v. Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713.

For the first time the Circuit Court of Appeals in its opinion of June 6, 1940, as modified, held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment enforceable in the following order:

1. Against the City as successor trustee and the trust property; 2. Against Citizens Gas; 3. Against Indianapolis Gas.

The evidence shows that as of December 31, 1938, the City had deposited with an escrow pursuant to an agreement (R. 205-207) the sum of $1,217,875 derived from the proceeds of the City's operation of the property transferred to it by Citizens Gas, and the property of the Indianapolis Gas covered by the lease with Citizens Gas (R. 638). Each month subsequent to December 31st amounts have been accrued in the escrowed fund. (R. 473, 474). From the fund in escrow and from the funds arising from the operation of the property (R. 542, 543), the City will be required to and is abundantly able to pay the entire judgment and Indianapolis Gas will be wholly insulated from any liability.

The result of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is that a judgment has been ordered entered which is equally beneficial to Chase and to Indianapolis Gas, and which amounts in substance not to a judgment against Indianapolis Gas but one in its favor.

The actual position taken on the record by Chase and Indianapolis Gas is that Chase asserts that the lease is a binding obligation against the City (R. 3, 20, 21). Indianapolis Gas also asserts the lease is binding upon the City. (R. 137, 138, 215, 219.)

The attitude of the respective parties toward the actual and substantial controversy should determine whether realignment shall take place for the purpose of testing the jurisdiction of the Court as the Federal Court; irrespective of the attitude of the parties towards subsidiary or different issues.

In Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 204, this Court said that:

> "It will be apparent that the Court below erred in holding, as it did, that the defendant Cora D. Spencer, should be treated as one of the plaintiffs and aligned with them for the purpose of determining the question of diversity of citizenship. Provided plaintiffs attained their first three objects, her interest would be the same as theirs with respect to the prayer for partition; but before this result could be reached, plaintiffs must prevail as to their third object, and with respect to this her interest was altogether adverse to theirs. Therefore she was properly made a party defendant, that being her attitude towards the actual and substantial controversy." (Our emphasis.)

In the Sutton case the attitude of the parties toward the actual and substantial controversy was determinative as to whether or not there should be a realignment. Had the Circuit Court of Appeals followed that rule in the instant case, it would have held that both plaintiff Chase and defendant Indianapolis Gas in their attitudes towards the actual and substantial controversy were identical, and would have ordered Indianapolis Gas realigned with Chase as a plaintiff, thus destroying diversity of citizenship, the sole basis upon which jurisdiction was predicated. (R. 3.)

D. The Circuit Court of Appeals disregarded the rule laid down by this Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188:

> 1. In refusing to follow the Indiana decisions, of which counsel have found none to the contrary, that hold:
>
> First, that the doctrine of estoppel has no application where the other party was not influenced by the acts pleaded as an estoppel. Ross et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150; Hosford v. Johnson et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485.
>
> There is no proof in the record that any present bondholder of Indianapolis gas bonds knew of, relied on or was influenced by any acts of the City. (R. 340, 344, 355, 357, 361, 362, 397, 568, 584-589.)
> Second, an estoppel against a municipal corporation cannot be founded upon acts done by municipal officers in excess of their authority. The record shows that no corporate body possessed of the requisite power ever authorized the execution of the lease or ratification of it by the City. (R. 982, 983, 984, 985-986.)

2. In refusing to follow the Indiana decisions on the question of res adjudicata which announce the rule to be that no party may invoke the doctrine of former adjudication unless he has tendered to the party against whom the doctrine is invoked "an issue to which the latter could have demurred or pleaded." Maple et al. v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, 58; Jones v. Vert, et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141; Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604, 610. (Compare Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295, 84 L. ed. 160, 165.)

3. In refusing to follow the Indiana rule laid down in Indianapolis Cable R. R. Co. v. Citizens Street R. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 390, which is to the effect that a grant of right or privilege by a municipality is strictly construed against the grantee, and that whatever is not unequivocably granted is withheld—nothing passes by implication. In Piedmont Power & Light Co. v. Town of Graham et al. 253 U. S. 193, 194, 195 this court said:

"Grants of rights and privileges by a state or municipality are strictly construed and whatever is not unequivocably granted is withheld.—nothing posses by implication." (Compare Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 22, 50 L. ed. 355; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 50 L. ed. 801; Mitchell v. Dakota Central Telephone Co. 246 U. S. 396, 62 L. ed. 793.)

The Court recognized in its opinion that the grant to the trustee gave no express power, for it said:

> "The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property." (R. 1297.)

The lease has thus been held enforceable solely because of implied power of the initial trustee.

4. In refusing to follow the Indiana decisions which hold that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes. Gas Light & etc. Co. v. City of New Albany, 156 Ind. 406, 415; City of Indianapolis v. Wann, Receiver, 144 Ind. 175, 187.

Two Indiana statutes prohibit the making of the lease in question by the City. (Text of these two statutes is set out in the appendix.)

The Indiana decisions set out above under 1, 2, 3 and 4 are the law of Indiana. There are none to the contrary. In refusing to abide by those decisions the Circuit Court of Appeals arbitrarily refused to follow the applicable Indiana law in violation of the rules established by this Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64.

E. An important public question is here involved. It is whether a municipal corporation shall have imposed upon it an obligation for 77 years in the future aggregating more than $45,000,000 in amount, under a lease for which there was no municipal sanction, where the Court does not limit the payments of the obligation to the revenues arising from the operation of the plant, but presumably imposes the burden on revenues raised by taxation.

Wherefore, petitioners pray that the writ be granted.

APPENDIX

> "No executive department, officer or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of such department; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations are declared to be absolutely void: Provided, That the board of public works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys and other public places or for supplying the city with gas, water, steam, power, heat or electricity, and for the collection, removal and disposal of garbage, ashes or refuse on such terms and for such times, not exceeding the term fixed by section 254 (Sec. 48-7302, Burns') of this act, as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such city and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect, and, if so approved, shall immediately become effective: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any such department from issuing any bond or other obligation expressly authorized by this act and provided for by ordinance."

> "Any city or town may enter into contract with any person, corporation or association to furnish such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat or light, or drainage or sewerage facilities, or to build or extend railroads, interurban or street-car lines, telegraph or telephone lines, drainage or sewerage system, or other public conveniences, into or through such city or town; and may provide in such contract the terms and conditions on which such water, motive power, heat, light, drainage, sewerage, railroad, interurban, street-car, telegraph or telephone service, or other uses and accommodations of such and other public conveniences may be furnished by such person, corporation or association to such city or town, and to its inhabitants; Provided, That no such contract shall be entered into by any such city or town for furnishing such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, drainage, sewerage, heat or light, upon or along the streets of such city or town for a term longer than twenty-five (25) years: And, provided further. That before any such contract shall be made by any city of the first, second, third, or fourth class such contract shall be first agreed to by the board of public works of such city, after which agreement, such board shall cause a proper ordinance approving and confirming such contract to be presented for adoption by the common council of such city."

Summary Statement of Matters Involved

A. Nature of the Actions and Decrees Below.

In earlier litigation, the property owned by Citizens Gas was held to be the corpus of a public charitable trust created for the benefit of the gas users of the City.[1]

Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855.

This is a suit in equity commenced against petitioners, impleaded with Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas by Chase.

Chase, as Trustee (R. 4) under a mortgage to secure bonds executed by Indianapolis Gas (R. 4), sought a decree, the main relief requested being a declaration that a lease for 99 years (R. 5, 6, 21) executed by Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas on September 30, 1913, (R. 5) was binding upon and enforceable against the City, as successor trustee of a public charitable trust (R. 20, 21, 22), as a claimed assignee of the lease (R. 16, 17) and allegedly because of estoppel (R. 18, 19) and res adjudicata. (R. 8, 9, 10, 11.)

Chase also sought to obtain an injunction requiring the City to make the payments and perform the covenants contained in the lease (R. 21, 306); to obtain judgment for unpaid interest and interest on overdue interest on the bonds (R. 21, 301), together with attorneys' fees and expenses (R. 22).

As relief against Indianapolis Gas, Chase asked that the lease be declared a valid obligation and part of the security which it, as trustee, held for the mortgage bonds of Indianapolis Gas; that pending final hearing Indianapolis Gas be enjoined from attempting to impair the lease; that the court declare Chase's rights as trustee are not altered by the temporary agreement (hereafter referred to) between Indianapolis Gas and the City; that the escrowed moneys (hereafter referred to) be declared the property of the bondholders of Indianapolis Gas; and that Chase have interest on overdue interest, its expenses and attorneys' fees (R. 20-22; 259-260).

The District Court entered a decree that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the relief sought by Chase and should be realigned with Chase and that when so realigned there was no diversity of citizenship and Chase's bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, no federal question being involved (R. 271).

The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed with opinions (R. 285-292, 293) reported in 96 F (2d) 363. The majority opinion held that although Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the essential question as to whether the lease was binding upon the City (R. 288) and although both Chase and Indianapolis Gas were contending that the lease was enforceable against the City, nevertheless there could be no realignment because on other questions tendered by the complaint there were controversies between Chase and Indianapolis Gas (R. 292).

After the case was remanded to the District Court, there was a trial by that court of certain issues on the merits (other issues being reserved for future determination) (R. 321, 322). The District Court made special findings of fact (R. 1160-1190), stated its conclusions of law thereon (R. 1190-1193) and entered a decree that the lease was unenforceable against either City or Citizens Gas (R. 1192, 1193). The District Court entered judgment in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas for past due interest but denied interest on overdue interest (R. 1193). The District Court's memorandum opinion is unreported but appears at pages 1122 to 1159 of the record.

Both Chase and Indianapolis Gas appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed the decree of the District Court so far as it held the lease to be unenforceable against the City and in denying interest on interest against Indianapolis Gas and affirmed the District Court in entering judgment for past due interest in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas (R. 1281-1306, 1307, 1308).

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that while Citizens Gas as initial trustee of a public charitable trust had no express power to execute a lease for 99 years that it had the implied power to do so, provided the lease was not burdensome in character (R. 1300).

Petitioners, in their answer to the bill, included a counter claim (R. 182-187) in which they directly and specifically put in issue the burdensome character of the lease and alleged that for that reason, among others, Citizens Gas had no right as initial trustee to execute the lease (R. 186).

On January 18, 1939, pursuant to Rule 42(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure the District Judge entered the

"It is ordered that evidence shall be heard upon the issues as to whether the lease dated September 30, 1913, from the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis or any of the property acquired by it from the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935, or against the Indianapolis Gas Company or against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the rental under said lease or for the interest on the First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, against any of said defendants or said property, with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis in its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property, viz: that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust; reserving the right to make such order or decree as may seem just and appropriate to the Court at any stage of this proceeding.

The trial of all other issues in this case is deferred until the further order of the Court with the right reserved to refer any or all issues to a Master." (Our emphasis). (R. 321, 322.)

The District Court, in its memorandum opinion, pointed out that only part of the issues in the case had been presented (R. 1159).

Counsel for Chase stated in resting his case that, "Of course, there are other issues which are to be reserved for later trial." (R. 475.)

In the petitioners' petitions for a rehearing (hereafter more specifically referred to), they made the express point that since the District Court had reserved the issue of the burdensome character of the lease, that it was a denial of due process of law to refuse the petitioners the right to be heard on this reserved issue.

We quote the following portion of petitioners' petition for a rehearing addressed to the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals as modified:

> "1. This Court held that a Trustee of a public charitable trust had no right to make a long term burdensome lease; that it incurred liability to the beneficiaries if it did so and that in addition the beneficiaries were entitled to have such a lease set aside. This Court therefore held that if a showing could be made that the lease was in fact burdensome it could be set aside and yet it has directed a final judgment to be entered against the City which by order of the Court entered without objection or exception by any of the parties was still to have the right to prove the burdensome character of the lease. If every other question raised by this petition for rehearing should be decided adversely to the defendants-appellees we ask that the order of the Court be modified so as to permit the City to have an opportunity to prove the averments of its counterclaim and to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome." (R. 1346.)
> "With no opportunity for a hearing on this reserved issue, the defendants-appellees have been denied due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and each of them.
> "The right to a hearing extends both to a determination of questions of fact and law by the trial court. The denial of a hearing on either is a denial of due process. The City affirmatively claims

the protection of the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them." (R. 1346.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment for the unpaid and overdue interest represented by the coupons together with five per cent interest thereon from maturity to judgment and five per cent interest on the judgment from entry to satisfaction, which judgment was to be enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

(1) The City as successor trustee and the trust property.

(2) Citizens Gas.

(3) Indianapolis Gas. (R. 1306, 1308.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the City was bound by estoppel and res adjudicata by the terms of the lease of September 30, 1913, although admittedly the City never executed the lease (R. 80), was not a party to it; was not named as a party obligated (R. 51-80); was not an assignee (an assignment was tendered and rejected (R. 468)) and no municipal authority having the power to do so ever authorized the execution of the lease, ratified it or agreed to be bound by its terms. (R. 982-986.)

The petitioners filed their petition for a rehearing within the time allowed (R. 1280, 1309) which was denied by the Circuit Court of Appeals without opinion (R. 1336); the Circuit Court of Appeals modified its opinion in unimportant particulars (R. 1335). Petitioners then filed a motion for permission to file a petition for rehearing addressed to the opinion as modified (R. 1340, 1341). The motion was granted (R. 1405). The petition was filed (R. 1341) and denied without an opinion (R. 1405).

All questions here presented were urged on the Circuit Court of Appeals.

II

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, C-229 (43 Stat. 938; 28 U.S.C. Sect. 347). The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals on the merits was entered, a petition for rehearing was filed within the time allowed by the rules of said court, to-wit: on June 20, 1940, (R. 1280, 1309) and was denied without opinion on July 19, 1940 (R. 1336). On July 19, 1940 the opinion of the Court was modified. A motion for permission to file a petition for rehearing, addressed to the opinion as modified, was filed on August 7, 1940 (R. 1340, 1341). The motion was granted (R. 1405). The petition for rehearing addressed to the opinion as modified filed (R. 1341) and denied (R. 1405). This petition for certiorari was filed before the expiration of three months from July 19, 1940.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

(a) Indianapolis Gas, as lessor, and Citizens Gas, as lessee, entered into a written contract of lease for a term of 99 years (R. 51-80; 55, 77) or for the longest term for which the parties might lawfully contract (R. 80). The lessee was to use and maintain lessor's utility property and to pay as rental the interest upon the lessor's outstanding mortgage indebtedness, being the bonds whereunder Chase is trustee (R. 69-79), also the sum of $120,000 annually for payment to lessor's stockholders as dividends (subject to increase if the price of gas was decreased) (R. 70), also certain expenses; in default of which payments the lease was terminable (R. 78).

(b) In 1935 all the property of Citizens Gas, except this lease, was transferred to the city (R. 635) in order to perform the terms of the public charitable trust approved in Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 F. (2d) 855 (C. C. A. 7; certiorari denied 283 U. S. 852).

(c) An assignment of the lease was tendered to the City but was rejected by it (R. 468, 202-204).

(d) The City took temporary possession of the property covered by the lease in order to prevent interruption of service to consumers, without prejudice to its rejection of the lease (R. 200) and Indianapolis Gas consented to such temporary possession and operation without waiving any of its rights (R. 17, 204, 205).

(e) The City and Indianapolis Gas then entered into a separate agreement, distinct from the lease, by the terms of which the City was to continue such temporary operation and meanwhile pay into a bank, to be held in escrow, sums equal to the amounts specified in the lease, as compensation for such temporary use of Indianapolis Gas property, until further arrangements could be made, or until the present controversy was finally adjusted or terminated by a decree of court; all without prejudice to the position taken by each party as to the binding effect of the lease on the city (R. 19, 205-208, 257, 261). Payments were accordingly made to and are held by the escrow (R. 258-260, 638).

(f) Chase claimed in its complaint (R. 3-22) that the City was estopped to deny the validity of the 99 year lease by reason of the following:

> (1) Findings and orders of the Indiana Public Service Commission on an intervening petition of one Frank S. Fishback (R. 8, 9, 18).

(2) Sale of Indianapolis Gas bonds by Citizens Gas (R. 11, 12).

(3) "The City of Indianapolis and the residents and inhabitants thereof have had the full benefit and advantage of such operations, and of the profits produced thereby and of the protection thus given to the public charitable purposes to which the property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis were dedicated." (R. 12.)

(4) Sale of revenue bonds and alleged representations made by the City (R. 14, 15).

(5) Claimed assignment by Citizens Gas to the City of the 99 year lease.

(6) The following decisions:

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282 (R. 10, 18);
Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, 46 F. (2d) 855 (R. 13, 18);
Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448 (R. 14, 18).

Chase also claimed that the foregoing decisions were res adjudicata of the question of the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City (R. 8, 10, 13, 14).

Interest on overdue interest was asked by Chase.

IV

The Questions Presented.

Upon the record and the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, three important Federal questions are presented.

First. Whether the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals denies to the City due process of law as guaranteed by (a) the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and (b) the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in this:

The District Court, by an order entered without objection or exception by any party (the relevant parts of which are set out at page 5 of this petition), reserved for future determination the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913 (R. 321, 322). The Circuit Court of Appeals held (R. 1300) that if the lease were in fact burdensome Citizens Gas, as initial trustee, had no authority to execute the same, but held, without any trial in the lower court, that a certain order (non-judicial in character) of the Public Service Commission of Indiana and a judgment of the Supreme Court of Indiana were res adjudicata.[2]

The City was thus denied a hearing in a trial court on the issue of the burdensome character of the lease. The right to such a hearing by the trial court extends both to a determination of the law and the facts.

Second. The Circuit Court of Appeals held for the first time in its opinion of June 6, 1940, that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment enforceable in the following order:

(1) Against the City as Successor Trustee and the trust property.

(2) Against Citizens Gas.

(3) Against Indianapolis Gas. (R. 1308.)

The evidence shows that from the funds deposited in escrow (R. 638) and the funds arising from the operation of the property (R. 542, 543) the City will be required and is abundantly able to pay the entire judgment and that Indianapolis Gas has thus been insulated from liability.

The result of the decision is that a judgment has been ordered entered which is equally beneficial to Chase and

[2] Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448.

Indianapolis Gas and which amounts in effect not to judgment against Indianapolis Gas but one in its favor.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is directly in conflict with controlling decisions of this Court to the effect that parties must be realigned in accordance with their relation to the main controversy in the case and the fact that there are dependent controversies in respect of which their interest may be adverse is not sufficient to sustain jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship, viz:

City of Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 49 L. ed. 713.

An examination of the record will show that Chase and Indianapolis Gas are friends attempting to assert hostility only for the purpose of conferring a jurisdiction which would otherwise not exist.

Third. The Circuit Court of Appeals wholly disregarded the applicable Indiana law in four important particulars and thus violated the rule established by this court in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188 as follows:

1. It impliedly held that the City was bound by the lease by the doctrine of estoppel, although admittedly there was no effort to prove that any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas knew of any of the acts asserted as the basis of such estoppel, much less relied upon the same, and under a long line of Indiana cases the unauthorized act of a City official cannot be made the basis of an estoppel.

2. It applied the doctrine of res adjudicata to a decision of the Public Service Commission, to a case in which the City had been dismissed as a party before final judgment, to a case in which Indianapolis Gas and Chase were not parties and to a case in which Indianapolis Gas, a predecessor trustee of Chase and City were defendants and in which neither of said defendants had tendered any issue against the other, although the City had directed the attention of the Court to the fact that whether the lease was valid or invalid was immaterial.

3. It held a municipal corporation liable (presumably out of revenues raised from taxation) for future payments of more than $45,000,000 under a lease solely because of the implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same although the Indiana law is that all powers granted by a municipal corporation must be strictly construed against the grantee and that nothing passes by implication. Among other things, the holding, in effect, guarantees to the stockholders of Indianapolis Gas 6% interest on their stock for approximately 77 years in the future or until 2013.

It also ordered entered against the City, as first in order of liability, a coercive judgment for interest on overdue interest.

4. Sections 85 and 254 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1905 expressly prohibit any such lease for more than 25 years and prohibit its execution without municipal sanction. The Indiana cases hold that any agreement made in violation of these sections is void ab initio and cannot be ratified. The Circuit Court of Appeals held the lease valid for its full term of 99 years, although the lease had no municipal sanction of any kind.

B

Reasons Relied Upon for Allowance of Writ.

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has decided three Federal questions in a manner in conflict with the applicable decisions of this court, towit:

First. It has denied the City a hearing and trial on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. The City was entitled to a trial in the District Court on all questions of fact and law. Without such hearing the requirements of due process are not satisfied.

> Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, 281 U. S. 673, 74 L. ed. 1107.

(a) An attempt by an appellate tribunal to determine the question of res adjudicata does not satisfy the requirements of due process.

(b) The City was entitled to be heard in the trial court on both the questions of law and fact as to whether the order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana approving the lease and the Williams case (206 Ind. 448) were res adjudicata and whether the lease was in fact burdensome. To refuse such a hearing is to deny due process of law.

> Ohio Water Works Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 64 L. ed. 908, 914.

Requirements of due process are satisfied only by a hearing in the trial court.

Second. The Circuit Court of Appeals has decided that in determining the existence of federal jurisdiction, where that jurisdiction is wholly dependent on diversity of citizenship, it is not the duty of the court to realign the parties in accordance with their interests in the dominant controversy where more than one controversy or issue is tendered, unless they are also in accord upon all other and minor issues; a decision which conflicts with the ruling of this Court in Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 62 L. ed. 664.

Third. The Circuit Court of Appeals disregarded the rule laid down by this Court in Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, in that:

1. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions set out below on estoppel of a City.

Ross, et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150;

Union School Twp. v. First National Bank, 102 Ind. 464, 476;

Hosford v. Johnson, et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485;

Platter v. Board, 103 Ind. 360, 381.

2. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions on the question of res adjudicata, viz:

Jones v. Vert, et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141;

Kitts v. Wilson, 140 Ind. 604, 610.

3. It refused to follow the rule of the Indiana decision set out below that a grant made by a municipality is to be taken most strongly against the grantee and nothing is to be taken by implication against the public and enforced a lease against the City where the right to execute such a lease was based solely on implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same.

Indianapolis Cable R. R. Co. v. Citizens Street R. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 390.

And it likewise refused to follow the same rule laid down by this Court in the following cases:

Mitchell v. Dakota Central Telephone Co., 246 U. S. 396, 62 L. ed. 793.

4. It refused to follow the Indiana decisions that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes.

City of Indianapolis v. Wann, Receiver, 144 Ind. 175, 187.

The Indiana cases cited above to propositions 1, 2, 3, and 4 are the law of Indiana. There are no Indiana decisions to the contrary. There was thus an arbitrary refusal to follow the applicable Indiana law, in violation of the rule established by this Court in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188.

Fourth. An important public question is involved, viz: whether a municipal corporation shall have imposed upon it an obligation for 77 years in the future aggregating more than $45,000,000 in amount under a lease without any municipal sanction, where the Court does not limit the payments of the obligation to the revenues arising from the operation of the plant, but presumably imposes the burden on revenues raised by taxation. Important too because a coercive judgment is ordered entered against a municipal corporation for interest on overdue interest.

WHEREFORE, your petitioners respectfully pray that a writ of certiorari be issued out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit commanding that Court to certify and to send to this Court for its review and determination on a day certain to be named therein a full and complete transcript of the record and all proceedings in the case numbered and entitled on its docket No. 7144. The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, etc. v. The Indianapolis Gas Company, et al., and that the decree of said United States Circuit Court of Appeals in said cause be reversed by this Court, and that petitioners have such other and further relief in the premises as to this Court may seem just.

No. 421.

CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, et al., Petitioners,
vs.
THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, TRUSTEE, ETC., et al., Respondents.
No. 422.

REPLY BRIEF OF PETITIONERS TO BRIEFS OF RESPONDENTS IN OPPOSITION TO PETITIONS FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Each of the three respondents has filed a brief in opposition to petitioners' petition for writ of certiorari.

Respondent Citizens Gas Company says that it has fully performed all its duties and obligations as initial trustee of a public charitable trust, and its obligations to Indianapolis Gas have ceased. As to the primary controversy, Citizens Gas has no interest (brief p. 4) and has adopted a completely neutral position in respect thereto.

The petitioners make no further reply to Citizens Gas.

The briefs of respondents The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, and Indianapolis Gas Company, assert identical grounds of opposition to petitioners' petitions, stated in the same order and in strikingly similar language, so that petitioners are submitting this one brief in reply.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Respondents in their statements of facts leave opportunity for drawing incorrect inferences:

1. It is recited that Citizens Gas sold $2,000,000 of Indianapolis Gas Bonds to the public on representations that it had a 99 year lease. (Chase p. 2.)

2. In the sale of revenue bonds the City issued a prospectus to prospective security firms as bidders in which it was stated that the gas system of Citizens Gas was held partly under a 99 year lease. (Indianapolis Gas p. 5.)

Petitioners point out that no bondholder was or is a party to this action. There is no showing that any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas relied on any statements made by Citizens Gas or the City. The bidders on the City of Indianapolis Gas Plant Revenue Bonds sold in 1935 are not parties to these actions and there is no showing of any reliance having been placed by them on any statements. No party in this case has any concern with the revenue bonds except the Utilities District of the City of Indianapolis.

3. Respondents say the City accepted and recorded the various instruments of transfer (of property from Citizens Gas to City) including an assignment of the lease. (Chase p. 2; Indianapolis Gas p. 5.)

The record shows the four instruments were "all four handed either to Mr. Rabb or to Mr. Dithmer or somebody there representing the City." (R. 467.) The same witness testified that at the same meeting there was delivered to him a rejection of the 99 year lease by the City and a certified copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City rejecting the 99 year lease. (R. 468.) Acknowledgment of receipt of the rejection of the lease was made by Henry H. Hornbrook, attorney for and director of Citizens Gas. (City's Ex. 13, R. 1043; offered R. 433.) The Circuit Court of Appeals first held that the City "accepted" the instruments of transfer but on July 19, 1940, the Court modified its opinion in this particular, among others (R. 1335), and held that "these instruments were received, retained and duly recorded by the City. On the same day, September 9, 1935, the Board of Directors passed two resolutions: one rejecting the lease and refusing to assume the lease obligations; the other accepting the property held under the lease temporarily and solely to prevent interruption of service." (Our emphasis.) (R. 1292.)

4. Both respondents assert in their briefs that there was no agreement concerning the City's use of the property until March 2, 1936. (Chase p. 3; Indianapolis Gas p. 6.)

On July 23, 1935, the City notified Indianapolis Gas it would acquire the Citizens Gas property but without liability for obligations of Citizens Gas and that it would be willing to negotiate a new lease. (R. 836; offered R. 326, 327, 434, 1057, 1058.) On August 31, 1935, the City in a letter to Indianapolis Gas referred to recent conversations between representatives of the City and Indianapolis Gas, and pointed out that the City wished to know if Indianapolis Gas would permit the City to operate the property for a period of six months after the take-over scheduled for September 9, 1935. (R. 837; offered R. 326, 327, 434, 1057, 1058.)

The City on September 27, 1935, wrote Indianapolis Gas:

> "We have had no response from you to our repeated requests for an opportunity to negotiate a lease for the use of your property by the City of Indianapolis.
>
> "That there may be no misunderstanding of our position, we desire to obtain from you an agreement for the use of your property by the City of Indianapolis in connection with its operation of property acquired from Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and upon terms that are both appropriate and fair. Therefore we have asked, and we now ask, that you inform us whether you are willing to undertake to negotiate such an agreement.

"This is a matter not merely of private interest, but of public concern. * * *." (City's Stip. Ex. 63, R. 967; offered R. 326, 434.)

On September 30, 1935, the letters of the City were acknowledged and Indianapolis Gas expressed its willingness to agree with the City respecting operation of the property. (R. 838; offered R. 326, 434.) On February 28, 1936, Indianapolis Gas wrote the City referring to "our tentative agreement" which was to expire on March 9, 1936. (R. 839; offered 326, 327, 434.)

On November 6, 1935, the Board of Directors of Indianapolis Gas instructed the corporation secretaary to formally notify Chase "of the refusal of the City of Indianapolis to accept the assignment of the ninety-nine years lease. * * *" (R. 1013; offered R. 428.)

Indianapolis Gas, on November 7, 1935, wrote Chase in accordance with instructions:

"Assuming to act under legislative authority and pursuant to provisions of the city franchise and articles of incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, the City of Indianapolis has taken over the property of that Company, and is now operating the same by its Board of Directors for Utilities, and is assuming to enter upon the discharge of the obligations of the Citizens Gas Company to its bondholders and stockholders. The City of Indianapolis, however, has refused to accept an assignment of the ninety-nine year lease. * * *

"Under the circumstances, this Company, through action of its Board of Directors, entered into a stipulation with the said City of Indianapolis, by which it was provided that the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, will continue the operations of the property of this Company for a period of six months pending negotiations. * * *" (R. 1013; offered R. 428; R. 926; offered R. 369.)

There is no doubt that Chase understood exactly what the City had done or was trying to do. On September 19, 1935, Chase addressed a letter to William G. Irwin, President of Indianapolis Gas, in which it said:

> "We are receiving numerous inquiries from holders of bonds of the above described issue with respect to newspaper reports that the City Utilities District is attempting to abrogate the lease made by your Company with the Citizens Gas Company in 1913. (R. 926; offered R. 367.)

ARGUMENT.

The arguments of respondents Chase and Indianapolis Gas are the same in substance and in order of presentation, thus both will be answered together without reference to each separately.

I.

It is asserted by respondents that the City's claim of a denial of due process of law is "fanciful." It is argued that the Court of Appeals came to the conclusion "as a matter of law that the City's allegation of 'burdensomeness' presented no defense. * * *" What the Court of Appeals actually held in respect of burdensomeness was this:

> "In making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who in addition may have such a lease set aside. This record discloses that the trustee was justified in selecting the mode of acquisition which it did. When the prudence point was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court, that Court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its terms. Williams vs. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460."[1] (R. 1300.)

[1] The Williams case (206 Ind. 448) is dealt with hereafter to show that it did not adjudicate the questions involved here.

The petitioners had the right to rely on the reservation of the issue of burdensomeness and to believe it would be heard on that issue, both on questions of law and fact, before judgment. The City was not bound to take in advance the precaution of putting in its evidence on this reserved issue; indeed would have had no right to do so because of the reservation.

In Saunders vs. Shaw, et al., 244 U. S. 317, 320, 61 L. ed. 1163, 1165 it was pointed out that the record did not disclose the claim of right under the 14th Amendment until the assignment of errors filed the day before the chief justice of the state granted the writ of error. It was held that ordinarily such assertion of claim of right would not be enough.

> "But when the act complained of is the act of the Supreme Court, done unexpectedly at the end of the proceeding, when the plaintiff in error no longer had any right to add to the record, it would leave a serious gap in the remedy for infraction of constitutional rights if the party aggrieved in such a way could not come here. The defendant was not bound to contemplate a decision of the case before his evidence was heard, and therefore was not bound to ask a ruling or to take other precautions in advance."

In these cases at bar the issue of the burdensome character of the lease was expressly reserved by the District Court without objection or exception by any party, and no evidence was introduced by petitioners or by anyone else on such issue. (R. 321, 322.) As this Court in the case last cited pointed out, there can be no certainty that the petitioner's rights have been protected without giving it a chance to put its evidence in.

Petitioners were not bound to contemplate a decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the reserved issue of burdensomeness before its evidence was heard. It is clear under the decisions of this Court that petitioners are entitled to be heard on the questions of both law and fact on the reserved issue of burdensomeness before a decision is rendered against them.

Respondents contend that the approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission of Indiana upon the joint petition of Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas and its determination "that the lease was in the public interest, hence not burdensome—is binding upon all the world. * * *."[2] (Chase p. 7; Indianapolis Gas p. 7.)

The Public Service Commission was created by Chapter 76, Acts of Indiana General Assembly 1913 (p. 167) as an instrument of the executive department of the state.

The approval of the lease by the Commission could not operate in any way as an adjudication of the enforceability of the lease against the City. The order of approval was wholly administrative in character and was not judicial.

It is firmly settled in Indiana that the Public Service Commission is "purely an administrative or legislative body without judicial power."

Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al. vs. City of LaPorte, et al., 207 Ind. 462, 465;
New York etc. R. R. Co. vs. Singleton, et al., 207 Ind. 449, 458.

The authority given to the Commission to fix rates and approve leases of public utility property was given for the sole purpose of enabling the Commission to protect the public interest. It was never intended that by conferring such jurisdiction on the Commission it should be vested with authority to make a judicial declaration which would determine private rights of persons not parties to the lease, especially where such private rights depend upon the decision of justiciable questions.

The entire purpose of the statute is to safeguard the public interest and to see that leases or sales are not made by one utility to another unless in the opinion of the Commission they are in the public interest.

[2] Chase in its complaint as amended does not allege that the lease is valid but seeks to bind the City to the 99 year lease on the grounds of estoppel and res adjudicata.

Any assertion that the Commission's approval of the lease determined the liability of the City in respect of the obligations contained in the lease is made in disregard not only of the obvious purpose of the statute and the scope of the Commission's authority thereunder, but also in complete disregard of the repeated decisions of the Indiana Supreme Court.

In referring to Section 95 of the Act creating the Public Service Commission, the Indiana Supreme Court said:

> "By this enactment the Legislature has vested it (Public Service Commission) with authority subject to review by the courts, to supervise or regulate the terms of sale insofar only as they affect the public." (Our emphasis.)
> In re: Northwestern Telephone Co., et al., 201 Ind. 667, 680.

Petitioners are cognizant of the rule that where the Commission has jurisdiction to decide questions of fact and enter an order thereon, and acts within its jurisdiction, its decision is conclusive on the courts in a collateral action. But the order of the Commission approving the lease went no further, and could go no further, than to determine upon the facts adduced, whether it was advisable and in the public interest that the property of Indianapolis Gas be leased to Citizens Gas on the terms stated in the Commission's order.

The Commission had no power to decide either the liability of the City[3] under the terms of a lease not executed or ratified by it, or the length of the term of the lease for which the parties might lawfully contract.

[3] At the time of the Commission's approval of the lease (October 1, 1913, R. 122) no claim had been asserted that a public charitable trust had been created and it was still seventeen years before a transfer of the property was to be made to the City.

The Commission could not and did not determine whether the 99 year lease would be burdensome on the City as successor trustee of a public charitable trust seventeen years in advance of the time the City assumed the trusteeship.

The case of Williams vs. Citizens Gas (206 Ind. 448) did not decide as against the City any of the issues presented here. The case was decided on a demurrer to the complaint and no evidence was introduced.

The following language of the Indiana Supreme Court shows clearly the scope of the decision (pp. 458-459):

> "If the lease was improvident from the standpoint of the lessee in that the consideration was excessive in view of the value of the use of the assets acquired under the terms of the lease, no facts are alleged to support such a conclusion. And if such a conclusion were justified, the complaint does not make out a case for equitable relief of cancellation and 'recapture' of the rentals paid over a period of seventeen years during which the Citizens Gas Company had the use of the physical equipment and the benefit of the income derived from this use. Further it was within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the Public Service Commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the Commission in approving the same." (Our emphasis.)

The case of Williams vs. Citizens Gas (206 Ind. 448) is not res adjudicata because:

> 1. The issues in the Williams case were essentially different from the issues in this case. The enforceability of the lease against the City and the right of the initial trustee (Citizens Gas) to bind the City to the terms of the lease were not actually litigated and could not have been litigated under the issues in the Williams case.

In Troxall vs. Delaware R. Co., 227 U. S. 434, 440, the leading case on estoppel of a judgment when different issues are presented is cited, viz.: Cromwell vs. Sac County 94 U. S. 353, 24 L. ed. 195, 198, 199. In Sac County case an action was brought on four bonds of Sac County and four interest coupons. To defeat the action the defendant relied upon the estoppel of a judgment rendered in favor of the county in a prior action brought by another person but prosecuted for the sole benefit of the plaintiff in the last case. The issue of whether the plaintiff was a good faith purchaser of the bonds had not been but could have been litigated in the prior action.

In holding the judgment not res adjudicata, this Court said:

> "But where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action; not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action."

2. The Transfer to the City of the trust res on September 9, 1935, creates a situation which so alters the rights of the parties as to prevent a successful assertion of res adjudicata. When the Williams case was finally decided (December 22, 1933) the City had not taken over the trust res and until that was done the question of the burdensomeness of the lease to the City was not in issue. No attempt was made to obtain a declaratory judgment against the City in respect of any obligation supposed to be imposed upon it under the terms of the lease.

In Third National Bank of Louisville vs. Stone, 174 U. S. 423, 434, 43 L. ed. 1035, 1036, this Court said:

> "A question cannot be held to have been adjudged before an issue on the subject could possibly have arisen."

3. Although Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees and the City were co-defendants, neither Indianapolis Gas nor its mortgage trustees tendered any issue to their co-defendant, City, in respect of the burdensome or non-burdensome character of the 99-year lease.

In Whitesell, et al. vs. Strickler, et al., 167 Ind. 602, 616, it was held that:

> "Where two or more defendants make issue with the plaintiff, a judgment determining those issues in favor of the defendants settles between them no fact that might have been, but was not, put in issue by a proper pleading."

The above rule of law is still the rule in Indiana.

In Pepper vs. Litton, 308 U. S. 295, 84 L. ed. 196, 205, this Court had before it the question of whether or not a judgment of a Virginia court was res adjudicata. A trustee with permission of the bankruptcy court moved in the state court to set a judgment aside. The judgment was held void but the trustee was estopped to challenge it. Thereafter the question of allowance of the judgment came before the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court concluded that the decision of the state court that the trustee was estopped to attack the judgment did not prevent the bankruptcy court from considering its validity. The District Court disallowed the trustee to recover the proceeds impressed at the execution sale had on the judgment.

In sustaining the District Court, Justice Douglas, speaking for this Court, said:

> "In the first place, res judicata did not prevent the District Court from examining into the Litton judgment, and disallowing or subordinating it as a claim. When that claim was attacked in the bankruptcy court Litton did not show that the proceeding in the state court was anything more than a proceeding under Virginia practice to set aside the judgment in his favor on the ground that it was irregular or void upon its face. He failed to show that the judgment in the state court was conclusive in his favor on the validity or priority of the underlying claim, as respects the other creditors of the bankrupt corporation—a duty which was incumbent on him. On the pleadings in the state court the validity of the underlying claim was not in issue. Nor was there presented to the state court the question of whether or not the Litton judgment might be subordinated to the claims of other creditors upon equitable principles. The motion on which that proceeding was based challenged the Litton judgment on one ground only, viz.: that it was void ab ignitio because it was not confessed by Dixie Splint Coal Company in the manner required by the Virginia statute and because P. H. Smith did not have either an implied or express power to confess it. In other words, in the state court, under the pleadings and practice, the only decree which was asked or could be given in the plaintiff's favor was for cancellation of the judgment as a record obligation of the bankrupt. It is therefore plain that the issue which the bankruptcy court later considered was not an issue in the trial of the cause in the state court and could not be adjudicated there."

It is quite apparent that since the burdensomeness of the lease to the City as successor trustee was not decided in the Williams case, it could not operate as res adjudicata. The Circuit Court of Appeals in directing judgment to be entered against the City with no opportunity to be heard on the reserved issue of burdensomeness denied to the City due process of law.

II.

Respondents contend that Indianapolis Gas should not be realigned with Chase and thus destroy diversity of citizenship, the sole ground of jurisdiction, for the reason that a coercive judgment was entered in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas. As Chase admits Indianapolis Gas is only "tertiarily liable." As pointed out in petitioner's original brief (pp. 27, 28) Indianapolis Gas is completely insulated from liability.

Perhaps no stronger evidence appears in this record of the complete unanimity of interest of Indianapolis Gas and Chase than the brief of Indianapolis Gas filed in opposition to petitioner's petition for writ of certiorari.

If the interests of respondents were not in accord it is difficult to understand why Indianapolis Gas wishes to oppose the review by this Court of a judgment allegedly against it of more than $1,000,000.

III.

Chase points out (p. 11) the Court of Appeals made no decision on the question of estoppel; its decision was based primarily upon its independent conclusion that the lease is valid; and that it is not clear whether the court regarded the cases referred to as determinative on the ground of res adjudicata.

As pointed out, the complaint did not allege that the lease was valid but asserted that the City was bound by estoppel and res adjudicata. (R. 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19.) Thus the Court of Appeals decided the case on an issue never presented to the trial court by the complaint and on a theory never litigated on the complaint.

IV.

Respondents say the judgment ordered entered imposes no burden on revenues raised by taxation by the City.

If the Court of Appeals meant that the judgment when entered was not payable from taxation revenues, it would presumably have said so since the City expressly called the Court's attention to the point. (R. 1312, 1313, 1350, 1382.) The insertion in the opinion of the words "as successor trustee" by way of amendment (R. 1335) does not remove the need for payment of the judgment, when entered, by the City from revenues raised by taxation if the income from the property and the property itself are inadequate to make the required payment.

CONCLUSION.

If the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is to stand, the City will be liable for rental payments of approximately $45,000,000 under the terms of a 99 year lease which the City did not sign or execute, to which it was not a party, in which it is not named as a party, of which it is not an assignee, which it has neither confirmed, adopted, approved or ratified, but which the City has expressly rejected by proper action of the only municipal body having any power to deal with the lease.

The questions presented by petitioner's petitions are fundamental and important ones: denial of due process of law, refusal to realign parties in accordance with their relation to the main controversy, disregard of the rule of this Court in Erie Railroad vs. Tompkins (305 U. S. 64).

Wherefore, petitioners pray that the writ be granted.

BRIEF OF CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, ET AL. PETITIONERS AND CROSS-RESPONDENTS.

THE OPINIONS BELOW.

The District Court in 1937 dismissed Chase's bill of complaint for want of jurisdiction. No written opinion was filed or given. (R. 271.) An appeal from this ruling was taken by Chase. The majority opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed the lower court is reported in 96 F. 2d 363-368. (R. 285-292.) The dissenting opinion appears in 96 F. 2d 368. (R. 293.)

A petition for rehearing was overruled without opinion, and this Court denied certiorari. (305 U. S. 600, 83 L. ed. 381.)

A trial was then had in the District Court on the merits in respect of a portion of the case.

The District Court ordered that evidence should be heard upon the issues as to whether the lease is binding upon and enforceable against the City "with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis by its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property, viz: that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust * * *." (II R. 321, 322.) No objection or exception was made or taken by any party. The memorandum opinion of the District Court on that portion of the merits determined is unreported, but appears in the record at pages 1122 to 1159. Chase appealed; Indianapolis Gas cross-appealed. The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversing the lower court is reported in 113 F. 2d 217-232. (IV R. 1281-1306.) The Circuit Court of Appeals amended its opinion in certain particulars after the opinion was first filed. (IV R. 1335.) No written opinion was given or filed in denying petitioners' petition for rehearing addressed to the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals as modified. (IV R. 1405.) Certiorari was granted by this Court on October 28, 1940.

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, c. 229. (43 Stat. 938; 23 U. S. C. A. Sec. 347.)

Writs of certiorari were granted in each of the cases by this Court on October 28, 1940.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

This is a suit in equity commenced by Chase against the City and the individual members of its Board of Trustees and Directors for Utilities impleaded with Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas.

Chase as trustee (I R. 4) under a mortgage to secure bonds executed (I R. 4) sought as its main relief a declaration that a lease for 99 years (I R. 5, 6, 21) executed by Indianapolis Gas, lessor, to Citizens Gas, lessee, was binding upon and enforceable against the City, as successor trustee of a public charitable trust (I R. 20, 21, 22), as a claimed assignee of the lease (I R. 16, 17) and allegedly because of laches (I R. 12), estoppel (I R. 18, 19) and res adjudicata. (I R. 8, 9, 10, 11.)

Chase also sought an injunction requiring the City to make payments and perform covenants under the lease (I R. 21, 306); judgment for unpaid interest and interest on overdue interest on the bonds (I R. 21, 301), together with attorney's fees and expenses. (I R. 27.)

Among other things, Chase asked as relief against Indianapolis Gas, that the lease be declared valid, and that pending final hearing, Indianapolis Gas be enjoined from attempting to impair the lease as security. No action in respect of the injunction was taken by Chase except the request made in its complaint. (I R. 21.)

In earlier litigation, the property owned by Citizens Gas was held to be the corpus of a public charitable trust created for the benefit of the gas users of the City.[1]

The historical background of the public charitable trust which is involved in this litigation is as follows:[1]

In 1886 certain public spirited citizens of Indianapolis organized Consumers Gas Trust Company to furnish natural gas to the City and its inhabitants.

[1] Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, 46 F. 2d 855.

The articles of association of the company provided that after the certificate-holders[2] had been paid the amount of their stock subscriptions with interest at 8% per annum and after payment of all the company's indebtedness "it shall be the duty of the directors * * * to reduce the price of gas so that * * * (it) shall thereafter be supplied to consumers at cost."

The Consumers' Company conducted its business until 1904 when natural gas failed. Certificate-holders had then received 95% of the amount of their subscriptions plus 8% dividends per annum. The officers then proposed to pay the certificate-holders the remaining 5% and thereafter engage in the manufacture of artificial gas and distribute it at cost.

Byron C. Quinby, a stockholder, brought suit in the Federal Court at Indianapolis (February 1904) which was appealed to and decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals.[3]

The direct result of the Quinby decision was that the gas users of the City could not obtain from the Consumers' Company a supply of gas at cost, the City lost any beneficial interest in the property, and the stockholders of the Consumers' Company who had received a return of 95% of their investment owned the entire beneficial interest in the property.

This situation led directly to the creation of the public charitable trust known as Citizens Gas Company, one of the [2] The stock was issued to voting trustees and certificates of beneficial ownership issued by the trustees to the subscribers.

[3] Consumers Gas Trust Company vs. Quinby (C. C. A. 7) 137 Fed. 882. The Court held: (1) the company was organized for the sole purpose of furnishing natural gas to the city and its inhabitants; (2) no public charitable trust had been created in the property; (3) the manufacture and sale of artificial gas was ultra vires the corporation; and (4) that since the supply of natural gas had failed, the stockholders were entitled to have the corporate business wound up and the net assets distributed to them.

purposes of which was to furnish competition to the then existing privately owned property of Indianapolis Gas.[4]

The plan of the public charitable trust for the benefit of the gas users of the city was carried forward in two steps. The first was the franchise contract of August 25, 1905. (I R. 81-116.) This franchise contract was the basis of the public charitable trust and outlined the plan of its creation.

The individuals named in the franchise were not authorized to exercise any rights in the city streets. There was no grant of franchise, license or permit to them. It was required that before a gram should become effective, that a corporation be organized which, by declaration in its charter, should fix the rights of its stockholders and of the city in the property to be acquired to carry out the purpose of the grant. (I R. 82.)

There was no grant of rights in the city streets except to a corporation which, by voluntary act of all its stockholders, should declare, in advance, that the property acquired with the money contributed by them should be held under the obligation of the corporation to convey it to the city when the contributions with interest had been returned and thereupon the rights of the stockholders would be extinguished. (I R. 84, 99).

This led to the next step in the plan: the incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company.

It was a quasi-public corporation. Its sole purpose was to act as trustee of a public charitable trust. It had no power or authority to act otherwise. (I R. 82-85, 93.)

The Articles of Incorporation provided that all of the capital stock of the company should be held by trustees (I R. 96, 113), one of whom should be named by the mayor of Indianapolis. (I R. 96, 113.) They were given full, complete and irrevocable power during the life of the corporation to hold and vote the stock as though they were the owners of it. (I R. 96.) They were to name and select members of the board of directors. (I R. 98.)

[4] The purpose of all parties in the negotiation leading up to the passage of the franchise ordinance (I R. 81-116) of August 25, 1905, by the Board of Public Works and its ratification by the City Council and the organization of Citizens Gas was to avoid the mistakes which had resulted in the Quinby decision.

Certificates of beneficial interest were issued to the owners of the stock for their shares. These certificates were assignable and entitled the holders to all dividends paid on the shares. (I R. 97.) Upon the expiration of 25 years, and when the certificate-holders had received an amount equal to the par value of their shares with certain specified interest, the certificates were to be deemed fully paid and canceled and the trustees and directors were then to convey the physical property to the City to be held and operated by it for the benefit of its gas users. (I R. 98.)

All the rights, property and assets acquired by Citizens Gas were acquired for the benefit of the gas users subject only to a charge in favor of the stockholders, creditors and others having valid claims against the corporation or its property. (I R. 98, 99.)

At all times from its creation in 1906, Citizens Gas was the initial trustee of a public charitable trust for the benefit of the gas users of the City.

On September 30, 1913, a lease was executed by Indianapolis Gas, lessor, to Citizens Gas, lessee for a term of 99 years (I R. 51-80, 55, 77), or if for any reason the lease should be held invalid because of the length of the term then for the longest term for which the parties might lawfully contract. (I R. 80.)

As rental Citizens Gas was to pay until 2012, the end of the term, sums equal to (1) 5% interest on the outstanding bonds (being the bonds for which Chase is trustee (I R. 69, 79)) which now amount to $6,881,000; (2) 6% on the par value of the common stock of which there is outstanding $2,000,000; (3) all taxes for which Indianapolis Gas would become liable; and (4) certain additional miscellaneous expenditures.

The payments so made by Citizens Gas from 1913 to September 9, 1935, aggregated more than $11,500,000 and were at the average annual rate of more than $520,000. (II R. 669, offered II R. 327.)

Shortly prior to the execution of the lease in September, 1913, the Shively-Spencer Act which created the Public Service Commission of Indiana was enacted and became effective.[5]

This act required that leases, such as that between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas, be submitted to the Commission for its approval. This was done upon a joint petition of both lessor and lessee, and the lease was approved.

Frank S. Fishback, a stockholder of Citizens Gas, intervened before the Public Service Commission and later commenced an action in the Marion Superior Court to set aside the Commission's order approving the lease. From an adverse judgment Fishback appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana which dismissed the case because the appeal had not been perfected in time.[6]

On March 20, 1929,[7] the City, by resolution of its Board of Public Works (II R. 670, offered II R. 327) declared its intention to take over the right, title, interest and ownership which was then held by Citizens Gas, and to exercise its rights as successor trustee of the public charitable trust.

[6] Fishback vs. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282. Chase bases in part its claim of res adjudicata on the Commission's action approving the lease and on the Fishback case. Both are dealt with more fully in this brief in the argument. (Infra, pp. 67, 72.)

[7] This was nine days after Chapter 77, Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1929, p. 252, became effective by which the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis was created and by which the Board of Directors for Utilities was given exclusive control over the gas plant and property of the department.

Newton Todd, a stockholder of Citizens Gas, on April 30, 1929, commenced an action in the Federal District Court at Indianapolis. (Clause 13, II R. 628, 629, offered II R. 327.) Citizens Gas, the City, and the members of its Board of Public Works were among the defendants. Todd sought to enjoin Citizens Gas and its co-defendants from carrying into effect the resolutions theretofore adopted in which the existence of the public charitable trust had been recognized and the right of the City acknowledged to take over the property of Citizens Gas as trustee, pursuant to the terms of the franchise.[8]

While the Todd case was still pending, Allen G. Williams, on March 12, 1930, filed suit in the Superior Court of Marion County. (Clause 14, II R. 630, 631, offered II R. 327.) Having been decided against plaintiff the case was appealed.[9]

The Indiana Supreme Court said respecting the nature of this suit that it was:

"a suit by appellant Williams to establish a trust; to quiet title to property of the trust estate; to recover di-

[8] There was in issue in the Todd case for the first time the question of whether or not a public charitable trust was created by the franchise and related instruments executed in 1905. A public charitable trust was held to exist. Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. 2d 855. Chase also relies on the Todd case as being res adjudicata. (I R. 13.) Further reference to this case is made hereafter in this brief. (Infra, p. 75.)

About two weeks after the Todd case was filed, one Cotter and others commenced an action in the Federal District Court. Chase apparently places some reliance on the Cotter case as res adjudicata (Br. pp. 12, 13, 14) but Chase did not plead the Cotter case.

Chase also places reliance on the City's answer in the Cotter case. (Br. pp. 103, 124, 125.) The validity of the lease was not in issue there and the answer was unverified and signed only by counsel. (Infra, p. 79.)

verted assets of the trust estate; to recapture the trust and its property from delinquent and insolvent trustees and sequester the same with receiverships; to administer the trust during an emergency and at the end of the emergency turn over the trust and its property to its lawful beneficiaries."[10]

On July 23, 1935, the City, through its attorneys, notified Indianapolis Gas that various provisions of the lease were inappropriate and burdensome, that it was not binding on the City but that the City would be willing to enter into negotiations looking towards a revision of the lease. (P X 58, III R. 836, offered II R. 329.) See also City's Stip. X 68, III R. 970.

No answer having been received to the July 23 letter, counsel for the City wrote Indianapolis Gas again on August 31, asking if the City was to be permitted temporarily to use the Indianapolis Gas property for six months after the take-over. (P X 59, III R. 836, offered II R. 329.)

On September 30, 1935 Indianapolis Gas agreed to make an arrangement for temporary use. (P X 66, III R. 838, offered II R. 329.) (Stip. X 65, III R. 969, offered II R. 434.)

On August 27, 1935, Mr. William Sparks, one of the attorneys for Citizens Gas, was advised that the City would not accept an assignment of the lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas. On September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas tendered to the City four instruments of conveyance:

1. Deed of conveyance of real estate. (P X Stip. 55, III R. 833, offered II R. 327.)

2. Assignment of a lease of office space in the Majestic Building wherein Citizens Gas maintained offices. (P X Stip. 56, III R. 835, offered II R. 327.)

[10] 206 Ind. 448, 450. The Williams case is relied upon by Chase as res adjudicata. (I R. 14.) (Br. pp. 74-90. A full discussion of the Williams case appears in the argument in this brief.

3. A conveyance of the personal property owned by Citizens Gas. (Ex. E to complaint, I R. 122, 126, offered II R. 327.)

4. An instrument purporting to assign the ninety-nine year lease between Indianapolis Gas, Lessor, and Citizens Gas, Lessee. (Exhibit F to complaint, I R. 127, 129, offered II R. 327.)

At the time of the delivery of the four instruments to a representative of the City (II R. 467), there was delivered to Mr. Sparks, as the attorney for Citizens Gas, a rejection of the ninety-nine year lease signed by Mr. Dithmer as President of the Board of Directors, for the Department of Utilities, together with a certified copy of a resolution of the Board of Directors rejecting the lease. (II R. 468.)[11] Also on September 9, 1935, the rejection of the lease was served on William J. Yule, Secretary of Indianapolis Gas, together with a copy of the resolution of the Board of Directors rejecting the assignment of the lease, and a resolution for the temporary use of the property of Indianapolis Gas. (II R. 423, 463; III R. 965.)

There was at the same time served on Mr. Sparks a resolution for the temporary use of the property of Indianapolis Gas which was adopted by the Board of Directors on September 9, 1935. (Exhibit C to City's answer and counterclaim. I R. 200-204.)

The action of the Board of Directors rejecting the lease was ratified by an ordinance of the common council of the City. (III R. 1017, 1018, offered II R. 429.)

On March 2, 1936, a letter from the Department of Utilities signed by the president of the Board of Directors and accepted by Indianapolis Gas, extended the temporary use agreement of September 9, 1935. (I R. 205, 206, 207.)

[11] The resolution for rejection of the lease is Exhibit G to the bill of complaint and has, as a part thereof, the rejection handed to Citizens Gas. (I R. 130.) The tendered assignment of the lease was recorded at the instance of Citizens Gas. (III R. 1041, offered II R. 432.)

The March 2, 1936, agreement provided that the City would pay into escrow a sum of money equal to the semi-annual instalment of interest due on Indianapolis Gas bonds and charges of the trustee for disbursements. Also that all Federal income taxes on money paid by Citizens Gas to Indianapolis Gas in 1935 and the State Gross Income Tax due in April 1936 would be paid by the City.

During the life of the agreement the City agreed to deposit in escrow, and has so deposited, a sum of money equal to each semi-annual instalment of interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds and dividends on its stock.

The agreement then provided:

> "It is understood that the payments referred to, including the deposits made with the escrow, are made without prejudice to our position or rights and that we may continue to operate the plant and equipment covered by said lease of September 30, 1913, until the present controversy is adjusted or finally terminated by a decree of Court, without such operation or such payments or the execution of this agreement constituting an admission on our part that said lease of September 30, 1913, is valid or binding on the City of Indianapolis or said Department of Utilities of said City of Indianapolis, or any of its or their property." (Our emphasis.) (I R. 207.)

At a meeting held on March 11, 1936, Chase was advised that the agreement of March 2, 1936, had been made between the Indianapolis Gas and the City. (III R. 992, offered II R. 426.) To December 31, 1938, the City had deposited $1,217,875 in the escrow fund for the benefit of the bondholders and stockholders of Indianapolis Gas if the lease should be held valid. (City's X 10, III R. 1020, 1031, offered II R. 430.)

On June 8, 1936, Chase as Trustee under a mortgage to secure bonds executed by Indianapolis Gas (I R. 4), filed its complaint in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. The main relief asked for by Chase was a request by it for a declaration that the ninety-nine year lease (I R. 5, 6, 21) executed by Indianapolis Gas, Lessor, to Citizens Gas, Lessee, on September 30, 1913 (I R. 5) was binding upon and enforceable against the City as successor trustee of a public charitable trust (I R. 20, 21, 22) as a claimed assignee of the lease. (I R. 16, 17.) The bill does not allege that the lease is valid, but seeks a declaration of the binding effect on the City of such lease on the grounds of laches (I R. 12), of estoppel (I R. 18, 19) and res adjudicata. (I R. 8, 9, 10 and 11.)

Chase also sought to obtain an injunction requiring the City to make the payments and perform the covenants contained in the lease (I R. 21, 306); that Indianapolis Gas be enjoined from doing anything to impair or rescind the lease (I R. 21); that the City be made to pay direct to Chase or Clerk of the Court all interest payments as they become due (I R. 21); that a judgment be entered for all unpaid interest and interest on interest (I R. 21); that reasonable expenses and attorney's fees of Chase be determined and judgment given therefor. (I R. 21, 22.) By amendment to its bill Chase asked that the standby agreement of March 2, 1936 (I R. 295, 261, offered II R. 327), between the City and Indianapolis Gas be held not binding on Chase and that the escrowed fund, or so much as represents unpaid interest with interest on interest, is the property of the Indianapolis Gas bondholders. (I R. 260.) By a second amendment and supplement (II R. 296-306) Chase asked judgment for all unpaid interest, damages and expenses resulting from the alleged failure to make replacements (II R. 301); for all rents, issues and profits from September 9, 1935; that Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas apply to all payments of any judgments entered against them all property, debts, equitable rights, etc. which either had (II R. 302-306); that the order of liability among the defendants be determined and that Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas be enjoined from selling Indianapolis Gas bonds which each held. (II R. 306.)

SPECIFICATION OF ASSIGNED ERRORS INTENDED TO BE URGED.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit erred in each of the following particulars:

1. In holding that defendant Indianapolis Gas should not be realigned as a party plaintiff with Chase for the reason that Chase and Indianapolis Gas were in accord on the principal controversy, against the City, although Chase and Indianapolis Gas (but not the City) were adverse in attitude on subsidiary and dependent issues.

2. In holding that the attitude of the parties on subsidiary and dependent issues prevents their realignment on the major and substantial issue, in order to test the jurisdiction of the court.

3. In directing the entry of a judgment against the City, when the City had not had its day in court on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. This was a denial of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment and each of them to the Constitution of the United States.

The requirements of due process are not satisfied unless a party has the right in a trial court to a determination of all issues of fact and law. This requirement has been denied the City.

4. In refusing to follow the rule announced by this Court in Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 82 L. ed. 1188, in that the Circuit Court of Appeals refused to follow the controlling Indiana decisions on (a) the question of estoppel of a municipal corporation, (b) the doctrine of res adjudicata, (c) the question of the denial of all powers granted by a municipal corporation except those expressly granted and (d) the question of the violation of Sections 85 and 254 of the acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1905 prohibiting the execution of any such lease as that here involved for a longer period than 25 years and even for such a period without proper municipal sanction.

5. In holding a municipal corporation liable for 77 years for future payments of more than $45,000,000 under a lease solely because of the implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same although the Indiana law is that all powers granted by a municipal corporation must be strictly construed against the grantee and nothing passes by implication. When the lease was originally executed, the City was not a party to it, did not sign or execute it, is not named as a party obligated, is not an assignee although an assignment was tendered, but was rejected, and no municipal authority has ever affirmed, ratified or approved the lease. Therefore the lease is invalid and unenforceable against the City.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I.

REALIGNMENT TO DETERMINE JURISDICTION.

Indianapolis Gas should have been realigned as a party plaintiff with Chase for the reason that Chase and Indianapolis Gas were in accord on the principal controversy against the City although Chase and Indianapolis Gas (but not the City) were adverse in attitude on subsidiary and dependent issues.

The Circuit Court of Appeals also erred in holding that before such realignment may be required, the parties must be in substantial accord upon all issues presented, and that it is not sufficient that they merely be in accord upon the main issue or some of the issues.

In its opinion of June 6, 1940, as modified, the Circuit Court of Appeals held for the first time that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment enforceable in the following order:

> (1) Against the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (2) against Citizens Gas; (3) against Indianapolis Gas.

Under the judgment ordered entered, the City will be required to, and the evidence shows that the City is abundantly able to, pay the entire judgment. Indianapolis Gas will therefore be wholly insulated from any liability.

The result of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is that a judgment has been ordered entered which is equally beneficial to Chase and to Indianapolis Gas and which amounts in substance not to a judgment against Indianapolis Gas but one in its favor. The actual position taken on the record by the parties is:

Chase asserts that the lease is binding against the City. Indianapolis Gas likewise asserts the lease is binding against the City. The City denies the lease is enforceable against it.

The attitude of the respective parties toward the actual and substantial controversy should determine whether realignment shall take place for the purpose of testing the jurisdiction of the Court, irrespective of the attitude of the parties toward subsidiary and minor issues.

The arrangement of the parties is merely a contrivance between friends for the purpose of founding a jurisdiction which otherwise would not exist. (Br. p. 22.)

II.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in directing the entry of a judgment against the City when the City had not had its day in court on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. This was a denial to the City of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In its counterclaim the City alleged that the lease was burdensome upon the City and the property of the public charitable trust, and for that reason was a lease which the initial trustee had no power to make, especially in view of the fact that there was a definitely fixed date for the termination of its trusteeship.

The City alleged that among the burdensome provisions of the lease were the following:

(a) The payment of annual rent in a sum largely exceeding a fair return on the fair value of the property of Indianapolis Gas;

(b) The requirement of the lease that the lessee should, during the entire term of the lease, refinance the bond issue of Indianapolis Gas in the principal amount of $6,881,000, and that if the bonds were to sell below par, to pay the difference to Indianapolis Gas;

(c) A requirement in the lease penalizing the lessee in the event that it reduce the price of gas. The agreement provided for the increase in the annual rent of $10,000 a year when gas was sold at more than 45¢ and less than 50¢ a thousand cubic feet, and an additional increase of $5,000 a year when gas was sold at 45¢ or less per thousand cubic feet. (I R. 186.)

Chase after having unsuccessfully moved to strike out the averments of burdensomeness, then denied them. (I R. 214.) The issue of the burdensome character of the lease was tendered by the City and denied by Chase, and thus was presented for determination.

The District Court entered an order reserving the burdensome character of the lease for future trial, and at the time the order was entered there was no objection or exception made or taken by any party. The Circuit Court of Appeals, among other things, decided that "in making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who, in addition, may have such lease set aside * * *."

The court also decided, among other things, that the ninety-nine year lease is valid; that the lease binds the City as successor trustee and the trust property; that the leasehold interest is a part of the trust res, and that the City has accepted the trust res.

It is clear from the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the issue of burdensomeness on which the City has had no opportunity to be heard either on the question of fact or law, and which was expressly reserved by the trial court for future determination, was decided against the City by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Whether the cases relied upon by Chase were res adjudicata of the burdensomeness of the lease was under the Indiana decisions a question of fact,[12] and the City was entitled to a trial and findings by the District Court upon which the District Court's decision could be reviewed. No hearing was had on the issue of burdensomeness, and no findings were made by the District Court.

[12] There are decisions in other jurisdictions which hold that the question of res adjudicata is a mixed question of law and fact.

In the instant case the requirements of due process are satisfied only by a notice, an opportunity to be heard and a hearing in the trial court on every question of law and fact including the reserved issue of burdensomeness.

If the power exists in the Circuit Court of Appeals to deny to the City due process of law, as it has done, then the judicial department of the Government, which sits to uphold the Constitution, is the only department possessing the power to deny a hearing to litigants. If such authority exists in the courts, then in consequence of their establishment to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice, courts possess the right to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent. Judicial proceedings cannot be valid unless they proceed upon inquiry and render judgment only after trial. In the instant case there was no inquiry. There was no trial on the reserved issue of burdensomeness.

A hearing in the trial court is a matter of right. The hearing guaranteed by the due process clause cannot be in an appellate tribunal. (Br. p. 32.)

III.

LEASE UNENFORCEABLE AGAINST THE CITY.

The facts of this case lend no support to any of Chase's contentions that the City is bound by the terms of the lease. The City is not a party to the lease; it did not sign nor execute it; it is not named as a party obligated; it was not an assignee of the lease, an assignment having been tendered and rejected; and no competent authority having the right to deal with the subject-matter ever authorized its execution, agreed to it, affirmed it or ratified it.

The lease in question here was executed in violation of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Indiana, 1905. These Sections expressly limit the making of such a contract for the furnishing to a City or its inhabitants heat or light for a term longer than twenty-five years.

These same statutes also require that any contract for heat and light shall be first agreed to by the Board of Public Works and thereafter there must be an ordinance of the Common Council approving it and affirming it. The lease in question here is for a term of ninety-nine years and it was neither agreed to by the Board of Public Works nor approved nor affirmed by an ordinance of the Common Council.

These two sections of the Indiana statutes indicate and define the public policy of the State to be against such contracts, such as is the lease in question here. Such contracts in violation of the public policy of the State are void and cannot be ratified.

There was neither express nor implied power in the initial trustee to execute a lease which would be binding upon the successor trustee.

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the City was liable for 77 years for future payments aggregating more than $45,000,000 under a lease solely because of the implied power of the initial trustee to execute the same.

When the lease was originally executed, the City was not a party to it; did not sign or execute it; is not named as a party obligated; is not an assignee although an assignment was tendered but was rejected; and there was no municipal authority affirming, ratifying or approving the lease. The rejection of the lease by the Department of Utilities was ratified by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City. (III R. 1017, offered II R. 429.) The lease is clearly invalid and unenforceable against the City.

The Circuit Court of Appeals said:

> "The power to execute this 99 years lease was authorized by the Commission in 1913." (113 F. 2d 217, 221, IV R. 1285.)

The Public Service Commission, to which the Court refers, had no power to determine the validity of the lease and could bind no one on that proposition.

The Circuit Court of Appeals also held that (p. 227) (IV R. 1297):

> "The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. In truth the terms of the trust remain silent on the subject of trustee's powers. The only applicable language relates to duties and not to powers."

Thus if the terms of the trust remain silent on the trustee's powers, as is the fact, the power to make the lease cannot be implied. This is true because this Court has so held and the Indiana Supreme Court has so held. Both courts have said that grants of rights and privileges by a state or a municipality are strictly construed, and whatever is not unequivocally granted, is withheld; nothing is taken by implication against the public except what necessarily flows from the nature of the terms of the grant.

The trust instruments contain detailed instructions respecting many matters of lesser importance than the power to make this lease, such as the retirement of stock; the power to purchase Consumers Gas Trust mains; the laying of pipes; the materials to be used; the quality of the gas; the refilling of excavations; and provided in detail the order in which the earnings should be used and the duties of the officers. (I R. 84-103.) It was also provided that any member of the board of trustees could be removed upon a showing that he was an employee of any company organized for the purpose of manufacturing or delivering gas to consumers in Indianapolis, or that he held any securities or capital stock of such company.

Trustees such as was Citizens Gas, are required to act with great fidelity toward those who are the beneficiaries of the trust.

To assume implied power is inconsistent with the obligations of Citizens Gas under its contract with the City.

IV.

RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD v. TOMPKINS.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has erred in refusing to follow the rule announced by this Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, in the following particulars:

1. In refusing to follow the Indiana decisions which hold

(a) That the doctrine of estoppel has no application where the other party was not influenced by the acts pleaded as an estoppel.

There is no proof in the record that any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas bonds (of which bonds Chase is Trustee) knew of, relied on, or was influenced by any acts of the City.

(b) An estoppel against a municipal corporation cannot be founded upon acts done by municipal officers in excess of their authority.

2. In refusing to follow the Indiana decisions on the question of res adjudicata which announced the Indiana rule to be that the doctrine of former adjudication may not be invoked by any party unless he has tendered to the party against whom the doctrine is invoked, an issue to which the latter could have demurred or pleaded. It must also appear that the thing demanded was the same. It must also appear that the cause of action is between the same parties and found for one of them in the same quality and, where, as here, the causes of action are different it must appear that the question was actually litigated between the parties. The benefit derived from a verdict or decision must be mutual.

ARGUMENT.

I.

JURISDICTION.

The first question presented is one of Federal jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is asserted by Chase to exist on the sole ground of diversity of citizenship.

This suit was brought by Chase as mortgagee i.e. trustee under a deed of trust securing an issue of bonds of Indianapolis Gas, one of the defendants below. Chase sought a decree declaring that the ninety-nine year lease between Indianapolis Gas, lessor, and Citizens Gas, lessee, was binding upon and enforceable against the City and the individual members of the Boards of Trustees and Directors for Utilities on the grounds of alleged laches, estoppel and res adjudicata and as a claimed assignee of Citizens Gas. The bill asked a temporary injunction requiring the City to make the payments and perform the covenants contained in the lease, and also sought a judgment for amounts alleged to be unpaid under the lease; that certain escrowed money be declared the property of the bondholders; a judgment for damages and that all rents and profits from September 9, 1935 be given Chase.

The City answered that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the controversy, and should be aligned in interest with Chase; an alignment which would destroy the diversity of citizenship and require dismissal of the bill.[13]

It is clear that if Indianapolis Gas were not a party to this litigation, it would be free to relitigate against the City and the other parties the questions involved here. The [13] A hearing was had pursuant to the request of the City under Equity Rule No. 29. The District Court dismissed the bill for want of jurisdiction. The majority opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the District Court and certiorari was denied. 305 U. S. 606.

Circuit Court of Appeals held, and correctly, that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party.

Chase National Bank vs. Citizens Gas Company, 96 F. 2d, 363.

The real and controlling controversy in this case is whether the pleaded lease has become enforceable against the City. No other cause of action is alleged against the City except claims for damages which are dependent upon the determination of the validity of the lease. By taking the most favorable view to Chase of its complaint as amended and supplemented, the subsidiary controversies between it and Indianapolis Gas, which Chase claims to exist, are as follows:

Chase asks an injunction to preserve and protect the property (I R. 4); that the lease be declared the property of Chase and part of the security for the performance of the obligations of Indianapolis Gas under the mortgage; that Indianapolis Gas be enjoined from making any contract or agreement or doing any act which will impair, rescind, or modify the lease to Citizens Gas or to alter the obligations of the lessee thereunder. (I R. 21.)

By its amendment and supplement Chase asked that the agreement between the City and Indianapolis Gas, dated March 2, 1936, whereby the City agreed to temporarily operate the property of Indianapolis Gas and to pay therefor a sum equal to the rental payments agreed to be paid by Citizens Gas but without prejudice to the City's rights to claim that the lease was invalid, did not bind Chase (I R. 259); that the fund deposited with the Indiana National Bank in escrow under the agreement of March 2, 1936, or that part thereof that represented the interest payable under the deed of trust, together with interest on interest, be declared the property of the bondholders of Indianapolis Gas. (I R. 260.)

By its second amendment and supplement to its bill, Chase asked that the Indianapolis Gas bonds in the amount of $120,000 held by Indianapolis Gas, should not be permitted to participate in any distribution of funds recovered in the case until all other bondholders were paid in full and all claims of Chase paid, satisfied and discharged; that Indianapolis Gas and the other defendants are liable to Chase for all losses, damages, costs, charges and expenses resulting from the alleged failure to make renewals, repairs, replacements and extensions necessary to keep the leased premises in good order and repair (II R. 300); that the Court give judgment to Chase against Indianapolis Gas and the other defendants for all the unpaid interest, together with interest thereon (I R. 391); that Indianapolis Gas apply to the payment of any and all judgments entered against it in this cause all of its property, debts, choses in action, and equitable interests which belong to it or held in trust for it, which property was to include, but not be limited to, the $120,000 Indianapolis Gas bonds; any rights of Indianapolis Gas under the lease; any rights of Indianapolis Gas growing out of the transfer of all the property of Citizens Gas to the City; all the rights of Indianapolis Gas growing out of a certain indemnity agreement (Exhibit J to second amendment and supplement II R. 306) between the City and Citizens Gas; any rights of Indianapolis Gas growing out of use of its property by the City; and any right of Indianapolis Gas to the rents, proceeds, etc. from the leased property. (II R. 302, 303.) Chase also asked that Indianapolis Gas and the City be enjoined from selling or in any way disposing of or encumbering the Indianapolis Gas bonds held by each of them.

In respect of the main controversy, the parties by the record contend as follows:

Citizens Gas says in its answer (I R. 230) that whether or not the City is subject to the lease, it has fully and completely carried out its duties and obligations. (I R. 221, 222.)

City contends that the lease is invalid and unenforceable against it. (I R. 141-208, 209-212, 266-269.)

Chase maintains that the lease is valid and binding against the City. (I R. 3, 20-21.)

Indianapolis Gas maintains that the lease is valid and binding against the City. (I R. 137, 138, 215, 219.)

Chase and Indianapolis Gas have a similar and identical interest against the City on the question of the validity of the lease.

Chase says (br. p. 40):

> "The plaintiff has a bona fide claim for unpaid interest against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas and the City * * *."

If the lease is invalid, it has no such claim against the City. If the lease is valid, Indianapolis Gas would have a claim against the City under the lease and could have such claim satisfied out of the escrowed fund.[11]

It is of interest to both Chase and Indianapolis Gas that the lease be declared binding and enforceable against the City. It is against the interest of each that such lease be declared invalid and unenforceable against the City.

The Circuit Court of Appeals held in its majority opinion that Indianapolis Gas was an indispensable party to the controversy. (II R. 288.) The Court then said:

> "The rule seems to be that before such realignment may be required, the parties must be in substantial accord upon all issues presented * * *. It is not sufficient that they merely be in accord upon one issue or some of the issues." (Our emphasis.) (II R. 291.)
>
> Chase National Bank, etc., et al. vs. Citizens Gas et al., 96 F. 2d 363, 366, 367, certiorari denied 305 U. S. 600.

[11] An amount equal to the interest on the bonds, the dividends on the stock, and an amount equal to other payments to be made under the lease have been deposited in escrow, and on December 31, 1938, there was in such escrowed fund $1,217,875. (III R. 1020-1023; offered II R. 430.) Each month subsequent to December 31, 1938, amounts equal to 1/12 of the annual sum agreed to be paid by Citizens Gas under the lease have been accrued in the escrowed fund. (II R. 473, 474.)

For the first time the Circuit Court of Appeals in its opinion of June 6, 1940, as modified, held that Chase was entitled to a coercive judgment enforceable in the following order: (1) Against the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (2) against Citizens Gas; (3) against Indianapolis Gas. As pointed out in Foot Note 14, sums of money equal to the amounts charged as rental under the terms of the lease have been put in escrow pursuant to agreement. (I R. 205, 207, II R. 473, 474.) From the escrowed fund, together with funds arising from the operation of the property (II R. 542, 543), the City will be required to and is abundantly able to pay the entire judgment, and Indianapolis Gas will be wholly insulated from any liability.

The result of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is that a judgment has been ordered entered which is equally beneficial to Chase and to Indianapolis Gas, and which amounts in substance not to a judgment against Indianapolis Gas, but one in its favor.

Where federal jurisdiction is wholly dependent upon diversity of citizenship, it is the duty of the court to align the parties in accordance with their interests regardless of whether they are named as plaintiffs or defendants.

In reality there is no pretense of seeking final relief against Indianapolis Gas alone in this case. Subdivision 4 (I R. 21) of the prayer of plaintiff's bill does ask that pending the hearing and final judgment, Indianapolis Gas be restrained from entering into any contract or doing any other act to rescind or modify the lease of September 30, 1913. Chase has not attempted to procure any preliminary injunction against Indianapolis Gas, and apparently is satisfied that no danger exists that Indianapolis Gas will attempt to affect any rights which it may have in the premises.

Other subsidiary relief asked by Chase against Indianapolis Gas is either dependent upon the decision of the main question, viz: the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City, or is such relief that by reason of the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City and Indianapolis Gas, and by reason of the fund now held in escrow, Indianapolis Gas being third in order of liability will not be called upon to respond.

Looking at the judgment which the Circuit Court of Appeals has ordered entered (IV R. 1306), we see that the City is named as first in liability. It is not necessary to inquire if the taxing power of the City is available to pay the judgment ordered entered because the escrowed fund and the revenues of the City from the operation of the plant are available and sufficient to discharge the judgment.

The Circuit Court of Appeals has not restricted the judgment which it has ordered entered so that it may be contended that the coercive judgment is payable out of the general revenues of the City.[15] After the opinion was filed on June 6, 1940, by the Circuit Court of Appeals, the petitioners, in their petition for rehearing, pointed out to the Court that it had erred "in directing that a coercive judgment, presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City, be entered in favor of Chase, thus requiring municipal revenues raised by taxation to be applied, if necessary, in payment of rentals under a lease which had no municipal sanction and which was executed in direct violation of applicable Indiana statutes." It was also pointed out that there was no limitation in the opinion that the unpaid coupons and the interest on them, as well as the interest on the judgment, should be collectible only out of the revenues arising from the operation of the Indianapolis Gas property. (IV R. 1312.) On July 19, 1940, an amendment to the original opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals was filed by it. (IV R. 1335.) A petition for rehearing was addressed to the opinion as amended, and again petitioners pointed out to the Court that it had erred in directing that a coercive judgment presumably payable out of the general revenues of the City be entered in favor of Chase. (IV R. 1350.) No further change was made in the opinion.

With the money in the escrowed fund and the revenues from operation available all to be levied on first, it is crystal clear that Indianapolis Gas being third in order of liability, is more thoroughly insulated against execution than ever before. The Circuit Court of Appeals' opinion shows clearly that Chase and Indianapolis Gas have interests which are identical in respect of the validity of the lease, which is the main controversy.

If Indianapolis Gas be realigned according to its real interest in the dispute involved in this controversy, it is inevitably realigned with Chase. This is true because the City has now been held to be bound by the lease and required to pay the obligations of Indianapolis Gas under the mortgage. No matter what the form of the judgment may be, no one can realistically suppose that Indianapolis Gas has been harmed by the entry of this judgment or that it will be required to pay a single penny as a result of it. On the contrary, it will have obtained as a result of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals exactly what it sought from the commencement of this litigation: a decree requiring the City to make the payments under the lease, and as a practical proposition, exempting it from all the responsibility to Chase. The result is that Chase and Indianapolis Gas together, have maintained an action in the Federal Court where Indianapolis Gas is an indispensable party, and where the interest of Chase and Indianapolis Gas on the main controversy is a joint one.

The other subsidiary relief asked against Indianapolis Gas by Chase has either not been prosecuted beyond the allegation in the complaint and prayers, is dependent upon a decision respecting the validity of the lease, or is relief against which Indianapolis Gas is completely insulated.

The one reported decision that appears directly to involve and discuss the principle of realignment where the parties have identical interests on the principal controversy, is Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199-204, 62 L. ed. 664. The bill of complaint in that case alleged that Moses and Mary Jane Hubbard had executed a joint will purporting to dispose of certain community property after it became the separate property of Mary Jane Hubbard; that Moses Hubbard was then insane; that certain of the defendants had procured a decree of a Texas court that a trust created under that will was valid; that Mary Jane Hubbard had purported to make a separate will disposing of the residue of her separate property to defendant Cora D. Spencer; that Mary Jane Hubbard was then insane; and the bill prayed for this relief: (1) That the joint will be declared invalid; (2) that the judgment of the Texas court with respect to said will be set aside; (3) that the will of Mary Jane Hubbard be annulled, at least with respect to Cora D. Spencer; and (4) that the community property, having thus been established to be the separate estate of Mary Jane Hubbard, and not devised by her, be partitioned among her heirs at law. Plaintiffs were all of the heirs at law of Mary Jane Hubbard except Cora D. Spencer; and though she was an heir at law of Mary Jane Hubbard, she was made a party defendant. All plaintiffs were nonresidents of Texas; and all defendants were residents of Texas. If defendant Cora D. Spencer had been made a party plaintiff, then all of the heirs at law of Mary Jane Hubbard would have been plaintiffs, but diversity of citizenship would have been destroyed. The lower court held that defendant Cora D. Spencer was united in interest with and should be aligned with plaintiffs because she was an heir at law as they were. This Court, however, Mr. Justice Pitney delivering the opinion, held that while Cora D. Spencer was interested equally with plaintiffs in the partition of the Mary Jane Hubbard property, yet such interest did not control the alignment, because before there could be any partition, there would have to be a determination that the devise to Cora D. Spencer was invalid and that the joint will did not pass any property, and in that substantial issue, which had to be decided first, she was adversely interested to plaintiffs. The Court said (p. 204):

> "Upon this statement, it will be apparent that the court below erred in holding, as it did, that the defendant Cora D. Spencer should be treated as one of the plaintiffs and aligned with them for the purpose of determining the question of diversity of citizenship. Provided plaintiffs attained their first three objects, her interest would be the same as theirs with respect to the prayer for partition; but before this result could be reached plaintiffs must prevail as to their third object, and with respect to this her interest was altogether adverse to theirs. Therefore she was properly made a party defendant, that being her attitude towards the actual and substantial controversy."

(The bill was ultimately dismissed for want of jurisdiction on the ground that it involved a probate matter).

In the Sutton case the attitude of the parties toward what this Court characterized as the actual and substantial controversy determined whether there should be realignment irrespective of the attitude of the parties toward the subsidiary and dependent controversies averred in the bill.

Had the Circuit Court of Appeals followed the rule in Sutton v. English, it would have declared that Indianapolis Gas and Chase had an identity of interest on the main controversy respecting the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City, and that Indianapolis Gas, being an indispensable party, and despite the existence of subsidiary and dependent controversies, should be realigned with Chase. Diversity of citizenship would thereby have been destroyed and the District Court would have had no jurisdiction.

Judge Treanor in the first appeal of this case, in a dissenting opinion (96 F. (2d) 368), pointed out that:

> "In my opinion the only substantial, and the dominating question, presented in this suit is whether the lease is a valid and enforcible obligation against the city of Indianapolis. And as respects that question the interests of the plaintiff, as trustees of owners of bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company, and the Indianapolis Gas Company are identical. I find nothing in the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the city and the Indianapolis Gas Company to create an adversity of interest between the plaintiff and the Indianapolis Gas Company. The terms of that agreement provided for payments by the city pending a determination of the controversy between the city and the Indianapolis Gas Company as to the enforceability of the lease against the city, and expressly provides against prejudice to the rights of the Indianapolis Gas Company respecting the lease; and in general had as its objective to safeguard against any interruption in the gas utility service and to insure the ultimate payment to the Indianapolis Gas Company of all amounts due under the lease in case the lease finally should be determined to be valid and enforceable against the city."

Perhaps no stronger evidence appears in this record of the complete unanimity of interest of Indianapolis Gas and Chase than the fact that Indianapolis Gas opposed the granting of petitioners' writs and filed a brief in opposition. Presumably Indianapolis Gas will oppose the City in seeking a reversal of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

If the interests of Chase and Indianapolis Gas were not in accord, it is difficult to understand why Indianapolis Gas wished to oppose the review by this Court of a judgment allegedly against it for more than $1,000,000 or why it would seek, if it does, to have that judgment affirmed.

After the Circuit Court of Appeals had filed its opinion of June 6, 1940, as modified, the City urged in its petition for a rehearing that Indianapolis Gas should be realigned with Chase. (IV R. 1311; IV R. 1347-1349.) Realignment of Indianapolis Gas with Chase was also urged by the City in its brief in support of its petition for rehearing before the Circuit Court of Appeals. (IV R. 1377-1381.)

Viewing the case in its entirety, we see that Chase was not mistaken when it made Indianapolis Gas a party to the suit. But making Indianapolis Gas a party defendant was not insurance that the District Court thereby acquired jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship; the sole ground on which jurisdiction was asserted by Chase to exist. By arranging the parties according to their real interest in the case, viz.: the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City, it is clear that the interest of Indianapolis Gas is identical with the interest of Chase. Indianapolis Gas and Chase thus should be realigned as parties plaintiff. Diversity of citizenship would thus be destroyed, and the sole ground of jurisdiction of the Federal District Court would thereby be lost: Compare City of Dawson vs. Columbia, etc. Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 181, 49 L. ed. 713, 716; Niles-Bement-Pond Company vs. Iron Moulders Union, 254 U. S. 77, 81, 65 L. ed. 145, 148.

II.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

As we shall hereafter show, (infra p. 43) the lease was unenforceable against the City irrespective of whether it was of a burdensome character. But in no event could the initial trustee of a public charitable trust have power or authority to execute a burdensome 99 year lease.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in directing the entry of a judgment against the City when the City had not had its day in court on the question of the burdensome character of the lease of September 30, 1913. This was a denial of due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In its counterclaim the City alleged that the lease was burdensome upon the City and the property of the public charitable trust, and for that reason was a lease which the initial trustee had no power to make. The City alleged that among the burdensome provisions of the lease there were the following:

(a) The payment of annual rent in a sum largely exceeding a fair return on the fair value of the property of Indianapolis Gas;

(b) The requirement of the lease that the lessee should, during the entire term of the lease, refinance the bond issue of Indianapolis Gas in the principal amount of $6,881,000, and that if the bonds were to sell below par, to pay the difference to Indianapolis Gas;

(c) A requirement in the lease penalizing the lessee in the event that it reduce the price of gas. The agreement provided for the increase in the annual rent of $10,000 a year when gas was sold at more than 45c and less than 50c a thousand cubic feet, and an additional increase of $5,000 a year when gas was sold at 45c or less per thousand cubic feet. (I R. 186.)

Chase after unsuccessfully moving to strike these allegations of burdensomeness, then denied them. (I R. 214.) Thus the issue of the burdensome character of the lease was tendered by the City and denied by Chase, and thus was presented for determination.

While Chase initially contended that the burdensomeness of the lease was no defense and sought to have stricken from the answer and counterclaim of the City the allegations respecting the burdensomeness of the lease (II R. 317-319), ultimately when the order reserving the issue of burdensomeness for future trial was made, there was no objection or exception made to the reservation by any party. (II R. 321, 322.)

At a pre-trial conference on the 14th day of January, 1939 (IV R. 1320) counsel for the City presented a proposed form of order respecting the trial of certain issues. On January 16, 1939, counsel for Chase wrote a letter to the Honorable Robert C. Baltzell, Judge of the United States District Court, enclosing a proposed form of order directing a separate trial of certain claims and causes of action. (IV R. 1320.) In the letter counsel for Chase said that:

> "With respect to the burdensomeness of the lease, we have in large part adopted Mr. Thompson's language in his form of order as presented on Saturday."

On January 18, 1939, the District Court, without objection or exception by any party, entered an order reserving the issue of the burdensome character of the lease for future trial. The relevant portions of the order provide:

> "It is ordered that evidence shall be heard upon the issues as to whether the lease dated September 30, 1913, from the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis, or any of the property acquired by it from the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, on September 9, 1935, or against the Indianapolis Gas Company or against Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the rental under said lease or for the interest on the First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, against any of said defendants or said property, with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis in its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property viz., that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust; reserving the right to make such order or decree as may seem just and appropriate to the Court at any stage of this proceeding.
> The trial of all other issues in this case is deferred until the further order of the Court with the right reserved to refer any or all issues to a Master." (II R. 321, 322.)

The District Court, in its memorandum opinion, pointed out that only a part of the issues had been tried. It said:

> "Under the issues presented at this time for determination, the plaintiff is entitled to no money judgment against the City." (III R. 1159.)

The District Court's conclusion of law Number 10 recited

> "that the plaintiff should take nothing in this action as against the defendant City of Indianapolis under the issues presented at this time for determination." (III R. 1192.)

Counsel for Chase understood that certain issues were reserved. At the time of resting his case, Chase's counsel said:

> "Of course there are other issues to be reserved for later trial." (II R. 475.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals, in its opinion as modified, held that:

> "In making a long-term lease, a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who, in addition, may have such a lease set aside. This record discloses that the trustee was justified in selecting the mode of acquisition which it did. When the prudence point was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court, that Court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its other terms. Williams vs. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460." (III R. 1300.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals also decided that:

> "Our conclusions in this case follow: (1) The ninety-nine years lease is valid; (2) the assignment of the lease did not relieve Citizens Gas from its obligations as lessee; (3) the indemnity contract is effective; (4) the lease binds the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (5) the leasehold interest is part of the trust res; (6) the City has accepted the trust res; (7) Chase has a right to interest; (8) Chase has a right to interest on interest; and (9) Chase is entitled to interest at the rate of 5%." (III R. 1306.)

It is clear that the Circuit Court of Appeals decided the reserved issue of burdensomeness.

The City had the right to rely on the reservation of the issue of burdensomeness and to believe it would be heard on that issue, both on questions of law and fact, before judgment. The City was not bound to take in advance the precaution of putting in its evidence on this reserved issue; indeed it would have had no right to do so because of the reservation.

In Saunders vs. Shaw, et al., 244 U. S. 317, 320, 61 L. ed. 1163, 1165, it was pointed out that the record did not disclose the claim of right under the 14th Amendment until the assignment of errors filed the day before the chief justice of the state granted the writ of error. It was held that ordinarily such assertion of claim of right would not be enough.

> "But when the act complained of is the act of the Supreme Court, done unexpectedly at the end of the proceeding, when the plaintiff in error no longer had any right to add to the record, it would leave a serious gap in the remedy for infraction of constitutional rights if the party aggrieved in such a way could not come here. The defendant was not bound to contemplate a decision of the case before his evidence was heard, and therefore was not bound to ask a ruling or to take other precautions in advance."

In the cases at bar the issue of the burdensome character of the lease was expressly reserved and no evidence was introduced by the City or by anyone else on such issue. (II R. 321, 322.)

The City was not bound to contemplate a decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the reserved issue of burdensomeness before its evidence was heard. It is clear under the decisions of this Court that the City is entitled to be heard on the questions of both law and fact on the reserved issue of burdensomeness before a decision is rendered against it.

Due process of law means notice and an opportunity to be heard, and requires that a hearing be given to a party before conclusive effect is given to a prior judgment.

In Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 417, 418, 42 L. ed. 215, 221, it was said:

> "Can it be doubted that due process of law signifies a right to be heard in one's defense? If the legislative department of the government were to enact a statute conferring the right to condemn the citizen without any opportunity whatever of being heard, would it be pretended that such an enactment would not be violative of the Constitution? If this be true, as it undoubtedly is, how can it be said that the judicial department, the source and fountain of justice itself, has yet the authority to render lawful that which if done under express legislative sanction would be violative of the Constitution. If such power obtains, then the judicial department of the government sitting to uphold and enforce the Constitution is the only one possessing a power to disregard it. If such authority exists then in consequence of their establishment, to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice, courts possess the right to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent."

In Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Com., 301 U. S. 292, 304-306, 81 L. ed. 1093, 1102, it was said:

> "The right to such a hearing is one of 'the rudiments of fair play' * * * assured to every litigant by the Fourteenth Amendment as a minimal requirement. * * * There can be no compromise on the footing of convenience or expediency, or because of a natural desire to be rid of harassing delay, when that minimal requirement has been neglected or ignored."

In Ohio Water Works v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 289, 64 L. ed. 908, 914, this Court had before it the complaint of the Water Company that it was denied the right to a hearing.

Mr. Justice McReynolds, speaking for the Court, said that:

> "In all such cases, if the owner claims confiscation of his property will result, the state must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts; otherwise the order is void because in conflict with the due process clause, 14th Amendment * *.
>
> "Plaintiff in error has not had proper opportunity for an adequate judicial hearing as to confiscation; and unless such an opportunity is now available, and can be definitely indicated by the court below in the exercise of its power finally to construe laws of the state * * * the challenged order is invalid." (Our emphasis.)

The prohibitions of the 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution are measured by the settled scope of the 14th Amendment. This Court has said:

>
> French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 329, 45 L. ed. 879, 884.

In Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 101, 53 L. ed. 97, 107, it was pointed out that:

> "If any different meaning of the same words as they are used in the 14th Amendment (and in the 5th Amendment), can be conceived, none has as yet appeared in a judicial decision."

That the Circuit Court of Appeals could not, commensurate with due process of law to the City, have decided the question of burdensomeness as a matter of law, is true for at least two reasons:

1. The question of res adjudicata is a question of fact.[16]

2. The nisi prius courts are the only courts in which litigants have a right to be heard.

As to the first of the above reasons, the City was entitled to make its proof at the proper time in support of its allegations that neither the order of the Public Service Commission nor the cases relied upon by Chase were res adjudicata.

In Bluefield Water Works & Improvement Co. v. Public Service Commission of the State of West Virginia, 262 U. S. 688, 692, 67 L. ed. 1176, 1181, the United States Supreme Court said that:

> "Plaintiff in error is entitled under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the independent judgment of the Court as to both law and facts." (Our emphasis.)

It is settled law in Indiana by which this Court is bound, that whether matters adjudicated in a former action are one and the same as those alleged to have been decided in a former action, is a question of fact.

In McSweeney v. Carney, 72 Ind. 430, 433, an answer set up a former judgment. In passing on the answer, the Court said:

> "Whether said judgment was a full, final and complete adjudication of the matters set forth in the complaint was a question of fact."

In Bottorff v. Wise, 53 Ind. 32, 35, it was said:

> "In the third paragraph of the reply, it was averred that on the trial of the ejectment action between the parties to the present action, no evidence was offered or heard by the Court in relation to damages resulting from trespass or waste, and that the Court did not consider or determine any question with reference thereto. To this paragraph a demurrer was sustained, and this ruling is claimed to have been erroneous.

---

[16] There are decisions of other jurisdictions which hold that the question of res adjudicata is a mixed question of law and fact.

"The presumption is, that whatever matters were embraced by the issues were determined, but this presumption is not conclusive. Where a question of former adjudication is relied upon, it is competent for the other party to allege and prove by parol what questions were considered and determined by the Court or jury."

A long line of decisions by the Supreme and Appellate Courts of Indiana from which counsel have found no departure hold, first, that a judgment in a former suit is binding as res adjudicata in a subsequent action only between the same parties; second, that a former judgment is not res adjudicata in a subsequent action even between the same parties except when the issues in the two cases are the same, unless the exact point involved in the second case was actually litigated in the first suit and the facts have not changed; and third, that any judgment in a prior action cannot be successfully pleaded as a bar unless it is mutually binding on the parties.

In respect of the second of the above reasons it must be borne in mind that a hearing is a matter of right, and as pointed out by Mr. Justice Frankfurter in Cobbledick v. United States, 309 U. S. 323, 325, an appeal is a matter of grace. As also pointed out in the Cobbledick case (p. 325) it was not until 1889 that there was a review as of right in a criminal case. Since an appeal is a matter of grace, a decision by an appellate tribunal alone is not a satisfaction of due process of law as contemplated by the Fifth Amendment when the privilege of appeal may be taken away at any time.

A hearing in a trial court is a matter of right which is guaranteed and protected by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and such hearing cannot be in an appellate tribunal.

It is a fundamental rule that in judicial proceedings affecting rights there shall be given an opportunity to be heard before any judgment, decree, order or demand shall be given and established.

Kuntz v. Sumption, Treasurer, 117 Ind. 1, 5.

For the Circuit Court of Appeals to hold that the lease is valid and binding on the City as trustee and on the trust property, and thereby to impose upon the City a liability of $45,000,000, and to hold that the lease is enforceable against the City as successor trustee and the trust property, when the question of the burdensome character of such lease was expressly reserved without objection or exception of any party made at the time (I R. 321), and when the City has had no opportunity to be heard either upon the law or the facts of this issue, is a denial to it of due process of law which is guaranteed to all by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

If the Circuit Court of Appeals has this power, then the judicial department of the Government is the only department possessing the power to deny a hearing to litigants. If such power exists in the courts, then in consequence of their establishment to compel obedience to law and to enforce justice they possess the power to inflict the very wrongs which they were created to prevent. Judicial proceedings cannot be valid unless they proceed upon inquiry and render judgment only after trial. On the reserved issue of burdensomeness in the instant case there was no inquiry; there was no trial.

If the Circuit Court of Appeals were thus permitted to decide questions reserved by the District Courts for future trial, the whole purpose of the Rules of Civil Procedure could be abrogated. Rule 42 (b) grants to District Courts the right to reserve issues as was done in this case. The purpose of the trial court in reserving an issue is to simplify procedure and to minimize the cost of litigation. The rules in those respects are beneficial to litigants. They are beneficial, however, only if litigants' rights are protected, but if a Circuit Court of Appeals can finally determine a question which was reserved as was done in this case without an opportunity to be heard, then the rights of litigants may be seriously imperiled by reliance on the reservation. Compare: Montgomery Ward Co. vs. Duncan, — U. S. — (decided Dec. 9, 1940).

Nothing short of a hearing to the City on the reserved issue of burdensomeness will satisfy the requirement of due process of law. No party should have its cause determined against it as has the City in this case without its day in court.

It is no answer to the argument of the City that it was denied due process to assert as does Chase (br. p. 51) that the decision of the Indiana Public Service Commission forecloses the question of burdensomeness. The Circuit Court of Appeals did not decide and could not have decided, as we point out hereafter (infra, p. 67), that the Public Service Commission possesses or could exercise judicial power. It expressly recognized that proceedings before the Public Service Commission were administrative in character. (IV R. 1286.)

Nor is it an answer to the City's argument that it was denied due process to contend as does Chase (br. p. 52) that the Williams case (206 Ind. 448) forecloses the question of burdensomeness. The scope and effect of the issues in the Williams case could not be passed on initially by the appellate court. In passing, we point out three of these reasons. First, Chase's predecessor trustee and the City were co-defendants in the Williams case and no issue was raised between them. Thus neither could plead res adjudicata. Second, since the decision in the Williams case the facts have changed decisively in that the City as successor trustee of a public charitable trust has taken over the trust property. Third, the causes of action in the two cases were different and the questions here involved were not actually litigated. These questions were either questions of fact or mixed questions of law and fact. The City had a right to be heard upon these issues.

It is not an answer to the City's argument that it was denied due process to say that the motion of Chase to strike from the City's answer and counterclaim the allegations of burdensomeness (Chase br. p. 47) was a hearing on such issue of burdensomeness. As pointed out while Chase initially contended that burdensomeness was no defense, when the order of reservation of that issue was reserved, no objection or exception was made. Furthermore, no evidence was introduced respecting the burdensome character of the lease. The Circuit Court of Appeals did not pass on the denial by the District Court of the motion to strike. The ruling of the District Court was obviously not reversible error because the issue of burdensomeness was reserved.

In the initial briefs of both Chase and the City, it was pointed out to the Circuit Court of Appeals that the question of burdensomeness was reserved by the District Court for future trial. In the brief of the City in support of its petition for a rehearing, it was again pointed out that the issue of burdensomeness had been reserved by the District Court, and appropriate excerpts from the initial briefs of Chase and the City were set out wherein the reservation of the issue had been called to the Court's attention. (IV R. 1374, 1375, 1376.)

It is clear the City was denied due process of law by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

III.

LEASE UNENFORCEABLE AGAINST CITY.

The facts of this case lend no support to the contention of Chase that the City is bound by the terms of the lease for any reason.

Some of these facts are:

(1) A valid and enforceable trust was created by the franchise contract of 1905 and the other relevant trust instruments.

(2) The Settlors of the trust were the public spirited citizens of the City who subscribed for the stock of Citizens Gas.

(3) The beneficiaries of the trust were the gas users of the City.

(4) The trust res was the property and plant of Citizens Gas formerly owned by Consumers Gas Trust Company.

(5) Citizens Gas was the initial trustee of such trust with a fixed date for the expiration of its trusteeship, viz: 1939, or as soon thereafter as the transfer of the trust res to the City could be made.

(6) The City, a municipal corporation, was the successor trustee.

Todd v. Citizens Gas Co., 46 Fed. (2d) 855.

(7) No part of the property of Indianapolis Gas and no lease on any part of that property was a part of the trust res. Indeed, one of the underlying purposes of the organization of Citizens Gas was to provide a competitor for Indianapolis Gas.

(8) The trust instruments contain no authorization to lease or acquire the property of a competitor.

(9) The City did not sign or execute the lease of September 30, 1913. The only parties to the lease are the lessor, Indianapolis Gas, and the lessee, Citizens Gas.

(10) The City is not named as a party obligated by the lease.

(11) The City is not an assignee of the lease. An assignment was tendered and rejected. The evidence shows that this assignment was made in a separate written instrument, because the City had advised Citizens Gas prior to September 9, 1935, the date of the transfer to the City as successor trustee, that it would not accept an assignment of the lease. (II R. 464.)

(12) No ordinance was ever adopted by the Common Council nor any resolution ever adopted by the Board of Public Works of the City authorizing the execution of the lease, or ratifying it or agreeing to be bound by its terms. No action was ever taken by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities accepting the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms. (City Stip. X 1, 2, 3, 4, III R. 982, 986, offered, II R. 424, 425.)

(13) The action of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City rejecting the lease was ratified by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City. (III R. 1017, 1018, offered II R. 429.)

(14) The City has not accepted a part of a trust res and refused to accept another part. It has accepted the entire trust res and rejected a lease which it claims the initial trustee had no power to impose upon the City.

(15) The complaint in this case will be searched in vain for an averment that the lease is valid. The theory of Chase is that the City is estopped to deny the enforceability against it of the lease and is bound by the principle of res adjudicata, which theory necessarily implies that the lease initially was unenforceable against the City.

The Circuit Court of Appeals also erred in refusing to follow the Indiana decisions which hold that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes.

The lease was for a term of ninety-nine years. The Indiana statutes limit the making of such contracts to a term of not longer than twenty-five years.[17]

Section 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 provides that:

[17] The relevant portions of Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 appear as an appendix to this brief.

> "Any city * * * may enter into a contract with * * * any corporation * * * to furnish such city * * * and its inhabitants with * * * heat or light * * * provided that no such contract shall be entered into by any such city * * * for furnishing such city * * * and its inhabitants with * * * heat or light * * * for a term longer than twenty-five years." (Our emphasis.)

The same section also provides that any such contract by a city of the first-class, to which Indianapolis belongs, shall be first agreed to by the Board of Public Works, and thereafter there must be an ordinance of the common council approving and affirming it.

On September 30, 1913, when the lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas was executed, Indianapolis Gas owned a complete by-product coke plant which was then producing artificial gas and a complete system of distribution mains, several hundred miles in length, and was furnishing gas to more than 41,000 consumers in Indianapolis. Its property was twice the size of that of Citizens Gas. (II R. 621, offered II R. 327.) When operations commenced under the lease all of these facilities were immediately used in supplying gas to the consumers residing on the lines of the Indianapolis Gas. It will thus be seen that through the medium of the lease there was an agreement to supply these 41,000 consumers in Indianapolis, or such of them as continued to take gas through the lines of Indianapolis Gas, with a supply of heat for the length of the term of the lease.

The ninety-nine year lease in question here was clearly within the terms of the statutes referred to, because the lease was a contract for supplying the city and its inhabitants with gas, heat, and light. It was not authorized or approved by the Board of Public Works or by an ordinance of the common council. (III R. 982, 983, offered II R. 424.)

nicipality within the State of Indiana shall have the power to operate and/or manage any utility without the approval or consent of the Public Service Commission or the intervention of such Commission in any way whatsoever. Thus the rates which any municipally owned utility may charge its consumers is not subject to the control of the Public Service Commission such as the rates to be charged by privately owned utilities; nor would a municipality be limited to a reasonable return upon its investment. The only check upon the rates charged by a municipality for its utility facilities is the weight of public opinion. Thus, both Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 serve as a protective shield against unreasonable contracts. The lease in question here has no provisions for modification of the lease rental in accordance with any economic change and no remedy is open to the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust, if they are bound by the terms of this lease, for any adjustment as to rentals paid lessor Indianapolis Gas irrespective of what the economic conditions may be between now and the year 2012, when the lease expires. Even though artificial gas were to be displaced by some other fuel, the lease rentals would go on.

Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1925 clearly indicate and define the public policy of the State of Indiana to be against contracts by municipal corporations for supplying the City or its inhabitants with gas and other utility commodities for a term longer than 25 years. The lease in question here is such a contract, is against public policy and is void.

A contract or lease by which a municipal corporation is sought to be bound, which has been made in violation of the Indiana statutes, is void and cannot be ratified.

Gaslight etc. Co. v. City of New Albany, 156 Ind. 406, 415;

City of Indianapolis v. Wann, Receiver, 144 Ind. 175, 187;

Hamer vs. City of Huntington, 215 Ind. 594, 600, 601.

In the first above cited case, the Indiana Supreme Court said:

> "It is elementary that municipal officers have no powers beyond those expressly conferred by statute or necessarily implied to enable them to make effective the powers granted or to protect the public welfare. Therefore, when they attempt an act that is beyond the limit of their power, the act has no official sanction and is no more effectual than if performed by non-official persons. As a municipal act it is wholly void and being void, nothing of substance may flow from it. * * * 'When a municipal council is authorized by statute to contract for a period not exceeding ten years, its contract for twenty years or for an indefinite time cannot be sustained as a contract for ten years but is entirely void * * *.'
>
> Our conclusion is that appellee's ordinance of March 19, 1888 so far as it was attempted thereby to contract with appellant for lighting the streets and other public places of the city for a term of twenty-three years, was in violation of the Act of 1883 and was therefore ultra vires and void."

The lease being for a term of ninety-nine years, was absolutely void because the Indiana statutes limited the power of the City to contract, even with the approval of the Board of Public Works and the Common Council, to a term not longer than twenty-five years.

In leasing property, trustees are required to act with as great fidelity toward the remainderman in whom the title vests at the termination of the trust as towards those entitled to rents and profits during its continuance. Any other rule would jeopardize every estate so held and give countenance to the disregard by those in whom confidence has been reposed of the very object had in creating a trust.

In re: Hubbell, 135 Ia. 637, 113 N. W. 512;
21 Ruling Case Law, Sec. 153, p. 1301.

In the Hubbell case it was said that:

> "It will be noted that in no case to be found in the books after Denagree v. Walker (Ill. 1905), 73 N. E. 409, has a lease by trustees for ninety-nine years unless expressly authorized been approved." (Our emphasis.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals was also in error in refusing to follow the Indiana decisions and the decisions of this Court which hold that a grant of right or privilege by a municipality is strictly construed against the grantee, and that whatever is not unequivocally granted is withheld —nothing passes by implication. The Circuit Court of Appeals said that:

> "The power to execute this ninety-nine years lease was authorized by the Commission in 1913." (113 F. 2d 217, 221.)

The Court refers to the Public Service Commission of Indiana. Thus it apparently holds that the act creating the Public Service Commission gave to it the power to abrogate the contract between the City and Citizens Gas as expressed in the trust instruments, including the corporate charter of Citizens Gas.

The Citizens Gas charter was neither legally abrogated nor legally altered by the enactment of the statute creating the Commission. (Chap. 76, Acts 1913.) In Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. 2d 855, 868, the Circuit Court of Appeals said:

> "We find nothing in the language of the statute (Chapter 76, Acts 1913) or in the decisions of Wisconsin prior to its enactment which would indicate an intention on the part of the Legislature that a public utility, by surrendering its franchise, might thereby destroy vested property rights which it had voluntarily created, and release itself from obligations respecting those rights which it had voluntarily undertaken before the existence of the franchise and as an inducement to the municipality to make the grant of the privilege." (Our emphasis.)

The proposition that the charter of a corporation such as Citizens Gas cannot be changed by subsequently enacted laws unless there is reserve power so to do, is settled by the case of Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.

As pointed out before in this brief, the Public Service Commission had no power to determine the validity of the lease and could bind no one on that proposition.

The Circuit Court of Appeals held in its opinion (p. 225) that:

> "The terms of the trust (the franchise contract and the articles of incorporation) referred generally to the duties of the trustee and the rights of the beneficiaries * * *."

On page 227 the Court said:

> "The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. In truth the terms of the trust remain silent on the subject of trustee's powers. The only applicable language relates to duties and not to powers."

The trust instruments were the franchise contracts with the City and Citizens Gas, and the articles of incorporation of Citizens Gas. Since part of the trust instruments were the franchise contract from the City which was a grant of right for the use of the streets and alleys for the laying of gas mains, and the other part of the trust instruments was the corporate charter of Citizens Gas carrying out the directions of the franchise contract respecting rights, powers and duties, the rule announced by this Court in Piedmont Power & Light Co. vs. Town of Graham, et al., 253 U. S. 193, 194, 195, 64 L. ed. 855, 857, and the rule announced by the Indiana Supreme Court in Indianapolis Cable Railroad Co. v. Citizens Street Railroad Co., 127 Ind. 369, 390, are controlling. In the latter case the Indiana Supreme Court said (p. 390):

"A grant made by the commonwealth or by a municipal corporation under authority from the commonwealth is to be taken most strongly against the grantee and nothing is to be taken by implication against the public except what necessarily flows from the nature of the terms of the grant."

In the Piedmont Power case, this Court said that:

"Grants of rights and privileges by a state or municipality are strictly construed, and whatever is not unequivocally granted, is withheld—nothing passes by implication."[18]

Thus, if the terms of the trust remain silent on a trustee's powers, as the Circuit Court of Appeals said, and which is the fact, the power to make the lease cannot be implied.

It is not without significance that the trust instruments contain detailed instructions respecting many matters but failed to grant the power, either expressly or by reasonable implication, for the making of a ninety-nine year lease. The instruments contained detailed instructions respecting the retirement of the stock (I R. 84); the power to purchase gas mains of Consumers Gas Trust Company (I R. 85); the manner in which work could be done in the streets, service pipes laid, mains laid (I R. 87); the materials which were to be used; the quality of the gas; the price of the gas (I R. 88); the refilling of excavations; the maintenance of an emergency fund (I R. 89); the type of meters to be used; the tests for meters. (I R. 92.) The articles of incorporation of Citizens Gas provided in detail the order in which the earnings should be used (I R. 98); and the duties of the officers. (I R. 103.)

It is also quite significant that both the franchise (I R. 83) and the articles of incorporation (I R. 97) provided that any member of the Board of Trustees may be removed by the Marion Circuit Court upon the showing that the trustee is an employee or holder of any of the securities or capital stock of any other company organized for the purpose of manufacturing or delivering gas to consumers in the vicinity of the City of Indianapolis.

Citizens Gas, in its franchise contract, bound itself to extend its lines and mains so that "all the inhabitants of said city may be supplied with gas for fuel and lighting purposes when they may reasonably require the same." (I R. 89, 90.)

It seems wholly unreasonable to assume, as the Circuit Court of Appeals has done, that there was implied power in Citizens Gas to execute a ninety-nine year lease when no word appears in the trust instruments granting it that power, either expressly or by necessary implication, and that when the trust instruments themselves so completely circumscribe the authority of the grantees in respect of other matters less important to the welfare of the corporation and beneficiaries of the trust than the power to harness the trust estate with a ninety-nine year lease. Such implied power in the trust instruments is also wholly inconsistent with the obligation of Citizens Gas to extend its lines to all citizens of Indianapolis. The answer to all of this is that there was no power, either express or implied, to enter into a ninety-nine year lease.

IV.

RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD CO. vs. TOMPKINS.

The Circuit Court of Appeals erred in refusing to follow the rule announced by this Court in Erie Railroad Co. vs. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 78, 82 L. ed. 1188, 1194, in that it refused to follow the controlling Indiana decisions which reach back in an unbroken line to early statehood and extend to the latest decision of the state's highest appellate tribunal.[19]

1. Doctrine of Estoppel sought to be asserted by Chase.

Chase alleged in its complaint and asserts in its brief that the City is estopped by its conduct from denying the enforceability of the 99 year lease against it. The conduct upon which Chase relies is as follows:

(a) Chase contends that Citizens Gas is estopped, thereby through privity of estate it alleges the City also to be estopped. The chief reasons relied upon by Chase for estoppel against Citizens Gas is the authentication of bonds of Indianapolis Gas by the trustee and their sale by Citizens Gas to reimburse it up to 90% of expenditures for extensions and improvements made to the property, the operation by Citizens Gas of the Indianapolis Gas property, and the acceptance and enjoyments of the profits from such operation. (I R. 11, 12.)

(b) The resolution of the Board of Public Works of the City dated March 20, 1929. (I R. 12, 18.)

(c) The payment by the City of the bondholders and the common and preferred stockholders of Citizens Gas. (I R. 15, 19.)

(d) The issuance and sale by the City of its revenue bonds. (I R. 14, 15, 19.)

(e) The transfer to the City by Citizens Gas of the trust property on September 9, 1935. (I R. 16, 19, 298.)

(f) The resolution and agreement for temporary use by the City of Indianapolis Gas property. (I R. 17, 297.)

---

[19] The Circuit Court of Appeals made no express holding on the question of estoppel in pais but apparently relied upon such estoppel and Chase, in its brief, attempts to assert estoppel against Citizens Gas and the City. (Brief pp. 10, 11, 118-132.)

(g) The City's performance under the lease. (In reality this is the same as (f) above.)

(h) The execution by the City of an agreement to Citizens Gas, indemnifying it against certain liability.

(i) The alleged approval by the attorneys for the City of a bond circular issued in connection with the sale of the City's revenue bonds.

(j) The laches of the City in denying the validity of the lease and its binding effect for the full term.

Attention is directed to the fact that all claimed acts of estoppel except (a) and (b) occurred after 1931.

Reference will be made to the various alleged acts claimed to estop the City in the same order as presented above.

(a) Citizens Gas is not estopped by its conduct and therefore the City is not estopped through privity of estate.

By the terms of the mortgage Indianapolis Gas could reimburse itself up to ninety per cent of the amounts expended for the property by authentication and sale of its bonds. By the terms of the lease Citizens Gas was permitted to do likewise. Chase contends that certain representations made in connection with the sale of these bonds by Citizens Gas and that certain statements appearing in Poor & Moody's Manuals estop it.

The representations spoken of were made to Blodgett & Company by J. D. Forrest, who was General Manager and Secretary of Citizens Gas. The bonds were sold to Blodgett & Company as investment brokers and not to the public.

There is absolutely no showing and not even an attempt to show that any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas knew of or relied upon any of such statements made by For[illegible]st or those which appear in Poor & Moody's Manuals, nor is there any proof in the record that any officer or director of Citizens Gas knew of or ratified the statements made by Forrest.

The circulars issued by Blodgett & Company do not support Chase's contention that Citizens Gas is estopped.

Mr. Chester M. Clark, who was associated with Stone & Webster and Blodgett, Inc. (II R. 555), said that those two corporations had the custody of the files of the old partnership of Blodgett & Company. Mr. Clark testified that all he knew about Exhibits 3 to 12 (II R. 593-615) which consisted of certain circulars and other material, was that he found them in the files of Stone & Webster and Blodgett, Inc., and that they had been turned over by Blodgett & Company in about 1926; that he had no personal knowledge of who prepared them, and that the only information in connection with those papers that he had was that which he could gather from the face of the papers themselves. (II R. 568.)

Mr. Baker, who became associated with Blodgett & Company in 1919 and subsequently became an officer, director and shareholder of Stone & Webster and Blodgett, Inc. (II R. 569), testified on cross examination that he assumed that the lease was available to the counsel of his firm at the time that his firm bought bonds of Indianapolis Gas. (II R. 584.) Subdivision 32 of the lease was read to Mr. Baker. (II R. 584.) Subdivision 32 provided that:

> "In event it should be determined by a court of final jurisdiction that this contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of term created and that such term is in excess of the authority of either party hereto to contract, then this lease shall nevertheless be binding upon the parties hereto for the longest term for which the parties hereto might lawfully contract." (II R. 584.)

He was then asked if that was not a red flag of warning as to the question of whether the lease was valid for a term of ninety-nine years, and he answered: "It would seem so to me." (II R. 484.)

In connection with the purchase by his company of Citizens Gas bonds, he said that he remembered discussing the franchise between the City and Citizens Gas on various occasions (II R. 585); he knew that the franchise required the Citizens Gas Company to be wound up twelve years before the bonds became due in 1952. (II R. 586.)

When asked on direct examination whether or not purchasers of bonds relied upon statements contained in the circular, Mr. Baker said: "I cannot tell you the working of the minds of the buyers." (II R. 575.)

(b) The resolution of the Board of Public Works does not estop the City. (II R. 327.) The resolution makes no mention of the lease. The demand of the City made by the resolution is limited to the right, title, interest and ownership to the gas plant, mains and property of Citizens Gas which it acquired through the medium of the instruments creating the public charitable trust. The resolution of Citizens Gas (II R. 673, offered II R. 237) recognized the trust created by the franchise and the articles of association of Citizens Gas and the right of the City to take over the property and the assets of Citizens Gas.

Citizens Gas recognized the limited scope of the resolution of the Board of Works of the City. It is a fair inference to be drawn from the two resolutions, that there was no intention to include the lease.

(c) The paying off by the City of the bondholders and the common and preferred shareholders of Citizens Gas is of no aid in asserting estoppel against the City. In the exercise by the City of its right to take over the trust res and its discharge of the obligations of the corporation to the bondholders and stockholders of Citizens Gas, the City did no more than to accept the property of a public charitable trust and to perform the conditions precedent to the acquisition of that trust property as such conditions were laid down in the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas (46 F. 2d 855).

(d) In the sale of its revenue bonds the City did nothing which affords a basis for an estoppel against it. The revenue bonds were not sold to the public. No revenue bondholder is a party to this action. Chase seeks to base its estoppel on statements appearing in an advertising circular issued by the brokers who sold the revenue bonds.

The Boards of Trustees and Directors of the Utility District are the only agencies having any power to deal with the trust res. Such agencies never authorized anyone to make any representations in connection with the bond circular or in the bond circular itself, but expressly advised a representative of the bond purchasers that the City had no authority to do anything in connection with the issuance of the bonds except to sell them. (II R. 510-512, offered II R. 420; II R. 436-440.)

No bondholder of the revenue bonds is a party to this action.

(e) The transfer of the trust res to the City by Citizens Gas on September 9, 1935, neither amounted to an acceptance by the City of the leased property nor does it form the basis of an estoppel. Chase contends that the City's acceptance of the trust property included acceptance of the leasehold estate and the consequent obligations under the lease, and that the City accepted an assignment of the lease. The City accepted the trust property and expressly rejected an assignment of the lease. The Circuit Court of Appeals, in speaking of the assignment of the 99 year lease tendered to the City (together with three other instruments of transfer), said:

> "These instruments were received, retained and duly recorded by the City."

On August 27, 1935, Mr. Sparks, one of the attorneys for Citizens Gas, was advised that the City would reject the lease. (II R. 464.) This knowledge was one of the inducing reasons why four separate instruments were executed, one of which was the assignment of the 99 year lease. The City rejected the lease on September 9, 1935, on the very day that the assignment was tendered (II R.

468), and on the same day that the assignment was tendered, the Board of Directors for Utilities adopted a resolution rejecting it. (I R. 139.)

When the City served on Indianapolis Gas a rejection of the lease there was no doubt in the minds of Indianapolis Gas and its counsel that the City had in fact rejected the lease.

The claim by Chase that the City accepted an assignment of the lease is an afterthought of Chase's counsel.

This fact is conclusively established by action taken at a special meeting of the Board of Directors of Indianapolis Gas held on November 6, 1935. (City Exhibit 7C, III R. 1013 Offered II R. 428.)

That meeting was attended by both Mr. Ewbank and Mr. Higgins, counsel for Indianapolis Gas in this case, who were members of the Board. The following motion was unanimously adopted:

> "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Company be instructed to formally notify The Chase National Bank of New York, as Trustee of the First Mortgage Bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company, of the refusal of the City of Indianapolis to accept the assignment of the ninety-nine years lease made and executed in 1913 between this Company and the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, and to further advise said Bank, Trustee, of the formal development and situations surrounding the present operation of the Company's property, by sending them a letter stating substantially as follows:
>
> The Chase National Bank,
> 11 Broad Street,
> New York, N. Y.
>
> In Re: The Indianapolis Gas Company
> Deed of Trust dated Oct. 1, 1902.
>
> Gentlemen:
>
> Pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of The Indianapolis Gas Company, the following facts relative to the property and business of the Company are sent to you as Trustee of our First Mortgage 5% Bonds.

Assuming to act under legislative authority and pursuant to provisions of the city franchise and articles of incorporation of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, the City of Indianapolis has taken over the property of that Company, and is now operating the same by its Board of Directors for Utilities, and is assuming to enter upon the discharge of the obligations of the Citizens Gas Company to its bondholders and stockholders. The City of Indianapolis, however, has refused to accept an assignment of the ninety-nine year lease, executed on September 30, 1913, by this Company to the Citizens Gas Company, by which all the property of this Company was leased to the Citizens Gas Company.

Under the circumstances, this Company, through action of its Board of Directors, entered into a stipulation with the said City of Indianapolis, by which it was provided that the City, through its Board of Directors for Utilities, will continue the operation of the property of this Company for a period of six months pending negotiations, and that they will pay an amount for rental for said period equal to the amount of rental payable according to the terms of the lease. Preliminary meetings between representatives of this Company and representatives of the City have resulted in nothing definite.

Our Board of Directors is attempting to safeguard the legal position of both the bondholders and stockholders of the Company and have retained Hon. Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, Ohio, as additional counsel. The Indianapolis Gas Company will be pleased to receive any suggestion you desire to make in the premises.

Very truly yours,

THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY,

By .....Secretary."

(III R. 1013 offered II R. 428.)

There is also no doubt that Chase understood exactly what the City had done or was trying to do. In a letter dated September 19, 1935, addressed to William G. Irwin, President of Indianapolis Gas, and signed by Mr. Beardslee, Assistant Trust Officer of Chase, the following statements are made:

> "Indianapolis Gas Company First Consolidated 5% Bonds due October 1, 1932.
>
> Dear Sir:
>
> We are receiving numerous inquiries from holders of bonds of the above described issue with respect to newspaper reports that the City Utilities District is attempting to abrogate the lease made by your Company with the Citizens Gas Company in 1913. Bondholders state that such action would materially affect the security of their bonds and we would be obliged if you will be good enough to write us such information as we can pass on to bondholders with respect to this situation.
> We will also be obliged if you will forward us a copy of the above mentioned lease and also advise us what action is being taken to protect the interests of the bondholders." (Our emphasis.) (III R. 926 offered II R. 369.)

At the trial of the cause, it was admitted that the instruments, which included the assignment of the lease, "were presented to the Recorder of Marion County, Indiana for recordation * * * on the 9th day of September, 1935." (II R. 330.)

When the entire transaction is viewed, there was not then and cannot be now, any doubt in the minds of anyone that the City intended to and did reject the lease.

(f) Neither the resolution nor the agreement for temporary use by the City of the property of Indianapolis Gas affords a basis for an estoppel against the City.

The reason for the operation by the City of the property of Indianapolis Gas was solely to prevent the interruption of service to the gas consumers in Indianapolis. (I R. 200.) It was expressly provided that the City was not acting under the lease or to be considered as acting under it, or as having adopted it in any respect or as having recognized said lease as an obligation in any manner. The resolution also provided that if Indianapolis Gas would not permit such temporary use, that the City would at once discontinue such use and relinquish such temporary possession to Indianapolis Gas as the City may have temporarily exercised over the property. The City and Indianapolis Gas on March 2, 1936, extended the temporary use agreement of September 9, 1935. (I R. 205, 206, 207.)

By the March 2d agreement the City agreed to deposit in escrow and has deposited since said time, a sum of money equal to each semi-annual installment of interest on the Indianapolis Gas bonds and dividends on said stock. The agreement also provided that the payments made thereunder were made without prejudice to the City's possession respecting the invalidity of the lease, and that the operation of the property or the payments made pursuant to the agreement were not to constitute an admission that the lease was valid or binding on the City or its Department of Utilities. (I R. 207.) Chase was advised on March 11, 1936, of this agreement.

(g) The City's performance under the lease is no ground for estoppel. The City's operation of the property as pointed out under (f) above was under an agreement with Indianapolis Gas whereby the City did not admit nor was it to be considered as having admitted the validity of the lease. Chase cannot sit by after knowing of the agreement and permit the City to deposit money for the ultimate benefit of its bondholders, and at the same time read out of the agreement for temporary use the provision that performance under the agreement is not to affect the rights of the City.

Indeed Chase is seeking, on the one hand, to reach that fund for the payment of interest and interest on interest on its bonds and at the same time is seeking to repudiate the agreement through its counsel by asserting that the operation of the property of Indianapolis Gas pursuant to the terms of that agreement estops the City from denying the invalidity of the lease although in the agreement it was contracted otherwise.

(h) The City is not estopped, as Chase contends, by the execution of the indemnity agreement to Citizens Gas. A reading of this agreement clearly demonstrates that it was not intended in any sense to impose any liability on the City in respect of the lease. What it did bind the City to do was to protect Citizens Gas from any liability on account of pending actions at law or equity and "on account of any actions or suits which may hereafter be brought against said Company arising from any or all acts or actions or omissions to act on the part of said Company (Citizens Gas) of any nature whatever."

Citizens Gas attempted to assign the lease to the City. There was therefore no omission to act on its part which would even fall within the literal meaning of the language of the indemnifying agreement.

The conclusive answer to Chase's contention is that the indemnifying agreement was not intended to bind the City to the lease because it was a part of an entire transaction of acts done on the same day (September 9, 1935), and one of those acts was a rejection of the lease.

(i) Chase also seeks to predicate an estoppel on an alleged approval by the attorneys for the City of a bond circular issued by brokers in connection with the sale of the City's revenue bonds.

The testimony of Robert E. Simond, Vice-President of Halsey, Stuart & Company (II R. 510-512 offered II R. 420), and the testimony of Brodehurst Elsey, Vice-President of the Board of Directors for Utilities (II R. 436-440, shows that Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Company requested the City to approve a bond circular and that both brokers were advised by Mr. Elsey, in the presence of one of the attorneys for the City and its Department of Utilities, that the City had no power to do anything in connection with the sale of revenue bonds except to advertise and sell such bonds and that the City would not approve any bond circular whatever.

Mr. Simond sent a copy of a proposed bond circular to Mr. Albert L. Rabb, one of the attorneys for the City and its Department of Utilities. On cross examination Mr. Simond said that the circular was mailed to Mr. Rabb individually and that this was done because of the prior conference in which he had been advised that the City would not approve the circular. (II R. 511-512.)

(j) Chase also contends that the City is precluded by its laches from asserting the invalidity against it of the lease. As pointed out hereinabove, as early as August in 1935, the City advised Citizens Gas that it would reject an assignment of the lease. Also, as pointed out above, at the time of the transfer of the property comprising the trust res that the City by resolution of its Board of Directors rejected the assignment of the lease and served such rejection on both Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas. It is difficult to understand how the City could be guilty of laches when nearly a month prior to the time it exercised its right to take over the trust property it notified Citizens Gas that it would reject an assignment of the lease and when on the very day that the property was transferred to the City it rejected the assignment of the lease and notified both Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas of such rejection and that it would not be bound by the terms thereof.

The rule in Indiana is that the doctrine of estoppel has no application where the other party was not influenced by the acts pleaded as an estoppel.

Ross, et al. v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150;
Hosford v. Johnson, et al., 74 Ind. 479, 485.

In the case first above cited, the Indiana Supreme Court had before it the question of estoppel by conduct. It said:

> "The doctrine of estoppel in pais has no application * * * where the other party was not influenced by the acts pleaded as an estoppel * * *.
>
> Persons who set up acts of another as an estoppel must show that they acted upon the same and were influenced thereby to do some act which would work injury if such other party is allowed to deny the truth of what he did."

In the Hosford case the Indiana Supreme Court said:

> "To constitute an estoppel by conduct there must be: (1) A representation or concealment of material facts; (2) the representation must have been made with knowledge of the facts; (3) the party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter; (4) it must have been made with the intention that the other party should act upon it; (5) the other party must have been induced to act upon it."

It is also well settled in Indiana that an estoppel against a municipal corporation cannot be founded upon acts done by municipal officers in excess of their authority. Anyone who deals with public officers is charged with notice that such officers possess only limited, naked statutory powers, and must at his peril ascertain the scope of their lawful authority. No person dealing with officers of a municipal corporation can found a claim against the municipal corporation on the basis of an estoppel where that estoppel necessarily rests on acts done by officers in excess of their statutory authority.

In Platter v. The Board of Commissioners of Elkhart County, 103 Ind. 360, 381, the Board of County Commissioners wished to relocate the county poor farm. They sold the old and purchased a new one. Upon change of membership of the Board, a proper offer and demand of rescission of the contract was made. After refusal of the Board's offer and demand of rescission the Board sued. Among the answers made, estoppel was urged.

The Court said:

> "The appellant can not successfully build upon the doctrine of estoppel. For this conclusion there are at least two satisfactory reasons: First. He dealt with public officers with limited, naked statutory powers; he was bound, at his peril, to ascertain the scope of their authority, and can not found any claim upon acts done by those officers in excess of their statutory authority. This general rule is thus stated by the Supreme Court of the United States: 'Individuals as well as courts must take notice of the extent of authority conferred by law upon a person acting in an official capacity.' The rule is well established by our own decisions. Union School Tp. v. First Nat'l Bank, 102 Ind. 464; Reeve School Tp. v. Dodson, 98 Ind. 497; Art v. Jackson School Tp., 90 Ind. 101; Pine Civil Tp. v. Huber, etc., Co., 83 Ind. 121.
>
> "The disobedience of a statute by a public officer creates an incurable difficulty. It can not be remedied or removed by subsequent confirmation of the original acts, whatever the form the confirmation assumes. There is well defined distinction between public and private corporations, and the general doctrine of estoppel does not apply to the former class of corporations. Union School Tp. v. First Nat'l Bank, supra; Cummins v. City of Seymour, 79 Ind. 491; Driftwood, etc., T. P. Co. v. Board, etc., 72 Ind. 226.
>
> "A public corporation, such as a county or city, is composed of the inhabitants of the locality, and the officers are not agents in the strict sense of the term, but are persons acting in an official capacity."

In Cummins v. City of Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 496, in speaking of the liability of a municipal corporation, the Court said:

> "'If the act done is committed outside of the authority and power of the corporation as conferred by statute, the corporation is not liable whether its officers directed its performance or it was done without any express direction or command.' "[20]

The power of a city in Indiana to sell property devoted to any public use is restricted, and to enable the city to make a sale of such property, special authority must be granted to it by the Legislature. Property so held is held upon a trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of the city. The city, as trustee for such use, cannot by an unauthorized act destroy that trust.

Lake County Water & Light Co. v. Walsh, 160 Ind. 32, 39.

This same wholesome principle is applicable when an attempt is made to impose upon a trust a large annual obligation for 99 years without statutory authorization. There was no power conferred by legislative act upon the initial trustee of this public charitable trust to execute a 99 year lease.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there can be no estoppel against the City to deny the enforceability against it of the lease. There is no proof in this case that any act or representation made by either Citizens Gas or the City was relied upon by any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas nor is there any proof that any such bondholder purchased his bonds on the faith of such acts or representations. (II R. 340, 344, 355, 357, 361, 362, 397, 568, 584, 589.) There is no proof that any act of Chase was based on any representation made by either Citizens Gas or the City.

So far as the evidence in this case shows, the last purchase made of Indianapolis Gas bonds was made in 1951 except those purchased by Citizens Gas in 1952. (Stip. 9, II R. 618, 620; Stip. 10, II R. 627.)

2. Order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana.

It is the contention of Chase in its complaint (I R. 8, 9, 10) that the order of the Public Service Commission entered on the 1st day of October, 1913, approving the lease (I R. 116-122) determined the validity of the lease and is therefore binding on everyone, including the City.

Chase contends in its brief not that the order is conclusive as to all of the issues but that "the order is a conclusive determination of two matters of fundamental importance, (1) that the lease is in the public interest and consequently in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust, and (2) that the lease is in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility."

To find that the lease is in the public interest is not a finding against the beneficiaries of a public charitable trust. The Commission has only administrative and ministerial powers. The Public Service Commission is purely a regulatory body having jurisdiction over public utilities. It has no judicial power to decide private questions between public utilities and individuals such as the beneficiaries of the Public Charitable Trust.

When Chase says (br. p. 91) that the order of the Commission conclusively determined "that the lease is in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility," it is mistaken if it means thereby that the Commission had the right to determine that the lease was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas to either the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust or to its successor trustee. As pointed out in the preceding paragraph, the Commission has no such power.

Continuing then, Chase argues (br. p. 92) "the Commission's order, plus the statute, are conclusive as to the power of Citizens Gas to enter into the lease."

This in reality is simply saying that the order of the Public Service Commission determined that the lease was within the power of Citizens Gas to execute and the as successor trustee is thereby bound by the act of the initial trustee.

The Public Service Commission which was created by Chapter 76, Acts of the General Assembly 1913 (p. 167), is an instrument of the executive department of the State. It is neither legislative nor judicial in character.

The approval of the lease by the Public Service Commission could not operate in any way as an adjudication of the enforceability of the lease against the City.

Such an order is not judicial, but wholly administrative, in character.

The authority given to the Public Service Commission to fix rates and approve leases of public utility property was given for the sole purpose of enabling the Commission to protect the public interest. It was never intended that by conferring such jurisdiction on the Commission it should be vested with authority to make a judicial declaration which would determine private rights of persons not parties to the lease, especially where such private rights depend upon the decision of justiciable questions.

The entire purpose of the statute is to safeguard the public interest and to see that leases or sales are not made by one utility to another unless in the opinion of the Commission they are in the public interest.

Any assertion directly or indirectly that the Commission's approval of the lease determined the liability of the City in respect of the obligations contained in the lease is made in disregard not only of the obvious purpose of the statute and the scope of the Commission's authority thereunder, but also in complete disregard of the repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of Indiana.

In referring to Section 95 of the Shively-Spencer Act, the Indiana Supreme Court said:

> "But by this enactment, the Legislature has vested it (Public Service Commission) with authority subject to review by the courts, to supervise or regulate the terms of sale insofar only as they affect the public." (Our emphasis.)

In re: Northwestern Telephone Co., 201 Ind. 667, 680, 685.

In Stratton v. Railroad Commission (1921), 186 Calif. 119, 198 Pac. 1051, 1054, 1055, in speaking of a decision of the California Railroad Commission, the Court said:

> "The Commission decided that the company was a public utility, but denied the relief asked for. The claim now is that this decision as to the character of the company is res judicata. There is more than one answer to this, but one alone need be given. It is that the Commission is not a judicial tribunal in the strict sense, although many of its functions are quasi judicial, so that its orders are not judgments, and in particular its findings of fact are not adjudications, and facts found by it are not res judicata and as such finally and conclusively established between the parties for all purposes.
> The peculiar effect of a determination of fact operating to conclude the question for other purposes than those of the very proceeding in which the determination is made is confined to strictly judicial determinations alone, and an order of the Commission is not of that character." (Our emphasis.)

In Section 32 of the lease (I R. 79, 80) it is provided in substance that in the event that a court of final jurisdiction should determine the lease to be ultra vires and void because of the length of the term created, and that the term is in excess of the authority of either party to contract, then the lease shall be binding upon the parties, viz: Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas, for the longest term for which the parties might lawfully contract.

In view of this provision of the lease, even if the order of the Public Service Commission could be treated as a determination of the validity of the lease for the period during which Citizens Gas was trustee, which we deny, it is clear that the order merely approving the lease could not operate to determine the validity of the lease beyond that term.

The parties themselves had serious question as to the binding effect of the lease after termination of the franchise period. All that their petition to the Commission could amount to legally was a request that the lease be approved for such term as was thereafter determined to be legally binding, not by the Commission but by some court having power to decide a justiciable controversy.

It is well settled that the Public Service Commission is "purely an administrative or legislative body without judicial power."

Public Service Commission of Indiana et al. v. City of LaPorte et al., 207 Ind. 462, 465;

New York etc. R. R. Co. v. Singleton et al., 207 Ind. 449, 458;

In re Northwestern Indiana Telephone Co. et al., 201 Ind. 667, 171 N. E. 65.

Under the terms of the Indiana Constitution (Article III, Section 1) the powers of the State Government are divided into three separate departments, legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial and it is provided that:

> "No person, charged with official duties under one of these departments, shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this Constitution expressly provided."

Under the above quoted provision of the Indiana Constitution the General Assembly could not have conferred any judicial power upon the Public Service Commission.

We have not overlooked the well established rule that where the Public Service Commission has jurisdiction conferred upon it to decide questions of fact and enter an order thereon, that so long as it acts within its jurisdiction, its decision is conclusive upon the courts in a collateral action.

Public Service Commission et al. v. City of Indianapolis et al., 193 Ind. 37, 43.

The order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease went no further, and could go no further, than a determination that upon the facts adduced, it was advisable and in the public interest (but not necessarily in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust) that the property of Indianapolis Gas be leased to the Citizens Gas on the terms stated in the Commission's order. The Commission had no power to decide either the liability of the City under the terms of a lease not executed by it, or the length of the term of the lease for which the parties might lawfully contract.

The Commission could not and did not determine the legal questions now arising in these cases.

It is interesting to note that Chase cites in support of its proposition (p. 90) the case of Batesville Telephone Co. v. Public Service Commission, 38 Fed. 2d 511 at 515. This case is hardly authority for the proposition since it was reversed in Batesville Telephone Co. v. Public Service Commission of Indiana (1931) (46 Fed. 2d 226, 228.)

At the date when the Public Service Commission (October 1, 1913, I R. 122) approved the lease, no claim had been asserted that the franchise contract of 1905 and the other related papers resulted in the creation of a public charitable trust, and at that time (1913) it was still seventeen years before the date when a transfer was to be made to the City.

It is difficult to understand how an order by the Public Service Commission made 17 years before the City took over the trust property could determine the validity of the lease against the City.

3. Doctrine of res adjudicata.

Chase in its bill alleges that certain cases were res adjudicata of the validity and enforceability of the lease against the City, viz.:

(a) Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., 193 Ind. 282. (I R. 10.)

(b) Todd v. Citizens Gas, 46 F. (2d) 855. (I R. 13.)

(c) Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448. (I R. 14.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals apparently relied on these decisions as res adjudicata of the validity of the ninety-nine year lease against the City, for it said:

> "In passing, it might be said that the few cases discussed in the opinion above are determinative of the immediate issue here, i.e. as to the validity of the ninety-nine years lease."
> It then cited the above cases. (I R. 1300.)

In holding that the above cited cases were res adjudicata of the validity of the ninety-nine year lease against the City, the Circuit Court of Appeals erred in that it refused to follow the rule announced by this Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, 78 because under the Indiana law as expressed by a long line of decisions to which counsel have found no exception, none of the above cases is res adjudicata of the issue respecting the validity of the lease against the city.

(a) The Fishback Case.

Chase now contends not that the Fishback case is res adjudicata as it alleged in its complaint (I R. 10) but that its importance lies in the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City in upholding the validity of the lease for eight years. (Br. p. 92.)

On November 28, 1913, Fishback, who had appeared before the Public Service Commission and opposed the approval by the Commission of the lease of September 30, 1913, commenced an action in the Superior Court of Marion County against Public Service Commission of Indiana, Citizens Gas Company, Indianapolis Gas and the City to vacate and set aside the order approving the execution of said lease.

Fishback sued as a stockholder of the Citizens Gas and a resident freeholder of Indianapolis and not as the beneficiary of a public charitable trust. (II R. 650.) The defendant Citizens Gas and the City were not made parties defendant as the trustees of a public charitable trust There was no averment in any of the ten paragraphs of complaint that a public charitable trust had been created by the franchise contract of 1905. (II R. 648-668, offered II R. 327.)

Fishback sought to set aside the Commission's order on the following grounds:

(a) That the rentals fixed in the lease were excessive and that their payment by the Citizens Gas would result in a waste and misapplication of its funds and its inability to pay dividends due its stockholders. (II R. 651, 664.)

(b) That the Citizens Gas was without power to enter into the lease without the consent of the owners of three-fourths ($^3/_4$) in amount of its capital stock, which consents had not been obtained. (II R. 668.)

(c) That the City had not given its consent to such lease, had not joined in the execution thereof, and had granted to that Company no right to operate the property of the Indianapolis Gas. (II R. 665.)

(d) That the findings and order of the Public Service Commission were not sustained by sufficient evidence and were contrary to law.

(e) That Citizens Gas had no power to enter into the agreement contained in the lease permitting the Public Service Commission to fix rates at which it should sell gas. (II R. 656.)

(f) That the obligation assumed by Citizens Gas under the terms of said lease to pay interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock of Indianapolis Gas impaired the obligation of the contract existing between Citizens Gas and plaintiff and other stockholders of that company in that it prevented Citizens Gas from executing a mortgage at the end of the franchise term in order to pay the stockholders of that company the par value of their stock and accumulated dividends thereon.

The defendants Public Service Commission, Indianapolis Gas and the Citizens Gas demurred to each paragraph of the complaint, which demurrers were sustained by the Court. The City did not file a demurrer but filed an answer in general denial.

Prior to the entry of final judgment, plaintiff dismissed as to the City as a party defendant and the following order book entry was made in connection with such dismissal:

> "Come now the parties and the plaintiff now dismisses the action as against the defendant, City of Indianapolis, upon which dismissal the court now renders judgment for costs against the plaintiff." (Stip. II R. 616, 625, 626, offered II R. 327.)

The plaintiff elected to stand upon its complaint and to abide the ruling of the court upon such demurrers and judgment was rendered against him. The City was not a party to the judgment rendered in the case.

Neither Chase, any other trustee under the Mortgage Deed of Trust executed by Indianapolis Gas, nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas was a party plaintiff, defendant or intervenor in said Fishback case. (Stip. II R. 626, offered II R. 327.)

Fishback prayed an appeal from the decree of the Marion Superior Court to the Supreme Court of Indiana which dismissed the appeal because not perfected in time

(Fishback v. Public Service Commission of Indiana, et al., 193 Ind. 282.)

The Fishback judgment is not res adjudicata because:

1. Neither the City, any trustee under Indianapolis Gas Mortgage nor any bondholder of Indianapolis Gas was a party to the final judgment. There is, therefore, a total lack of mutuality of estoppel.

2. The issues in the Fishback case were wholly different from the issues in this case and the question of the validity and enforceability of the lease against the City was not and could not have been decided in that case.

3. The capacity in which the parties sued and were sued negatives any claim of estoppel by judgment. No claim was asserted in the Fishback case that any public charitable trust existed.

4. The transfer of the trust res to the City on September 9, 1935, has so altered the rights of the parties as to prevent the judgment in that case being an adjudication in this.

(b) The Williams Case (206 Ind. 448).

The Williams judgment is not res adjudicata, because:

1. The issues in the Williams case were essentially different from the issues in this case.[3] The enforceability

---

[3] The case of Troxell v. Delaware R. Co., 227 U. S. 434, 440, cites the leading case on the question discussed above, viz.: Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 353, 24 L. ed. 195, 198, 199. In that case an action was brought on four bonds of Sac County and four interest coupons. In order to defeat the action the defendant relied upon the estoppel of a judgment rendered in favor of the county in a prior action brought by another person but prosecuted for the sole benefit of the plaintiff in the last case. The issue of whether the plaintiff was a good faith purchaser of the bonds had not been but could have been litigated in the prior action. The United States Supreme Court in holding that the judgment in the first case was not res adjudicata said:

of the lease against the City and the right of the initial trustee to bind the City to the terms of the lease were not actually litigated and could not have been litigated under the issues in the Williams case.

2. The transfer to the City of the trust res on September 9, 1935, creates a situation which so alters the rights of the parties as to prevent a successful assertion of res adjudicata. When the Williams case was finally decided, the City had not taken over the trust res and until that was done the questions here involved were not in issue. No attempt was made to obtain a declaratory judgment against the City in respect of any obligation supposed to be imposed on it under the terms of the lease.

3. Although Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees the predecessor of Chase and the City were co-defendants, and although the City formally asserted in a pleading filed that the validity of the public charitable trust was in no wise affected by the question of whether the lease was valid or invalid, Indianapolis Gas and its mortgage trustees tendered no issue to their co-defendant, the City, in respect of the enforceability of the lease against it. Under settled rules of law, the judgment cannot adjudicate the issues here presented as between such co-defendants.

There is nothing in the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, which sustains the theory of Chase's counsel that that case disposed of the questions here involved.

"But where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action; not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action."

The following language of the Supreme Court shows clearly that the issues now presented were not involved or disposed of in that case.

> "If the lease was improvident from the standpoint of the lessee in that the consideration was excessive in view of the value of the use of the assets acquired under the terms of the lease, no facts are alleged to support such a conclusion. And if such a conclusion were justified, the complaint does not make out a case for equitable relief of cancellation and 'recapture' of the rentals paid over a period of seventeen years during which the Citizens Gas Company had the use of the physical equipment and the benefit of the income derived from this use. Further it was within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the Public Service Commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the Commission in approving the same." (Our emphasis.)

The suit was brought by Williams suing as an inhabitant and taxpayer on behalf of himself and other beneficiaries of the public charitable trust. The complaint proceeds upon the theory:

(a) That a public charitable trust exists in the property of the Citizens Gas and that the plaintiff is entitled to a determination that such a trust exists.

(b) That a conspiracy was formed in 1913 to destroy this public charitable trust and it is alleged that among the overt acts of this conspiracy were procuring the enactment of the Public Service Commission Act of Indiana, the approval by that Commission of the lease between the Indianapolis Gas and the Citizens Gas, the surrender by the Citizens Gas of its franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit, the obtaining of a decree from the United States District Court at Indianapolis enjoining the enforcement of confiscatory rates and the like.

(c) It is alleged that the lease between the two companies was void because:

1st. It was in contravention of the contract clause of the Federal Constitution.

2nd. That inasmuch as the Public Service Commission Act was invalid it had no authority to approve the lease and that its approval was a denial of due process in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

3rd. That the lease was the result of a conspiracy, the object and purpose of which was to destroy the Citizens Gas for the benefit of the Indianapolis Gas.

The relief sought was a determination that a public charitable trust existed in the property of the Citizens Gas; that receivers be appointed for the property of that company and of the Indianapolis Gas and that all rentals paid to the Indianapolis Gas be recovered from it.

There was not presented in the complaint any issue whatever on the question of the validity of the lease after the transfer to the City or was there any issue presented that because of the length of the term involved the lease was invalid. Phrased in another way, the court was not asked to pass upon the question presented in subdivision 32 of the lease (I R. 79, 80) wherein it is provided:

> "In the event it should be determined by a court of final jurisdiction that this contract is ultra vires or void because of the length of the term created, and that such term is in excess of the authority of either party hereto to contract, then this lease shall nevertheless be binding upon the parties hereto for the lengthiest term which the parties hereto might lawfully contract."

The Supreme Court of Indiana had before it only the allegations of the complaint. This is evidenced by some of the language from the opinion, a few excerpts of which we quote:

1. "In respect of the alleged invalidity of the lease * * *

2. It appears from the complaint * * *

3. The complaint discloses

4. The complaint does not make out a case."

The decision is the law of Indiana only so far as it goes in view of the facts before the court on which the decision is based.

(c) The Cotter Case (46 F. 2d 855).[22]

The Cotter case was not pleaded as res adjudicata. Apparently some weight was given by the Circuit Court of Appeals to the admission made by former counsel for the City in the answer in that case that the lease in question was valid. (113 F. 2d 217, 223.)

In the first place, the validity of the lease was not at issue in the Cotter case. In the second place, the answer was signed only by counsel, was unverified, and there was no attempt to show that the information contained in the answer could have been furnished solely by the City.

Under such circumstances it is settled law that the answer could not bind the City.

Habirshaw etc. Cable Co. v. Cable Co., 296 Fed. 875.

(d) The Todd Case.

The Todd judgment is not res adjudicata because:

1. Neither Indianapolis Gas, its mortgage trustee, nor any of its bondholders were parties in any capacity. There is a total lack of mutuality of estoppel. Had the enforceability of the lease against the City been in issue and had the Court decided that the lease was unenforceable, none of these plaintiffs would have been bound by the judgment. How then can they successfully claim the benefit of it?

[22] The Cotter case and the Todd case were heard together on appeal and only one opinion written in both cases.

2. The cause of action in the Todd case, and the cause of action in this case, are essentially different and the question of the enforceability of the lease against the City was not litigated, and could not have been litigated, under the issues presented in the Todd case.

3. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in question as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered and does not prevent an examination of the same questions even between the same parties, where at a later time the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the parties. At the time of the entry of the decree in the Todd case there was no existing controversy in respect of the enforceability of the lease between Indianapolis Gas and its bondholders on the one side and the City on the other. The Todd case was finally disposed of on May 29, 1930. The facts and circumstances have altered and changed since the date of the decree in the Todd case by reason of the transfer of the trust property on September 9, 1935, to the City as successor trustee and because of the fact that shortly before the time of such transfer and in July, 1935, the first indication of a controversy arose as to the binding effect of the lease on the City.

4. The issues tendered by the bill of complaint in the Todd case were (Stip. 30 II R. 677-717, offered II R. 327):

(a) That the original agreement between the City and the Citizens Gas contained in the franchise contract of 1905 was abrogated and annulled when the Citizens Gas surrendered that franchise and accepted an indeterminate permit from the Public Service Commission.

(b) That the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of a permit created a new contract between the State and the Citizens Gas, one of the terms of which was that the City should have the right to acquire the property of the defendant company at a value to be determined by the Public Service Commission in a proper proceeding.

(c) That an Act of the Indiana General Assembly of 1929, purporting to legalize all of the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation of the Citizens Gas and particularly those in respect of the mode of acquiring the plant and property of the Citizens Gas by the City, resulted in an impairment of the obligations of the new contract above referred to, in violation of the Constitution of Indiana and of the United States.

(d) That the franchise contract of 1905 merely gave an option to the City to purchase the property of the Citizens Gas Company which option violated the rule against perpetuities.

5. No pleading was filed in the Todd case asserting either the validity or invalidity of said lease. There was only one reference to said lease in the bill of complaint, which is found in Subdivision IV thereof (which subdivision describes the property of the company). (Stip. 30 II R. 677, 680, offered II R. 327.)

On the question of res adjudicata the rule in Indiana is that no party may invoke the doctrine of former adjudication unless he has tendered to the party against whom the doctrine is invoked, an issue against which the latter could have demurred or pleaded.

Maple et al. v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, 58;
Jones v. Vert et al., 121 Ind. 140, 141;
Kitts v. Willson, 140 Ind. 604, 610.

After the decisions on which the Circuit Court of Appeals and Chase rely as being res adjudicata were rendered, the City took over the property. Prior to the date the property was taken over, September 9, 1935, the rights of the City had not accrued and thus its rights were not and could not have been adjudicated.

In Kitts v. Willson, 140 Ind. 604, 610, one Duncan in 1874 brought an action against Cravens, Willson and the administrator of John Mullan, deceased, to set aside as fraudulent the conveyance of Kitts to Cravens. He succeeded, and Willson paid the judgment. In 1887 Duncan quitclaimed to Sarah, widow of David Kitts. Sarah then brought an action for partition which was decided against her. She then brought this action in ejectment. Appellees contended that the questions in the second case were adjudicated in the partition suit. The Court said:

> "With this contention we can not agree. In that case the issues were not the same as in this, nor was appellant a party in the same right as she is here. There appellant sued for partition as widow of David H. Kitts and heir of her own children; here she sues for possession as grantee of Harden Duncan. Her rights in this case, if any there be, had not accrued at the time of bringing the suit in partition, and would have been hostile to her rights in that case. In this case she steps into the shoes of Duncan, who was not a party to the former suit; whatever rights he would have, if appellant here, such rights, and no other, she has. The fact that she is the widow of David H. Kitts neither adds to nor takes from her right to recover in the case at bar.
> There is no doubt that the decree in the partition suit was conclusive against appellant as to any interest she might claim in the land at the bringing of that suit; and by it the property was 'freed from all claims (of hers) of whatsoever nature existing at the time of the institution of the suit.'
> But before the rule of former adjudication can be invoked it must appear that the thing demanded was the same; that the demand was founded upon the same cause of action; that it was between the same parties, and found for one of them against the other in the same quality. The party must not only be the same person, but he must also be suing in the same right."

The benefit to be derived from a judgment must be mutual before it can operate as an estoppel.

In Maple et al. v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, 58, the Court said:

> "Another principle which governs in the admissibility and effect of judgments as evidence is, that the binding force and effect of the judgment must be mutual. Prof. Greenleaf, speaking of judgments as evidence, says: 'But to prevent this rule from working injustice, it is held essential that its operation be mutual.' Vol. 1, Sec. 524. Mr. Starkie says: 'It is a general rule, that a verdict shall not be used as evidence against a man where the opposite verdict would not have been evidence for him; in other words, the benefit to be derived from the verdict must be mutual. This seems to be no more than a branch of the former rule, that to make the judgment conclusive evidence, the parties must be the same, for then the benefit and prejudice would be mutual and reciprocal. Where the parties are not the same, one who would not have been prejudiced by the verdict can not afterward make use of it, for between him and a party to such verdict the matter is res nova, although his title turn upon the same point.'"

Measured by these rules none of the cases relied on by the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1300) and by Chase is res adjudicata.

Furthermore in none of the cases relied upon by Chase did it or its predecessor Trustee make an issue with its co-defendant Citizens Gas as initial trustee or with the City as successor trustee either directly or through its mortgagee, Indianapolis Gas. Under the Indiana law, for that reason alone, none of the judgments could be res adjudicata.

In Whitesell, et al. v. Strickler, et al., 167 Ind. 602, 615, 616, the above rule is announced. The Court said:

"The facts pleaded in the answers last above described fall far short of being sufficient as answers of former adjudication. The general rule is that the judgment in the former action settles all matters of controversy involved in the issues between the parties to the action; that is, all matters litigated, or which might have been litigated within the issues as they were made, or tendered by the pleadings in the case, but not matters which might have been litigated under such issues formed by additional pleading. Findley v. Cathcart [1905], 164 Ind. 470, [illegible] Duncan v. Hedekin (1866) 26 Ind. 378. 'The party who invokes the doctrine of former adjudication must be one who tendered to the other an issue to which the latter could have answered or pleaded.' Jones v. Vert (1889), 121 Ind. 140, 16 Am. St. 379."

Since no issue was made among the co-defendants in any of the cases none of them is res adjudicata.

None of the cases is res adjudicata under the rules announced by this Court.

In the recent case of Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295, 302, 84 L. ed. 281, 287, this Court had before it the question of whether or not a judgment of a Virginia court was res adjudicata.

Litton, who headed a one man corporation, had caused Dixie Splint Coal Company to confess a judgment in his favor in the amount of more than $33,000 representing accumulated salary claims. Pepper, in 1931, had brought suit in the State Court against the Dixie Splint Coal Company and Litton for an accounting. In 1934, Pepper obtained a judgment against the Company for $9,000.00. Execution was stayed pending an appeal, but the defendant never appealed and while the execution was not stayed Litton caused an execution to issue on his confessed judgment. The property was advertised and sold to him for $3,200.00. Litton caused a new corporation to be formed to which he transferred the property he had acquired at the execution sale. On September the 14th, 1934, Dixie Splint Coal Company filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. On June 13th, 1934, Pepper had instituted a suit in the Virginia State Court to have a written judgment declared void. On June the 15th, the day following the sale under the Litton execution, the Sheriff instituted an interpleader action joining Litton, Pepper and the Coal Corporation and alleged that that corporation had a prior lien on all the property sold for one of its debts. Litton and Pepper admitted this. An order was entered directing payment of the corporation's claim.

Thereafter, the Trustee, with the permission of the Bankruptcy Court, moved in the State court to set aside the judgment and to quash the execution thereof on the ground that the judgment was void since it had not been confessed in the manner required by the Virginia statute. The court concluded that the Litton judgment was void, but denied the motion on the grounds that the Trustee was estopped to challenge it. It was also held that Pepper had admitted the validity of the judgment and that since Litton had acquired all the remaining claims against the estate the Trustee was in reality representing only Pepper. Therefore, since Pepper was estopped so was the Trustee. The judgment was affirmed by the State supreme court.

The question of the allowance of the Litton judgment came before the bankruptcy court on exceptions previously made by Pepper. "That court concluded that the decision by the state court that the Trustee was estopped to attack the Litton judgment there, did not prevent the Bankruptcy Court from considering its validity." The district court disallowed the Litton claim and directed the Trustee to recover for the benefit of the estate the property or its value which Litton had purchased at the execution sale on June 14, 1934. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the District Court and held that the decision in the State Court was res adjudicata in the bankruptcy proceedings.

In reversing the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals and affirming that of the District Court, Mr. Justice Douglass said:

> "In the first place, res judicata did not prevent the District Court from examining into the Litton judgment and disallowing or subordinating it as a claim. When that claim was attacked in the bankruptcy court Litton did not show that the proceeding in the state court was anything more than a proceeding under Virginia practice to set aside the judgment in his favor on the ground that it was irregular or void upon its face.

He failed to show that the judgment in the state court was conclusive in his favor on the validity or priority of the underlying claim, as respects the other creditors of the bankrupt corporation—a duty which was incumbent on him. On the pleadings in the state court the validity of the underlying claim was not in issue. Nor was there presented to the state court the question of whether or not the Litton judgment might be subordinated to the claims of other creditors upon equitable principles. The motion on which that proceeding was based challenged the Litton judgment on one ground only, viz., that it was void ab initio because it was not confessed by Dixie Splint Coal Company in the manner required by the Virginia statute and because P. H. Smith did not have either an implied or express power to confess it. In other words, in the state court, under the pleadings and practice, the only decree which was asked or could be given in the plaintiff's favor was for cancellation of the judgment as a record obligation of the bankrupt. It is therefore plain that the issue which the bankruptcy court later considered was not an issue in the trial of the cause in the state court and could not be adjudicated there."

It is apparent under this recent decision of this Court that since the precise point of the validity of the 99-year lease against the City as successor trustee was not decided in either the Fishback, Williams, Cotter or Todd cases, none is res adjudicata of the issues here in question.

CONCLUSION.

The City submits that the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals should be reversed.

APPENDIX.

"No executive department, officer or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of such department; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations are declared to be absolutely void: Provided, That the board of public works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys and other public places or for supplying the city with gas, water, steam, power, heat or electricity, and for the collection, removal and disposal of garbage, ashes or refuse on such terms and for such times, not exceeding the term fixed by section 254 (Sec. 48-7302, Burns') of this act, as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such city and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect, and, if so approved, shall immediately become effective: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any such department from issuing any bond or other obligation expressly authorized by this act and provided for by ordinance."

"Any city or town may enter into contract with any person, corporation or association to furnish such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat or light, or drainage or sewerage facilities, or to build or extend railroads, interurban or street-car lines, telegraph or telephone lines, drainage or sewerage system, or other public conveniences, into or through such city or town; and may provide in such contract the terms and conditions on which such water, motive power, heat, light, drainage, sewerage, railroad, interurban, street-car, telegraph or telephone service, or other uses and accommodations of such and other public conveniences may be furnished by such person, corporation or association to such city or town, and to its inhabitants: Provided, That no such contract shall be entered into by any such city or town for furnishing such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, drainage, sewerage, heat or light, upon or along the streets of such city or town for a term longer than twenty-five (25) years: And, provided further, That before any such contract shall be made by any city of the first, second, third, or fourth class such contract shall be first agreed to by the board of public works of such city, after which agreement, such board shall cause a proper ordinance approving and confirming such contract to be presented for adoption by the common council of such city."

Acts Indiana General Assembly 1911, Chap. 229

"An Act to amend Sections 55 and 249 of an Act entitled 'An Act concerning municipal corporations' approved March 6, 1905":

"Sec. 2. That section 249 of the above entitled Act be amended to read as follows: Sec. 249. Any city or town may erect or construct water works, gas works, electric light works, heating, steam and power plants, or combination of such utilities, together with all buildings, lines and accessories necessary thereto and may purchase or lease any such works and utilities already constructed, or in course of construction and owned by any other person; and may also purchase, condemn or lease other lands for said purposes; and may also extend, change and improve such works and utilities when so acquired; all for the purpose of furnishing the inhabitants of such city or town and vicinity with the use and convenience of any or all of such utilities: Provided, that before any city or town shall enter upon the policy of erecting and constructing any such new works and utilities, or the purchase or lease of the same from other persons, the common council of such city or the board of trustees of such town as the case may be, shall adopt a resolution, designated by number declaring the necessity for entering upon the policy of such erection and construction or purchase or lease. In case of the proposed erection and construction of new works said declaratory resolution shall fix the general character and the probable maximum cost thereof; and in case of the purchase or lease of such works from other persons such common council or board of trustees shall first procure an option from the owners of such works agreeing to sell or lease the same upon the terms of a definite proposed contract of sale or lease upon approval thereof by popular vote, and a full copy of said proposed contract of sale or lease shall be incorporated in and made a part of said declaratory resolution. Before such declaratory resolution is confirmed and the policy thereof entered upon said common council or board of trustees shall submit the same to the qualified voters of such city or town at a special or general election of which election previous notice shall be given by publication once each week for two weeks in some newspaper printed and of general circulation in such city or town and if there be no such newspaper, then in some newspaper printed and of general circulation in the county in which such city or town is situated, the first of said publication to be at least twenty days prior to the day fixed for such election. The tickets for such election shall have printed thereon, in separate line the following phrases: 'For Declaratory Resolution No—' and 'Against Declaratory Resolution No—,' assigning the number of the resolution submitted, or other similar phrases by which the voter may effectually express his choice upon the question submitted; and each phrase shall have printed to the left thereof a voting square, by marking in which square the voter shall express his choice; and such elections shall otherwise be governed by the general election laws of the state of Indiana, so far as applicable, if such resolution be submitted at a general election of such city the ticket therefor shall be printed upon and at the bottom of the general tickets containing the names of candidates at such election. If a majority of the votes cast at such election be in favor of such resolution, such common council or board of trustees may by ordinance confirm such resolution and proceed to execute the policy thereof; but if a majority of such votes be opposed to such resolution, then such common council or board of trustees shall have no power to confirm the same or to execute the policy thereof. Such city or town is hereby authorized, for the purpose of procuring the means to acquire the aforesaid works and utilities, or to improve the same when acquired, as hereinbefore authorized to issue and sell the bonds of such city or town pursuant to and in conformity with the provisions of section 55 of this Act."

Note:

The Act of 1911 was amended in 1915 by deleting the prohibitions respecting the leasing of utility property. It was again amended in 1931 by restoring the prohibitions against the making of leases without an election.

ANSWER BRIEF OF PETITIONERS CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS ET AL., TO RESPONDENT CHASE'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF.

This brief is submitted in answer to the Supplemental Brief of respondent Chase. Leave is asked to file this answer brief if leave is granted respondent for filing its Supplemental Brief.

NO STATUTORY AUTHORITY FOR CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS TO ASSUME OBLIGATIONS OF LEASE.

At the time the lease in question here was executed by Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas, Chapter 229 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1911 (Pg. 561) was in full force. Section 2 of Chapter 229 prohibited any city or town in Indiana from purchasing or leasing any utility works without first obtaining an approval of such purchase or lease by popular vote of the electors of such city or town.

In the case of Todd v. Citizens Gas Company (1931, 46 F. 2d 855, 865) (Res. Supp. br. pg. 2) Newton Todd sought to prevent the city from taking over the property comprising the public charitable trust being operated by the initial trustee Citizens Gas Company. Among other things, Todd alleged that the attempt on the part of the City to take over the property of Citizens Gas was ultra vires because no popular election had been held. (II R. 714) Defendant City answered this allegation by admitting no election had been held because the provisions of the statute relied upon by Todd did not apply. It was further alleged that by the terms of Section 53 of Chapter 129, Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1905 (Page 219, 247)

> "the Common Council of said City had power by ordinance to receive and accept public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind such city to carry them out." (II R (1) 737).

The Circuit Court of Appeals held (Pg. 866) that the franchise contract from the City to the initial trustee Citizens Gas was neither a purchase nor a contract for a purchase. The Court said:

> "It was an agreement by which the City obtained an interest in the plant subject to the charge in favor of the certificate holders. No funds of the City were paid, or contracted to be paid, for the plant. We think that approval at an election was not essential to the validity of the contract. And certainly this is true if a trust was created, as above pointed out, for the City in express terms is given power to receive public trusts."

In its original brief respondent Chase, in speaking of the City's answer in the Todd case, asserted (page 94):

> "In that case the City correctly interpreted this statute, but gave it an interpretation which is directly contrary to the argument it is now advancing."

In this Chase is mistaken. The Common Council of the City has the power to enact ordinances for the purpose of receiving public trusts and agreeing to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out. (Sec. 53, Acts 1905, Clause 6th, pg. 247). The conditions and terms, however, must be such as are authorized by law and within the powers of the City to carry out. Compare Dykeman v. Jenkins (1913) 179 Ind. 549, 559.

At the time the lease was executed the City was prohibited by statute from leasing utility works without first obtaining approval by popular vote of the electors of the City. (Acts 1911, Chap. 229, Sec. 2, pg. 563).

There has never been an approval by popular vote of the electors of the City in respect of the 99 year lease in question here.

Furthermore, the City expressly rejected an assignment of the lease (I R. 130, II R. 468, II R. 423, III R. 1019). The rejection of the assignment was ratified by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City (III R. 1017, 1018, offered II R. 429).

No approval of the execution of the lease has ever been given by (a) City Council (III R. 982, offered II R. 424), (b) Board of Public Works of City (II R. 932, offered II R. 424), (c) Board of Trustees of the Department of Utilities of City (III R. 934, offered II R. 425).

or (d) Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of City (III R. 985, offered II R. 425). No other officers of the City had or now have power or authority to take any action in connection with the lease.

The answer of the City in the Todd case alleged simply and solely that the City Council had power by ordinance to receive public trusts without the approval of the electors of the City. It was not alleged nor could it have been alleged that the City had power to accept the lease without approval of the electors because the lease was not a condition or term accompanying the trust, but was entered into by Citizens Gas Company, lessee, and Indianapolis Gas, lessor, in 1913, several years after the trust was created. The City was not a party to the lease nor is it named in the lease. It never ratified it nor accepted it, but, on the contrary, expressly rejected an assignment of it.

Chase asserts in its supplemental brief in speaking of the operation of the Indianapolis Gas property by the City (p. 4) that:

> "The only agreement between the City and Indianapolis Gas prior to March 2, 1936, is that set forth in the two letters of September 30th relating to the interest payment of October 1, 1935."

This statement of Chase is contrary to the fact.

The trial court found as its finding of fact No. 51 (III R. 1185):

> "That in pursuance of agreements made between the City and The Indianapolis Gas Company, which agreements have been continuously in effect since September 9, 1935, the City has operated the gas producing and distributing plant and system of The Indianapolis Gas Company.

> Such agreements provided, among other things, in substance that such operation by the City should not prejudice the rights of either the City or The Indianapolis Gas Company, and further provided that the City by operating such plant did not recognize the validity of the lease and The Indianapolis Gas Company by consenting to such operation did not admit that the lease was invalid."

Leading up to the agreement for temporary use of the property to commence on September 9, 1935, certain correspondence was interchanged between the City by its Board of Directors for Utilities or its counsel and officers of the Indianapolis Company or the corporation itself. One such letter was written on August 31, 1935 (P. X. 59, III R. 837, offered II R. 329). Another such letter was written on September 30, 1935. (P. X. 66, III R. 838, offered II R. 329). On February 8, 1936, Indianapolis Gas, in a letter to the Board of Directors for Utilities, called attention to the near approach of March 9, 1936, "at which time our tentative arrangement will expire." (Our emphasis) (P. X. 75, III R. 839, offered II R. 329).

On September 9, 1935, the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City adopted a resolution for the temporary use of the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company (I R. 200).

The resolution for temporary use, together with the rejection by the City of Indianapolis of the assignment of the 99 year lease, were delivered to Mr. William J. Yule, Secretary of the Indianapolis Gas Company, on September 9, 1935. (II R. 463).

On March 2, 1936, shortly prior to the expiration of the six months' temporary use agreement, a standstill agreement was entered into between the Department of Utilities of the City of Indianapolis and the Indianapolis Gas Company. (I R. 205-207).

The other assertions of Chase made in its Supplemental Brief have been fully presented to the Court in the City's briefs, heretofore filed or in the oral presentation on February 7, 1941.

PETITION OF CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS ET AL. TO LIMIT OPENING STATEMENT AND ARGUMENT OF RESPONDENT—CROSS-PETITIONER, CHASE NATIONAL BANK.

To the Honorable Supreme Court of the United States:

The City of Indianapolis, a municipal corporation of the State of Indiana, and the members of its Board of Trustees for Utilities and the members of its Board of Directors for Utilities, petitioners in causes 10 and 11 and respondents in causes 12 and 13, October Term, 1941, respectfully petitioning, show to the Court:

1. On September 12, 1940, petitioner's petitions for writs of certiorari were docketed on the dockets of this Court as Causes numbered 421 and 422, October Term, 1940.

2. On September 12, 1940, the cross-petitions of the Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, respondent in Causes numbered 421 and 422, October Term, 1940, and numbered Causes 10 and 11, October Term, 1941, were docketed as Causes numbered 423, 424, October Term, 1940, now docketed as causes numbered 12 and 13, October Term, 1941.

3. The petitions of petitioner City of Indianapolis et al., and the cross-petitions of The Case National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, were granted on October 28, 1940.

4. The cross-petitions of The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, present but one question, viz: If The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, is entitled to recover against the City of Indianapolis, et al., whether it is entitled to 6% interest on overdue interest on certain outstanding bonds, and whether it is entitled to 6% interest on the judgment ordered entered by the Circuit Court of Appeals reversing the District Court; or is entitled on each to only 5% interest, as held by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

5. Said causes were presented orally to the Court by counsel for all of the parties on February 6th and 7th, 1941.

6. Said causes have been set by the Court on its own motion for reargument on October 13, 1941.

7. Under part 1 of Rule 28, it is provided that when there are cross writs of certiorari the causes should be argued together as one case, and the plaintiff in the court below shall be entitled to open and conclude the argument. The cross-wits of The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, are limited to the one question as pointed out in number 4 above. The Chase National Bank, in being permitted to open by reason of being the plaintiff in the court below, should be limited in its opening to that statement of facts which is necessary to present the one question raised by the cross-writs of certiorari and should be limited in its opening argument on its cross-writs to the single question of whether it is entitled to 5% or 6% interest, if the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals against the City is affirmed by this court.

8. The question of whether the interest rate should be 5% or 6% is wholly unrelated to the main controversy in this case, viz., the validity of the 99 year lease against the City. A statement of the controlling facts in respect of the main issue is not necessary to a presentation of the question of the interest rate. Nor would a statement of the controlling facts in respect of the main question prove helpful in a determination of the rate of interest. The rate of interest to which Chase will be entitled from the City if the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is affirmed will rest on whether there is an applicable contract rate of 5% or whether the statutory rate of 6% will apply.

WHEREFORE, the City of Indianapolis and the individual members of its Board of Trustees and Board of Directors for its Department of Utilities, pray that the Court will limit The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, respondent in Causes 10 and 11, and cross-petitioner in Causes 12 and 13, October Term, 1941, to the presentation on its opening on reargument to the facts and argument in respect of the limited question raised by its cross-writs of certiorari.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM OF CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, ET AL., PETITIONERS.

NOTE: This memorandum is intended merely to supplement the briefs heretofore filed by petitioners in this cause and all propositions advanced in our original briefs are still relied upon.

I.

FACTUAL SUMMARY.

Citizens Gas Company on August 25, 1905, by a franchise contract with the City of Indianapolis became the initial trustee of a public charitable trust (I R. 81-116), the corpus of which now consists of certain personal and real property utilized in the manufacture and distribution of artificial gas.

Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, 46 F. (2d) 855.

On September 9, 1935, the City, in accordance with its franchise contract with Citizens Gas, took over the trust res, as successor trustee of the public charitable trust.

On September 30, 1913, Indianapolis Gas Company, lessor, and Citizens Gas, lessee, executed the 99 year lease in question here.

When the City became successor trustee on September 9, 1935, it rejected an attempted assignment of the 99 year lease. (Exhibit G to complaint, I R. 130; II R. 468; II R. 423, 463; III R. 965.)

The rejection was ratified by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City. (III R. 1017, offered II R. 439.)

The property of the Indianapolis Gas Company was not a part of the trust res; indeed, the public charitable trust in the property of Citizens Gas Company was created for the very purpose of furnishing and maintaining competition with Indianapolis Gas.

This suit was instituted by Chase National Bank, trustee, under a mortgage of Indianapolis Gas, to enforce the lease against the City.

II.

LEASE WHEN EXECUTED WAS NOT BINDING ON CITY.

The facts in this case show conclusively that the 99 year lease was not, when executed, the obligation of or binding upon the City in any sense. Not only is this statement demonstrably true, but it is strongly, though inferentially, admitted by Chase. The theory of the complaint is that the City is estopped to deny the enforceability of the lease and that the City is bound by the principle of res adjudicata. This theory necessarily implies that the lease was initially unenforceable against the City.

The facts which show indisputably that the lease when executed did not bind the City are:

1. No part of the property of Indianapolis Gas and no [illegible] any part of that property was a part of the trust res. [illegible] one of the underlying purposes of the organization of Citizens Gas was to provide a competitor for Indianapolis Gas.

2. The Trust instruments contain no authorization to lease or acquire the property of a competitor. (Finding No. 2, III R. 1167.)

3. The City did not sign or execute the lease of September 30, 1913. The only parties to the lease are the lessor, Indianapolis Gas, and the lessee, Citizens Gas. (Finding No. 22, III R. 1167, 1168.)

4. The City is not named as a party obligated by the lease. (Finding No. 25, III R. 1171.)

5. The City is not an assignee of the lease. An assignment was tendered and rejected. The evidence shows that this assignment was made in a separate written instrument (Finding No. 28, III R. 1171), because the City had advised Citizens Gas prior to September 9, 1935, the date of the transfer to the City as successor trustee, that it would not accept an assignment of the lease. (II R. 464.)

6. No ordinance was ever adopted by the Common Council nor any resolution ever adopted by the Board of Public Works of the City authorizing the execution of the lease, or ratifying it or agreeing to be bound by its terms. No action was ever taken by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities accepting the lease or agreeing to be bound by its terms. (City Stip. X 1, 2, 3, 4, III R. 982, 986, offered II R. 424, 425.) (Findings No. 26 and 27, III R. 1171.)

The action of the Board of Directors of the Department of Utilities of the City rejecting the lease was ratified by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City. (III R. 1017, 1018, offered II R. 429.)

7. The City has not accepted a part of a trust res and refused to accept another part. It has accepted the entire trust res (Finding No. 22, III R. 1167, 1168) and rejected a lease which it claims the initial trustee had no power to impose upon the City.

III.

NO SUBSEQUENT ACTION OF MUNICIPAL AUTHORITY COULD RATIFY OR VALIDATE THE LEASE, WHICH INITIALLY DID NOT BIND THE CITY.

The lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas was for a term of 99 years. The applicable Indiana statutes prohibit the making of such a contract for furnishing gas and other utility services to the City for a term longer than twenty-five years. Even a lease for a twenty-five year term must first be agreed to by the Board of Public Works and then approved by an ordinance of the Common Council of the City. There is no claim of such approval.

> Chapter 129, Acts Indiana General Assembly 1905, Sections 85 (Pg. 271) and 254 (Pg. 396) (Burns' Indiana Statutes Annotated, 1933, Sections 48-1705 and 48-7302, respectively.) [1]

A contract for utility services for a term longer than that permitted by statute is void in Indiana and cannot be ratified by any subsequent municipal action.

> Gas, Light & Electric Company v. City of New Albany (1901), 156 Ind. 406, 415.

At the time the lease was made in 1913 Indianapolis Gas, through its artificial gas producing and distributing facilities, was supplying gas to more than 41,000 consumers in Indianapolis. Its property was twice the size of Citizens Gas. (II R. 621, offered II R. 327.)

When operations commenced under the lease, it was the medium of an agreement to supply gas to 41,000 consumers (or such as continued to take gas) for a term of nearly four times the maximum statutory term permitted for such contracts.

[1] The relevant portions of Sections 85 (pg. 271) and 254 (pg. 396), Acts 1905, are set out as appendices A and B, respectively, at the end of this memorandum.

The 99 year lease was within the terms of Sections 85 and 254, Acts 1905, because it was a contract for supplying the City and its inhabitants with gas, heat and light.

The lease was not authorized or approved by the Board of Public Works or by any ordinance of the Common Council (III R. 982, 983, offered II R. 424).

The City in its operation of the utility is not responsible to the state Public Service Commission as to rates or fair return.

> Chapter 190, Acts Indiana General Assembly, 1933. (Pg. 928.)

The only check upon rates in such cases is public opinion.

Both Sections 85 and 254, Acts of 1905, serve as a protective shield against unreasonable leases which might well result in the imposition of excessive rates for service, by limiting the duration of such leases and requiring municipal approval of their terms.

It is well settled law in Indiana that a contract or lease by which it is sought to bind a municipal corporation, which has been made in violation of the terms of an Indiana statute is absolutely void and cannot be ratified. The doctrine of estoppel has no applicability to such a situation.

> Gaslight, etc., Co. v. City of New Albany (1901), 156 Ind. 406, 415;
>
> City of Indianapolis v. Wann, Receiver (1895), 144 Ind. 175, 187;
> Hamer v. City of Huntington (1939), 215 Ind. 594, 600, 601.

In the case first cited, the Supreme Court of Indiana used the following apposite language.

> "It is elementary that municipal officers have no powers beyond those expressly conferred by statute, or necessarily implied to enable them to make effective the powers granted or to protect the public welfare. Therefore, when they attempt an act that is beyond the limit of their power, the act has no official sanction and is no more effectual than if performed by non-official persons. As a municipal act it is wholly void and being void, nothing of substance may flow from it * * *' 'Where a municipal council is authorized by statute to contract for a period not exceeding ten years, its contract for twenty years or for an indefinite time cannot be sustained for ten years but is entirely void * * *'" (Our emphasis.)

If then, as we submit, the lease when executed was unenforceable against the City and could not have been enforced against it for complete lack of municipal authorization, as well as complete lack of intention on the part of the contracting parties to bind any one but themselves, then it follows that it cannot be made binding on the City by indirection either on the theory that there was implied power to execute the lease or on the doctrine of estoppel. The absolute prohibition of the statute based upon the soundest consideration of public policy cannot be circumvented in any manner. Formal municipal approval of such a lease is an absolute condition precedent to its validity.

IV.

STATUTES UNDER WHICH CITY TOOK OVER PROPERTY OF CITIZENS GAS DID NOT REQUIRE CITY TO ACCEPT INDIANAPOLIS GAS LEASE.

It has been argued by our opponents that the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1929 and 1931, pursuant to which the Department of Utilities of the City was created and authorized to take over utility property, mandatorily required the City to accept the Indianapolis gas lease.

But a mere reading of the applicable statutes discloses that they are permissive in character and give authority to accept property or leases without the slightest indication of legislative intent that the City shall be required to do so.

Section 1 of Chapter 78, Acts Indiana General Assembly, 1929, provided that in cases such as here:

> "Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, including that located within this state and that located in any other state and any shares of stock or other interest in any other corporation of which said corporation making such transfer shall be the owner, and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property." (Our emphasis.)
> (Burns' Indiana Statutes Annotated, 1933, Sec. 48-7218.)

By Chapter 77 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly 1929 (Pg. 252) (as amended by Chapter 67, Acts 1931, Pg. 152) a new and additional executive department was created in Indiana cities of the first class, of which Indianapolis is the only one. This is the Department of Utilities, governed by a board of directors for utilities, and which has > "the exclusive government, management, regulation and control of all public utilities consisting of any . . . . gas works . . . including any public utility and all property thereof which such city may now or hereafter hold as trustee for the benefit of the inhabitants of such city . . ."

Section 2, Chapter 67, Acts 1931, pg. 152.

This same section also provides in part that:

"In connection with the duties devolving upon such board of directors in the government, management, regulation, control and operation of all such utilities, or any thereof, it shall have power as follows:

. . . . .

"To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, either in absolute ownership or in trust, and take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any such lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom; and in event there be any outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered by such lease so taken over under the provisions of which bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage, to do and perform all things necessary in order to secure the benefit of such mortgage provisions and to enable the escrow bonds held by the trustee under any such mortgage to be taken down and sold in order to defray the cost of any extensions and betterments to such leased property; and to sell any such bonds so taken down for the purpose of assisting in defraying the costs of any such extensions or betterments to such leased property." (Our emphasis.)

The statutory phrases "Shall be authorized to accept" and "Shall have power" connote only the right to accept such a lease, and are wholly removed from any concept of compulsion.

At the time these statutes were enacted, Citizens Gas had a favorable lease on portions of the Majestic Building (P. Stip. X 56 III R. 835 offered II R 327), as well as the lease from Indianapolis Gas. The obvious purpose of the legislation was to permit the City to accept desirable leases, not to foist on it burdensome ones. This entire situation was one of which there was widespread public knowledge and it is indeed strange that the legislature, if it intended to require the City to assume the obligations of the 99 year lease, did not find apt language to express such intention. No amount of statutory construction can fairly lead to the conclusion contended for by Chase.

It is clear that the board of directors were not obligated to take over the 99 year lease at the time the City became successor trustee of the public charitable trust. The Board rejected the attempted assignment of the lease, as it had the right to do. (I R. 130; II R. 423, 463, 468.)

V.

DECISION OF CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS BASED UPON IMPLIED POWER OF TRUSTEE IS ERRONEOUS.

As we have heretofore shown, the 99 year lease was unenforceable against the City irrespective of whether it was of a burdensome character. Lack of precedent municipal authorization rendered the lease, as against the City, absolutely void and insusceptible of ratification.

This being true, the lease cannot properly be held to be binding on the City on the theory of implied power of the trustee to execute it, where, as here, the statutory plan requires express approval by designated municipal authorities and, in the interest of the public, prohibits the execution of leases for a period of more than 25 years.

There are, however, a number of additional reasons, why the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals on this issue of the implied power of the trustee to bind the City is erroneous. These reasons are:

1. The City was denied any hearing whatever on the burdensome character of the lease, in violation of the Due Process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

2. The Circuit Court of Appeals held the lease to be enforceable against the City on the ground of res adjudicata and determined the binding effect of certain judgments as a matter of law. Under a long line of uniform Indiana decisions the question of res adjudicata is one of fact.

3. Although concededly the relevant trust documents contain no express authorization empowering the trustee to execute a long-term lease, the Circuit Court of Appeals held that such right did exist and completely ignored the established Indiana rule that grants by a municipality are to be strictly construed and that nothing passes by implication.

4. The Circuit Court of Appeals misconstrued and misinterpreted the trust instruments and ignored the factual background of the public charitable trust, both of which negative the existence of any implied power in the trustee to execute such a lease. The charitable trust was created for the purpose of establishing and maintaining competition with Indianapolis Gas and the execution of the 99 year lease was entirely antagonistic to the expressed purposes of the donors found in the trust instruments.

The propositions stated above are fully discussed in the City's original brief (under title "Due Process of Law," pages 32 to 43, inclusive, and under title "Lease Unenforceable Against City," pages 43 to 52, inclusive).

We will therefore here refer to them only briefly:

1. That the issue of the burdensome character of the lease was reserved for future determination by the court does not admit of substantial dispute. (II R. 321, 322, 475; III R. 1159, 1192; IV R. 1320.)

The City's counterclaim directly placed in issue the burdensome character of the lease, as an additional reason for its non-enforceability and specifically alleged the facts showing such burdensomeness. (I R. 136.)

The City had the right to rely on the reservation of the issue of burdensomeness and was under no obligation to offer proof on that issue and indeed would not have been permitted to do so.

Saunders v. Shaw et al., 244 U. S. 317, 320.

The City was thus denied due process of law.

Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 417.

Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Comm., 301 U. S. 292, 304-306;

Ohio Water Works Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287, 289.

The requirements of due process are not satisfied without an opportunity to be heard on both questions of law and fact.

Bluefield Water Works & Improvement Co. v. Public Service Commission, 262 U. S. 679, 692.

Furthermore, the Circuit Court of Appeals held that the question of whether the lease was prudent, i. e., burdensome, was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court and "that court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its other terms. Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460" (IV R. 1300).

The Circuit Court of Appeals also held that the cases relied upon by Chase in its complaint were res judicata "as to the validity of the 99 years lease" (IV R. 1300). Thus it was held that the reserved issue of the burdensome character of the lease was res adjudicata as against the City.

The burdensome character of the lease was specially pleaded by the City in a counterclaim (I R. 186). Chase for its answer to the City's counterclaim filed merely a general denial (I R. 214). While Chase pleaded in its complaint certain decisions as res adjudicata, it did not plead res judicata in its answer to the issue of burdensomeness raised by the City's counterclaim.

Despite the fact that no issue of res adjudicata was presented by Chase's answer to the City's counterclaim despite the reservation of the issue by the trial court, the Circuit Court of Appeals decided that the burdensome character of the lease was res adjudicata.

2. Under the uniform decisions of the highest courts of Indiana, the question of whether a former judgment was a complete adjudication of the issues involved in this case is a question of fact.

McSweeney v. Carney, 72 Ind. 430, 433.

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the lease was enforceable against the City if not burdensome in character, but was unenforceable if burdensome. It then proceeded to determine that the question of the burdensomeness of the lease had been adjudicated, and denied the City any right to be heard on that issue. It thus deprived the City of rights guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Cf. Cobbledick v. U. S., 309 U. S. 323, 325.

The hearing to which the City was entitled was a hearing in the trial court. Nothing short of that, will satisfy the requirements of due process.

The City by a timely petition for a rehearing emphasized this denial of due process and requested the Circuit Court of Appeals to reverse its decision and to remand the cause for a hearing on the issue of the burdensome character of the lease. (IV R. 1309, 1310, 1346.)

3. The Circuit Court of Appeals refused to follow an unbroken line of Indiana decisions to the effect that nothing passes by implication when a grant is made by a municipality—and it thus violated the rule laid down by this court in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64. Having determined that there was no express power granted to execute such a lease, the Circuit Court of Appeals should have held that inasmuch as the grant was from the City of Indianapolis, no power to execute such a lease could be implied.

The trial court found as a fact from the trust instruments in evidence that:

> "There is no provision in any of the trust instruments authorizing Citizens Gas Company to become lessee of a competing gas property." (Finding No. 20, III R. 1167.)

With this finding the Circuit Court of Appeals agreed. It said:

> "The terms of the trust neither expressly conferred upon nor expressly denied the trustee the power to acquire a non-freehold interest in property. In truth the terms of the trust remain silent on the subject of trustee's powers. The only applicable language relates to duties and not to powers. This language imposes upon the trustee the duty 'to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power.' Plainly the extent of the trustee's powers are measured by the scope of the duty imposed in the terms of the trust, and it is reasonable to conclude that the trustee had the power to secure what utility property was necessary or appropriate to enable it to engage in the gas business and to supply the City with light, heat and power."
>
> 113 F. (2d) 217, 227 (IV R. 1297.)

Yet the Circuit Court of Appeals held that:

>
> 113 F. (2d) 217, 229 (IV R. 1300).

The trust instruments consisted of the franchise contract from the City to Citizens Gas (I R. 81) and the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas (I R. 95).

The franchise contract designated the material provisions to be inserted in the Citizens Gas Articles of Incorporation. These material provisions thus became a condition to the grant and are to be construed strictly against the grantee.

In Indianapolis Cable Railroad Co. v. Citizens Street Railroad Company (1890), 127 Ind. 369, 390, it was said:

> "A grant made by the commonwealth, or by a municipal corporation, under authority from the commonwealth, is to be taken most strongly against the grantee, and nothing is to be taken by implication against the public, except what necessarily flows from the nature of the terms of the grant."

The same rule was announced by this court in Piedmont Power & Light Co. v. Town of Graham, et al., 253 U. S. 193, 194, 195; Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 22, 34; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 471; and Mitchell v. Dakota Central Telegraph Co., 246 U. S. 396, 412.

Under the above rule prevailing in Indiana and announced by this court, implied power in the trustee to make the lease should not be read into the trust instruments which admittedly are barren of any express power.

4. The entire historical background of the public charitable trust involved in this case and the terms of the trust instruments themselves, negative the idea of the right of the initial trustee to enter into a 99 year lease with Indianapolis Gas. Citizens Gas was organized to compete with Indianapolis Gas. Surely the settlors of the trust never contemplated a surrender of this competitive situation by agreement with Indianapolis Gas.

The lease requires rental to be paid until 2012 of sums equal to (1) 5% on the outstanding bonds (which now amount to $6,881,000); (2) 6% on the common stock of $2,000,000; (3) all taxes for which Indianapolis Gas would become liable including property and income taxes, state and federal; and (4) certain additional miscellaneous items

There is no provision for any adjustment of the lease rental due to economic or business conditions, or for any change based upon the earning power of invested capital. No matter how much taxes are increased, the burden falls always upon the lessee. There is not even a provision for a periodical adjustment of rental by agreement, or failing agreement, by arbitration.

Surely such a lease was not within the implied power of the trustee to execute.

VI.

THE CITY IS NOT ESTOPPED TO ASSERT THE UNENFORCEABILITY OF THE LEASE.

At pages 53 to 71, inclusive, of our original brief we pointed out that the doctrine of estoppel could not be successfully asserted against the City. The reasons for that conclusion may be thus briefly summarized:

1. There was no proof whatever that either Chase or any present bondholder of Indianapolis Gas even knew of, much less relied upon, any claimed act of estoppel. The Indiana rule is that the doctrine of estoppel has no application where the other party was not influenced by the acts claimed to result in such estoppel.

Ross et al. v. Banta (1894), 140 Ind. 120, 150;
Hosford v. Johnson (1881), 74 Ind. 479, 485.

2. The acts relied upon do not form the basis for an estoppel, nor has it been shown that any representative of the City ever asserted that the lease was enforceable against it.

3. A municipal corporation cannot, under the Indiana law, be estopped by the unauthorized acts of its officers.

Platter v. Board (1885), 103 Ind. 360, 381;

Cummins v. City of Seymour (1881), 79 Ind. 491, 496;

Lake County, etc., Co. v. Walsh (1902), 160 Ind. 32, 39.

In addition, the trial court found the facts respecting estoppel against Chase. (Findings No. 44, 45, III R. 1181; 46, 47, III R. 1182; 51, 54, III R. 1185; 58, III R. 1187.)

The third and fourth conclusions of law of the trial court were:

"3. That the City is not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease.

"4. That the Citizens Gas Company is not estopped by any of its conduct from denying the validity and enforceability against it of the lease." (III R. 1190.)

These findings are supported by ample evidence.

In Guilford Const. Co. v. Biggs (1939, C.C.A. 4) 102 F 2d, 46, 47, it was said:

"The provisions of the new procedural rules that the findings of fact of the trial judge are to be accepted on appeal unless clearly wrong (Rule 52 (a) 28 U.S.C.A., following section 723 (c)) is but the formulation of a rule long recognized and applied by courts of equity."

This court said in Adamson v. Gilliland (1916), 242 U. S. 350, 353:

> "Considering that a patent has been granted to the plaintiff, the case is pre-eminently one for the application of the practical rule that so far as the finding of the master or judge who saw the witnesses 'depends upon conflicting testimony or upon the credibility of witnesses, or so far as there is any testimony consistent with the finding, it must be treated as unassailable.' Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 636."

In the instant case there is ample evidence consistent with the findings of the trial court. Its findings under the above rules are unassailable.

VII.

ALL CONTESTED ISSUES FOUND AGAINST CHASE AND INDIANAPOLIS GAS BY TRIAL COURT.

As pointed out, the trial court found the facts specially. On every contested issue, the findings were against Chase and Indianapolis Gas.

Despite the findings of the trial court both Chase and Indianapolis Gas have presented this case to the Circuit Court of Appeals and to this court as though there were no findings of the trial court against them.

Each finding of the trial court is amply supported by competent and relevant evidence. The findings of the trial court thus supported are unassailable.

VIII.

WILLIAMS CASE DOES NOT STATE APPLICABLE INDIANA LAW.

The case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., et al. (206 Ind. 448) is not res judicata of the issues present here for reasons pointed out in our original brief at pages 75 to 79.

Nor does the Williams case express the Indiana law applicable to the issues here. The Williams case was decided on a demurrer. The Indiana Supreme Court passed on only those facts pleaded in the complaint.

The nature of the Williams case is stated by the Indiana Supreme Court to be a "Suit by appellant (Williams) to establish a trust; to quiet title to property of the trust estate; to recover diverted assets of the trust estate; to recapture the trust and its property from delinquent and insolvent trustees and sequester the same with receiverships; to administer the trust during an emergency and at the end of the emergency turn over the trust and its property to its lawful beneficiaries."

Thus it is apparent that the cause of action in the Williams case is different from the cause of action here. Hence it follows that an issue not actually litigated in the Williams case is not res adjudicata.

The validity of the 99 year lease against the City as successor trustee was not actually litigated in the Williams case; thus, is not res judicata.

IX.

INDIANAPOLIS GAS SHOULD HAVE BEEN REALIGNED AS A PLAINTIFF AND THUS JURISDICTION OF THE LOWER COURT DESTROYED.

We have fully discussed this proposition at pages 22 to 32 of our original brief.

Chase and Indianapolis Gas both actively urge the enforceability of the lease against the City. The City denies this claim. Unless and until the lease is held binding upon the City, neither Chase nor Indianapolis Gas can obtain any relief whatever against the City under the terms of the lease.

This is the real, the main and the controlling controversy in this case. The attitude of the parties in respect of this controversy (and not in respect of subsidiary or dependent issues) should determine whether realignment is required.

Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 204, 62 L. Ed. 664.

This record shows (see our original brief, page 26) that as a practical proposition Indianapolis Gas is completely insulated from paying the judgment of more than a million dollars rendered against it in favor of Chase. It taxes one's credulity to believe that Chase and Indianapolis Gas are hostile litigants, when Indianapolis Gas in all courts in which this case has been heard has readily admitted that the judgment against it for the principal sum is correct and did not even ask this court to review such judgment. The original alignment of Indianapolis Gas was based on no reality of conflict with Chase on the dominant issue in this case, viz: the enforceability of the 99 year lease against the City.

X.

FISHBACK CASE NOT RES JUDICATA

The case of Fishback v. Public Service Commission (193 Ind. 282), pleaded by Chase to be res judicata (I R. 10, 13) and relied on by the Circuit Court of Appeals as a barrier to the City's contentions (IV R. 1300), in reality determined only that the attempted appeal was not taken in time. The case was dismissed as to the City before judgment in the trial court. In speaking of the order of the Public Service Commission, also pleaded by Chase as res judicata of the validity of the lease (I R. 8, 18), the court said (page 285):

> "The approval of a lease of the property of one public utility corporation by another is a legislative act . . ."

It is not a judicial act. Being merely legislative in character it could not be res judicata.

XI.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss the other questions presented in our original briefs, as this memorandum is intended merely to supplement such briefs.

The City submits that the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals should be reversed.

APPENDIX A.

Chapter 129, Acts 1905 (Pg. 271)

Sec. 85. "No executive department, officer or employee thereof shall have power to bind such city to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purposes of such department; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations are declared to be absolutely void: Provided, That the board of public works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys and other public places or for supplying the city with gas, water, steam, power, heat or electricity, and for the collection, removal and disposal of garbage, ashes or refuse on such terms and for such times, not exceeding the term fixed by section 254 (Sec. 48-7302) of this act, as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such city and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect, and, if so approved, shall immediately become effective: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any such department from issuing any bond or other obligation expressly authorized by this act and provided for by ordinance."

APPENDIX B.

Chapter 129, Acts 1905 (Pg. 396)

Sec. 254. "Any city or town may enter into contract with any person, corporation or association to furnish such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat or light, or drainage or sewerage facilities, or to build or extend railroads, interurban or street-car lines, telegraph or telephone lines, drainage or sewerage system, or other public conveniences, into or through such city or town; and may provide in such contract the terms and conditions on which such water, motive power, heat, light, drainage, sewerage, railroad, interurban, street-car, telegraph or telephone service, or other uses and accommodations of such and other public conveniences may be furnished by such person, corporation or association to such city or town, and to its inhabitants; Provided, That no such contract shall be entered into by any such city or town for furnishing such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, drainage, sewerage, heat or light, upon or along the streets of such city or town for a term longer than twenty-five (25) years: And, provided further, That before any such contract shall be made by any city of the first, second, third or fourth class such contract shall be first agreed to by the board of public works of such city, after which agreement, such board shall cause a proper ordinance approving and confirming such contract to be presented for adoption by the common council of such city."

REPLY BRIEF OF CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS TO REJOINDER BRIEF OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK AND SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER BRIEF OF INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY

Respondent and cross-petitioner Chase in its rejoinder brief at page 6 says that:

> "The argument (Supp. Mem. 6-8) that the Lease itself was prohibited by Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 (quoted, Pl. Br. 147-9) is absurd. These statutes obviously relate solely to contracts to which a municipality is a party and the City was not a party to the contract here in question."

Chase thus claims that Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 are inapplicable as limiting the duration of a contract with the City because the City did not execute the lease. Chase thus admits that there was no initial liability on the City in respect of the obligations of the lease.

The above named statutes, however, are applicable whenever any attempt is made to bind the City at any time. The obvious purpose of these acts and wise public policy which caused their enactment cannot be evaded by first executing a contract to which the City is not a party and then at some subsequent time seeking to make the City liable thereunder. The language of the Acts is all embracing and condemns any contract in violation of the prohibition therein contained whenever and however made so long as the City is sought to be held liable thereunder.

Indianapolis Gas, in its Supplemental Answer Brief, claims at page 9 that Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905, were repealed. Indianapolis Gas says:

> "So far, if at all, as Chapter 129, Acts Indiana 1905, sections 85 and 254, were in conflict with the Public Service Commission Act they were repealed by the last section (130) of Chapter 76, Acts 1913 (Appendix L), which expressly repealed all prior legislation 'so far as inconsistent therewith.' This included repeal of all statutes (if any) which forbade the execution of this lease 'at a price and on terms fixed by the Commission.' "

Section 130 of Chapter 76, Acts of 1913, did not repeal Sections 85 and 254, Chapter 129, of the Acts of 1905 because Sections 85 and 254 are not inconsistent with the provisions of Chapter 76 (Shively-Spencer Act) of the Acts of 1913.

Section 130 of Chapter 76, Acts of 1913 (p. 214) does not enumerate the Acts or parts of Acts repealed, but simply repeals all Acts and parts of Acts conflicting with the provisions of Chapter 76 so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of said Chapter 76.

It is not claimed by Indianapolis Gas that Chapter 76 of the Acts of 1913 expressly repealed either of Sections 85 or 254 of the Acts of 1905.

Repeals by implication are not favored by Indiana courts.

Robinson v. Rippey (1887), 111 Ind. 112;
City of Indianapolis v. Morris (1900), 25 Ind. App. 409.

The purpose of the Shively-Spencer Act and these two sections of the Cities and Towns Act of 1905 are essentially different in that the Shively-Spencer Act with certain exceptions was not intended to regulate municipally owned utilities; whereas, the Cities and Towns Act was intended in part to prevent the imposition of onerous contracts on municipally owned utilities which would result in burden to the taxpayers.

This situation is emphasized in this case when we consider that the Act of 1933 (Chapter 190) exempts the City of Indianapolis in respect of this utility from all control by the Public Service Commission; and that while the express point here involved was not before the Indiana Supreme Court in Hamer v. City of Huntington (1939), 215 Ind. 594, the Court dealt with Section 85 of the Acts of 1905 and recognized the efficacy of this statute. In that case it was held that a contract entered into on December 31, 1936, was absolutely void because no appropriation of funds had been made prior to the execution of the contract in violation of the provisions of said Section 85. Section 85 refers to Section 254 and the two statutes stand together.

Chase, in its brief, page 2, quotes an alleged admission of the City (I R. 243):

> "that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company, * * * "

In order to make what Chase now says is its main point, it takes a position not borne out by the record. A reference to the sentences in the record immediately following the quoted portion set out by Chase, show the unfairness of Chase's position. The portion quoted by Chase, together with the clauses and phrases immediately following the quoted portion and omitted by Chase, are herewith set out (the italicized portion was omitted by Chase):

> "that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company, but they aver that said lease was not and is not one of such obligations; and they aver that the tendered assignment of said lease was expressly rejected by the City of Indianapolis, that said lease was not assumed by the City, and is wholly invalid and unenforceable as against defendant City of Indianapolis" (I R. 243).

Chase also in its brief at page 3 quotes a portion of the City's answer and counter claim in respect of certain averments in respect of the existing controversy and states that the quoted extract establishes "that Citizens Gas had power to execute the lease and make it binding on the public charitable trust."

We set out below the relevant portion of the answer and counter claim and have italicized the portions omitted by Chase in its quotation:

> "These answering defendants admit that a real and actual controversy exists as to the binding force and effect of said lease of September 30, 1913, but they allege:
> (b) That such controversy exists only as to the binding force and effect of said lease of September 30, 1913, upon these answering defendants after the transfer of the property and assets formerly held by the Citizens Gas Company as Trustee of a public charitable trust to the City of Indianapolis as the successor Trustee of said trust, which transfer was made on September 9, 1935, and allege that as to these defendants, no controversy ever existed as to the binding force and effect of said lease for and during the term of trusteeship of said Citizens Gas Company." (I R. 243.)

A cursory examination of the quoted language completely refutes the claim of Chase of any admission of liability under the lease. The City was here only dealing with the question of when the controversy arose. It is significant to remember that the quoted portion is a part of an answer and counter claim in which the City sought a declaratory judgment that the lease was unenforceable as to it.

In its rejoinder brief at page 3 Chase quotes one question and answer from a colloquy between Mr. Justice Reed and counsel for the City.

We have had no experience with the practice of quoting colloquies occurring at a former argument, but if any weight is to be given to such a colloquy, then the full discussion relating to the subject-matter should be set forth. This, we have done in an appendix to this brief, the transcript having been furnished us by Chase's counsel. An examination of this discussion will serve to show that in the colloquy in its entirety the position of the City was then as expressed in its brief and as it has been throughout this controversy. To quote half sentences, or isolated statements, and torture a construction from them not warranted by the full text, is to give rise to confusion and unfairness to one's opponents.

Respectfully submitted.

APPENDIX A

MR. JUSTICE REED: The City entered into possession?

MR. THOMPSON: The City entered into possession under the terms of the standstill bill (agreement). We faced this situation, if the Court please. There were 50,000 consumers on the lines of the Indianapolis Gas Company. We called the attention of the Gas Company to the fact the public interest demanded that that service should not be interrupted. We offered to pay (in connection with) the take-over on December (September) 9, 1935, interest due October 1. We offered to pay the $171,000 of interest, provided they would agree that the payment of that money, and the use of this property, should not constitute an admission on our part that the lease was valid, or an admission on their part that the lease was invalid. On December (September) 30, our offer was accepted, and then on March 2, 1938, that agreement was continued until the question of enforceability of this lease against the City should be finally determined; so that our occupation of this property has not been on the theory that we were bound by the lease, but it has been under an agreement with the Indianapolis Gas Company that our occupancy should not affect us in this litigation.

MR. JUSTICE REED: Mr. Thompson, as I understand the record, there has (had) been some arrangement made prior to the actual deeding by the Citizens to the City of Indianapolis of this property. The City had passed a resolution which they carried out, providing for taking over the property of the Citizens.

MR. THOMPSON: That is true.

MR. JUSTICE REED: Do you claim there was any refusal to take this lease prior to the actual presentation?

MR. THOMPSON: No. I claim the resolution of 1929 adopted by the Board of Public Works simply was a general resolution to take over that property which constituted the trust res. In that connection, I must call Your Honor's attention to the fact that this Charitable Trust was created in 1908. No part of the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, and no lease on that property, was a part of the original trust lease (res). The lease was not executed until five years later, in 1913, so that it is our contention that when we adopted a resolution to take over the property of this trust—and that resolution indicates that it is the property that is coming to us under this arrangement—we were not obligated and did not intend to take over a lease which the initial trustee had no power to execute.

MR. JUSTICE REED: In that resolution you did not eliminate the lease you were going to take over?

MR. THOMPSON: Nor did we say it was included.

MR. JUSTICE REED: As I understand the lease, it took over whatever property belonged to the trustee.

MR. THOMPSON: That is right.

MR. JUSTICE REED: We have here, then, at least as one phase of it, to determine whether or not this lease became a part of the property of the corporate trustee.

MR. THOMPSON: Your statement is entirely correct. If it did, we are obligated by its terms. If it did not, we are not obligated by it.

MR. JUSTICE REED: And you take the position that the corporate trustee had no right to take over this lease of the Indianapolis (Gas)?

MR. THOMPSON: I do.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITIONS FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

Separate appeals (Nos. 7143, 7144) from the single decision of the trial court were heard together by the Circuit Court of Appeals on the same record. The City has filed separate petitions for a writ of certiorari (causes 421 and 422) with respect to each appeal. Since these two petitions and the supporting briefs are substantially identical, plaintiff is filing this one brief in opposition to each of the City's petitions.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1281-1306) is reported in 113 F. (2d) 217.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The absence of any adequate Statement of Facts in the petitions requires a brief statement of the undisputed facts upon which the Circuit Court of Appeals based its opinion.

In 1902 Indianapolis Gas gave an open mortgage upon its plant and property to one of Chase's corporate predecessors to secure an authorized bond issue of $7,500,000. (Bill, Exhibit A, I R. 23, offered, II R. 327.) In 1913 Indianapolis Gas leased its property to Citizens Gas, as lessee, for 99 years, the lessee agreeing to pay, as part of the rental, the interest on the outstanding mortgage Bonds of Indianapolis Gas and on any additional Bonds which might subsequently be issued. (Bill, Exhibit B, I R. 51, offered, II R. 327.) Citizens Gas paid the interest on the Bonds from 1913 to 1935 (II R. 627, Stip. par. 11(a)), and sold additional Bonds (about $2,000,000) to the public on representations that it had a 99 year lease on the property and had agreed to pay the interest on the Bonds as part of the rental. (II R. 627, Stip. par. 10(a); II R. 573, 592-605; III R. 899-922.) Citizens Gas was the trustee of a Public Charitable Trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of the City of Indianapolis. On September 9, 1935, it conveyed all of its property, including the Lease in question, to the City, as successor trustee, the entire consideration being paid to the bondholders and stockholders of Citizens Gas, leaving it without assets. (II R. 634-5, Stip. pars. 16-17.)

The City accepted and recorded the various instruments of transfer, including an assignment of the Lease, went into possession of the Citizens Gas property, including the leased property, and has operated all of said property and received the revenues therefrom continuously since September 9, 1935. (II R. 330, 350, 467-8; II R. 622-3, Stip. par. 6(c).) The statement made in the petitions (p. 9) that the City rejected the assignment of the Lease tendered by Citizens Gas has no support in the record.

except the single fact that the City—at about the time when it accepted the assignment of the Lease from Citizens Gas, had the assignment recorded, and took possession of the leased property—adopted an ex parte resolution saying that it refused to accept the assignment. The petitioners' statement (Pet. 9) that Indianapolis Gas consented to the City's taking possession of and operating the property is wholly unsupported by the record. The City received no communication of any sort from Indianapolis Gas until September 30, 1935 (PX Stip. 66, III R. 838, offered, II R. 329), three weeks after it had taken possession of the leased property, and there was no agreement concerning the City's use of the property until March 2, 1936. (DX Stip. 64, 65, III R. 968-9, offered, II R. 433-4; DX B, III R. 981, offered, II R. 386.) Thus, the City had no right to take possession of the leased property on September 9, 1935, except as assignee of the Lease.

The City provided for the payment of the Bond interest due on October 1, 1935, and on April 1, 1936, but no interest has been paid since April 1, 1936.

The respondent, Chase, brought this action in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, suing as Trustee under the Indianapolis Gas mortgage and joining Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City as defendants. All of the defendants were citizens of Indiana and federal jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship. Chase sought to recover judgment for the overdue interest on the Bonds, with interest on unpaid interest, against all the defendants and against the property once owned by Citizens Gas and transferred by it to the City. Plaintiff also sought a declaratory judgment to establish that the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas was and is binding on all the defendants and on the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas.

The District Court originally held that Indianapolis Gas should be realigned with plaintiff and dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction (I R. 271). The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed this decision and remanded the case for trial. (II R. 285-92; 96 F. (2d) 363.) This Court denied certiorari. (305 U. S. 600.) On the trial the District Court denied plaintiff any relief except a judgment against Indianapolis Gas alone in the amount of the unpaid coupons. ($1,032,150.00, See III R. 1193.)

Separate appeals were taken by plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. These two causes, Nos. 7143 and 7144, were heard together on the same record. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the District Court and held (IV R. 1306):

> (I) That Chase is entitled to a coercive judgment for the overdue interest, with interest on overdue interest at 5%, against "(1) the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (2) Citizens Gas; and (3) Indianapolis Gas." (The amount due is now about $1,700,000.)
> (II) That "Chase is entitled to a declaratory judgment to the effect that the lease is valid and enforceable against the parties * * *."

The City has filed two petitions for certiorari (Nos. 421 and 422). Chase has filed a cross-petition for writs of certiorari (Nos. 423 and 424), asking that writs be granted on its cross-petition only in the event that the City's petitions are granted.

ARGUMENT

We shall discuss briefly the City's four reasons for the allowance of a writ to show

> (1) that no questions warranting the exercise of this Court's extraordinary jurisdiction are presented, and
> (2) that the decision below is obviously sound upon universally accepted principles.

I. The City's So-called "Constitutional" Question Is Obviously Fanciful.

The City's answer and counter-claim asserted that the City was entitled to reject the assignment of the Lease because the rent was excessive and the Lease burdensome. (I R. 181, 186.) Chase moved to strike these allegations from the City's pleading (II R. 317); the District Court overruled that motion (II R. 320), but directed that the taking of evidence in support of that defense should be deferred.* (II R. 321-2.) Chase's first two assignments of error (Statement of Points) on appeal were addressed to the District Court's failure to strike out this immaterial matter. (III R. 1196.) This error was fully briefed and argued before the Court of Appeals without any suggestion from the City that a constitutional question was involved.

The Court of Appeals came to the conclusion, as a matter of law, that the City's allegations of "burdensomeness" presented no defense, and therefore directed final judgment without permitting the City an opportunity to prove something which would be wholly immaterial even if it were proved. The City claims that unless it has an opportunity to prove these wholly immaterial allegations, its constitutional rights have been violated.

The City never asserted any rights under the Fourteenth Amendment until its first Petition for Rehearing. (IV R. 1310.) It is clear that the Court's action not being that of a state the Fourteenth Amendment has no application.

> Jones v. Buffalo Creek Coal & Coke Co., 245 U. S. 328, 329 (1917, Brandeis, J.).

* While Chase did not object to this order (Pet. 11, 21, 25), it has consistently maintained that the allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense and that no evidence to support them should be received. (e.g. IV R. 1331-2.) Under this order several claims on which Chase relied are still to be tried (e.g., failure to maintain the leased property, recovery of fees and expenses, etc.), but they do not affect the determination of the validity of the Lease.

The City never asserted any rights under the Fifth Amendment until its Second Petition for Rehearing. (cf. IV R. 1310 and IV R. 1346.) The substance of its contention in this respect is that the action of the Appellate Court in deciding, as a matter of law, that the defense of "burdensomeness" is wholly ineffectual and in denying the City a right to prove such immaterial allegations amounts to a lack of due process. There is no substance in such a contention. It is the universal practice for a trial court or an appellate court, in sustaining a demurrer, a motion to strike, or other similar attacks upon a particular defense to refuse to allow a party to prove facts which would constitute no defense if they were proved. Any other rule would hopelessly encumber the courts in the trial of cases. The right to prove facts which would constitute no defense if proved cannot be an element of due process.

It should also be noted that the issue reserved by the District Court was merely whether the City "had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome." (II R. 322.) Since, as the Court of Appeals held (IV R. 1292, 1300-01), the City did not "refuse and reject an assignment of such lease," there was no occasion to receive evidence on the question whether the City had a right which it did not exercise.

The City had ample opportunity in both lower courts to present its views as to the validity of the defense of burdensomeness. Moreover, the requirements of due process of law would have been fully satisfied even if the City had had no hearing on this question in the District Court. American Surety Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U. S. 156, 168 (Brandeis, J., 1932). This is especially true in a federal equity case in which the Court of Appeals hears the case de novo and has full power to adjudicate all issues of law and fact.

Unkle v. Wills, 281 Fed. 29, 34 (C. C. A. 8th, 1922).

The cases on which the City relies (Pet. 14, 23-25)—holding that due process of law necessitates a judicial review "as to both law and facts" (not necessarily by a trial court)—are not germane to the question here presented.

The record discloses ample reasons why the decision of the Court of Appeals—that the alleged burdensomeness is no defense—is sound.

(1) When the Lease was made in 1913 it was expressly approved by the Public Service Commission of Indiana as being in the public interest. (Bill, Exhibit D, I R. 116, offered I R. 327.) The City was a party to the proceedings before the Commission and the Lease was made, to use the City's own language, "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis." (PX 89, III R. 847, 859, offered II R. 334.) It is the settled law of Indiana that the determination of the Public Service Commission —that the Lease was in the public interest, hence not burdensome—is binding upon all the world and cannot be collaterally attacked.

Public Service Commission v. Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 43; 137 N. E. 705, 707 (1922).

(2) In 1930 Williams, suing as a beneficiary of the Public Charitable Trust, brought suit to set aside the Lease as a burden and cloud upon the trust. (PX Stip. 35, II R. 762, 770, 780, offered II R. 328.) All of the parties to the present case were joined as defendants by Williams. (II R. 761-4.) In that case the Supreme Court of Indiana held, among other things, that Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas had power to execute the Lease in question, that the action of the Public Service Commission in approving the Lease was valid, and that the Lease could not be set aside on the ground that it was burdensome.

Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448; 188 N. E. 212, 215-16 (1934).

See also opinion below, IV R. 1290, footnote 5.

This decision of the Indiana Supreme Court was binding upon the court below as to the validity of the Lease because it was (1) a final adjudication between the parties, and (2) an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana, which was binding in the federal courts under the rule of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64 (1938).

(3) Under the law, which is clearly established in Indiana as elsewhere, neither a party to nor an assignee of a contract or lease can escape its obligations by showing that they either were originally or have become burdensome. This rule is peculiarly applicable where the Lease, as in this case, was made "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis."

Hamilton v. Hamilton, 162 Ind. 430; 70 N. E. 535, 537 (1904);

Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88; 75 N. E. 582, 592 (1905);

Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas-Light & Coke Co., 66 Ind. 396, 407 (1879);

Terre Haute v. Terre Haute Waterworks Co., 94 Ind. 305, 307 (1884).

Thus the Circuit Court of Appeals was obviously right in holding that the City's allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense. Certainly no constitutional rights of the City were violated when the court refused to allow it to prove facts which would constitute no defense.

II. The Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Refused to Re-Align Indianapolis Gas with Chase as a Party Plaintiff.

The City contends that Indianapolis Gas should be re-aligned with Chase as a party plaintiff. The District Court rendered a coercive judgment for Chase against Indianapolis Gas alone for $1,032,150. (III R. 1193.) The City did not appeal from that decision of the District Court; it was content with federal jurisdiction as long as the decision on the merits was in its favor. The decision of the Court of Appeals requires a coercive judgment against Indianapolis Gas for about $1,700,000.

Is it possible that a party against whom plaintiff is entitled to a judgment of this kind should be aligned with the plaintiff? The suggestion answers itself.

Petitioners' argument is based wholly upon the fact that the City, as successor trustee, has been found primarily and Indianapolis Gas secondarily (or tertiarily) liable, and that the City as trustee can pay the judgment. A parity of reasoning would require a re-alignment whenever a creditor sues a principal and a surety on a debt.

The proposition of law stated by the Court of Appeals on the first appeal (II R. 291-2)—that a defendant against whom plaintiff asks specific relief and with whom plaintiff has distinct conflicts of interest should not be re-aligned with plaintiff in determining federal jurisdiction—has been universally recognized by this Court and other federal courts.

Petitioners' counsel fail to cite a single case from any court in which a defendant was re-aligned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes where a single substantial controversy between plaintiff and such defendant was presented by the bill. On the other hand, the decisions of this Court and the several Circuit Courts of Appeals unanimously support the proposition that there will be no re-alignment if there is a single substantial controversy between plaintiff and the defendant sought to be re-aligned.

Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 204 (1918);

Republic National Bank & Trust Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Co., 68 F. (2d) 445, 447 (C. C. A. 5th, 1934);

Detroit Tile & Mosaic Co. v. Mason Contractors' Association, 48 F. (2d) 729 (C. C. A. 6th, 1931);

Franz v. Franz, 15 F. (2d) 797, 799 (C. C. A. 8th, 1926);

Feidler v. Bartleson, 161 Fed. 30, 35 (C. C. A. 9th, 1908).

The federal courts have continued to apply this rule since the decision of the jurisdictional question in this case in 1938, relying upon the cases just cited and the decision of the Court of Appeals in this case. See Rex Co. v. International Harvester Co., 107 F. (2d) 767, 768 (C. C. A. 5th, 1939).

We submit that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining jurisdiction, as to which this Court has previously denied certiorari (305 U. S. 600), accords with the settled law and presents no question requiring examination by this Court.

III. The Rule of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins Required the Decision Made by the Court of Appeals and There Was No Departure from that Rule.

The rule of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, compelled the result reached by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Every Indiana decision bearing upon the validity of the Lease compels the conclusion that it is valid. The City's present contentions as to the validity of the Lease were all conclusively negatived, as a matter of Indiana law, in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448; 188 N. E. 212 (1934). Entirely aside from the question of res judicata, that decision conclusively established the law of Indiana which the Court of Appeals was bound to follow.

Let us examine briefly the respects in which the Court of Appeals is supposed to have disregarded the Indiana law.

(1) Estoppel against the City. (Pet. 12, 15, 29.) The Court of Appeals made no decision on the question of estoppel in pais, although it would have been fully warranted in doing so. In both its first and its second Petitions for Rehearing the City admitted, as to any claimed estoppel of the City, that "there is no express holding to that effect." (IV R. 1313, line 17; IV R. 1351, line 1.) The court can hardly have disregarded the Indiana law on a question as to which it made no express holding.

(2) Res Judicata. (Pet. 12, 15, 30.) The decision of the Court of Appeals was based primarily upon its independent conclusion that the Lease is valid. The court did state, however, "in passing," that certain cases "are determinative of the immediate issue here, i.e., as to the validity of the 99 years lease." (IV R. 1390; 113 F. (2d) 217, 229.)

It is not clear whether the court regarded the cases referred to as "determinative" on the ground of res judicata or on the ground that they established the Indiana law on the subject. Each of them was important in establishing the Indiana law, and at least one of them was plainly binding as res judicata. For example, in the Williams case the Supreme Court of Indiana determined, as to the very Lease here in question, in a case in which all the parties now before the court were joined, that the Lease was valid and a part of the trust estate.

(3) Construction of Municipal Grants. (Pet. 13, 15, 30.) The construction of the franchise contract here in question is largely a question of fact peculiar to this case and presents no question of general importance. However, it is interesting to observe that the result reached by the Court of Appeals in holding that Citizens Gas had the power to make this 99 year Lease is in complete agreement with the decision of the Public Service Commission in 1913, the decision in Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282, 138 N. E. 346 (1923), the decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212, 215-16 (1934), and the uniform practical construction of the franchise contract by Citizens Gas and the City over a period of 22 years. Moreover, the power to make the Lease in question was specifically conferred by § 95½ of the Shively-Spencer Act of 1913.*

(4) The alleged statutory prohibitions. (Pet. 13, 16, 31.) The City has express power to receive trusts "and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same" (Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, § 48-1407) and this power is not subject to the statutes on which the City relies. Beyond that, the "validating acts" of 1929† gave the City express power to take over all the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease.

The frequently repeated assertion that "the lease had no municipal sanction" (Pet. 7, 13, 16, 31) is wholly immaterial if it refers to the execution of the Lease in 1913 and is contrary to the facts if it refers to the City's assumption of the obligations under the Lease. Both the Board of Directors for Utilities and the City Council took appropriate action to take over the Public Charitable Trust, which included the Lease in question. (II R. 330, 350, 467-8; DX 8, III R. 1018-19, offered, II R. 429.) This necessarily involved the assumption of the lessee's obligations under the Lease.

* This section is quoted in full in Appendix A to this brief, infra, p. 15.

 The pertinent portions of this section are quoted in Appendix B to this brief, infra, p. 16.

† The pertinent portions of these acts are quoted in Appendix C to this brief, infra, p. 17. As admitted by the City in the Todd case and pointed out by the Court of Appeals (IV R. 1288, note 3), the "validating acts" of 1929 were passed to remove any doubt as to the City's authority to take over the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease here in question.

It is clear that in upholding the validity of the Lease the Court of Appeals followed the controlling Indiana decisions and thereby conformed to the rule laid down by this Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins.

IV. The Judgment Ordered by the Court of Appeals Binds the City as Successor Trustee and the Trust Property but Imposes no Burden on Revenues Raised by Taxation.

The statement repeatedly made throughout the petitions that the judgment directed by the Circuit Court of Appeals "presumably imposes the burden on revenues raised by taxation" (Pet. 13, 16, 31) is wholly unsupported by the record. Both the opinion and order of the Court of Appeals make it clear that the City is liable under the Lease as successor trustee only, which means that its liability is limited to the trust property (including the leasehold of the Indianapolis Gas property) and the revenues from the trust property. Thus the decrees of the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1307-8) direct the District Court to enter a declaratory judgment "to the effect that the lease is valid and enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

> "(1) The City as Successor Trustee and the Trust Property; * * *."

Similarly, the coercive judgment for the overdue interest is to be "enforceable against the parties in the following order of liability:

> "(1) The City as Successor Trustee and the Trust Property; * * *."

The City raised this same question in its Petition for Rehearing (IV R. 1312-13) and to avoid any possible question on this point the Court of Appeals amended its opinion by inserting the words "as successor trustee" in the one place in its opinion where it had omitted such language in directing the judgment. (Compare IV R. 1306, line 34, and IV R. 1335.)

Both the opinion and order of the Court of Appeals make it abundantly clear that the coercive judgment and the declaratory judgment will bind the City in its capacity as successor trustee only and the trust property.

CONCLUSION.

The federal questions raised by the City are clearly without substance and present no reason for granting a writ of certiorari. As to the questions of Indiana law, the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining the validity of the Lease is in complete accord with the applicable law of Indiana. In fact, the Indiana law directly in point was established by the *Williams case, in which the Supreme Court of Indiana held that the Lease was valid and binding on the Public Charitable Trust. Obviously, this attempt by the City to have this Court overrule the Williams case is contrary to rather than in support of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins.

We submit that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining the validity of the Lease is clearly correct and that this case presents no ground for the exercise of this Court's discretionary power to grant a writ of certiorari.

The said board of directors for utilities shall have the exclusive government, management, regulation and control of any water works, gas works, electric light works, heating and power plants, and all property relating thereto, which any such city may heretofore have acquired or may hereafter acquire or construct for the service of the public as consumers, and such board of directors shall be charged with the duty of and shall have all necessary power to make all necessary repairs, renewals, enlargements, extensions or additions to any such plant or property which in the judgment of said board of directors is desirable or necessary for the proper serving of the inhabitants of said city and the adjacent community served with respect to any such utility from any such plant or plants. In connection with the duties devolving upon such board of directors as aforesaid, it shall have power as follows:

* * * * *

(7) To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any such lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom; and in event there be any outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered by any such lease so taken over under the provisions of which bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage, to do and perform all things necessary in order to secure the benefit of such mortgage provisions and to enable the escrow bonds held by the trustee under any such mortgage to be taken down and sold in order to defray the cost of any extensions and betterments to such leased property; and, subject to the approval of the public service commission of Indiana, to sell any such bonds so taken down for the purpose of assisting in defraying the costs of any such extensions or betterments to such leased property.

Gas Corporations, Certain—Conveyance of Property to Municipality—Retirement of Stock.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That if in the original articles of incorporation of any corporation organized under the laws of this state prior to May 1st, 1913 (that being the date of the creation of the public service commission of this state), for the purpose of furnishing natural or artificial gas for fuel or for illuminating purposes, or for furnishing electric lights or water to the citizens of any town or city within this state, or to furnish light, heat and power to any town or city, or the inhabitants thereof, provision is made for the transfer or conveyance of the property of such corporation to such town or city, subject to the outstanding legal obligations of said corporation, whenever the holders or owners of shares of stock, stock certificates or holders or owners of any beneficial interest in such capital stock shall have received the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest, together with the interest or dividends thereon provided for in such articles of incorporation, such provision in such articles shall be, and is hereby legalized and declared to be valid and binding upon such corporation and upon the holders and owners of any such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest therein or their assigns, and said town or city shall be authorized and entitled to accept a transfer and conveyance of any such property in accordance with the terms and conditions of such articles of incorporation, without the question of the acceptance or acquisition of such property being submitted to a vote of the electors of such town or city and without any election being held therein to determine whether such property shall be acquired by such town or city. It shall not be necessary to obtain the consent or approval of the public service commission of Indiana or any other state board, commission or officer for such transfer and conveyance or of the terms and conditions upon which the same is to be made, but such transfer and conveyance shall be valid without any order or approval of such commission, board or officer, and any provisions in such articles authorizing the board of directors, trustees or other officers of said corporation to issue bonds or to mortgage or otherwise encumber such property before such transfer and conveyance for the purpose of borrowing money with which to pay to such holders or owners of such shares of stock, stock certificates or owners of such beneficial interest thereof the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates, together with the interest or dividends provided for in such articles, and authorizing such directors, trustees or other officers to transfer or convey the property of such corporation to such town or city whenever the holders or owners of the shares of stock, stock certificates or any beneficial interest therein have been paid the par or face value of such shares of stock or stock certificates together with the interest or dividends provided for, are hereby legalized and declared to be valid and binding and such directors, trustees or other officers of such corporation shall have the right and power to carry out and perform any such provisions in accordance with the terms of such articles. This act shall apply to any such corporation if organized before May 1, 1913, and in which the aforesaid provisions are contained in the articles of incorporation and which articles have thereafter been amended and in which such amended articles of incorporation such provisions are contained.

Any provisions in either the original articles of incorporation of any such corporation, or in any amendment thereof, providing for the retirement of the outstanding preferred stock of such corporation before such conveyance is made to any such municipal corporation are hereby legalized and declared valid and binding and said corporation and the officers thereof are authorized to retire such stock in accordance with such provisions and the terms of such preferred stock, and to mortgage such property to secure funds with which to redeem such preferred stock and to pay the holders and owners of the shares of common stock or common stock certificates or of any beneficial interest therein the amounts provided for in such articles, and whenever the outstanding preferred stock in any such corporation shall have been redeemed and the holders and owners of such common stock, common stock certificates or of any beneficial interest therein shall have received the amounts therein provided for in such articles of incorporation, then the property of such corporation shall be conveyed to such municipal corporation in accordance with the provisions of such articles or amended articles of incorporation.

Whenever any instrument of transfer or conveyance shall be executed, transferring or conveying the property, either real or personal, of any such corporation to such town or city the title to such property shall vest in such town or city, subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation: Provided, however, That such town or city shall not be liable for any such obligations and the same shall not constitute a debt of such town or city, but all such obligations shall be a charge upon said property so conveyed, and any mortgage or other lien or encumbrance executed by the board of directors, trustees or other authorized officers of such corporation before such transfer shall continue to be a lien on such property to the same extent as before such transfer or conveyance.

Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, including that located within this state and that located in any other state and any shares of stock or other interest in any other corporation of which said corporation making such transfer shall be the owner, and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property.

Provided, however, That if in any such municipal corporation there is now or is hereafter created or existing a separate taxing unit or district which shall be subject to taxation to raise money with which to either retire or redeem the stock of any such transferring corporation, or to pay obligations incurred for the benefit of such property, then all such property so transferred to such municipal corporation shall be held thereby in trust for the use and benefit of such separate taxing unit or district, and for the general public.

Repeal.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Emergency.

SEC. 3. An emergency existing for the immediate taking effect of this act, the same shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, TRUSTEE, ET AL., Respondents.

BRIEF OF RESPONDENT THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Two appeals (Nos. 7143, 7144) from the same judgment of the District Court were heard together on the same record, and decided with a single opinion (IV R. 1281 to 1306) and the same judgment was entered in each (IV R. 1307, 1308).

Substantially the same petitions and supporting briefs have been filed by the City, et al., in each cause (No. 421, 422) and defendant appellant Indianapolis Gas is filing one brief in opposition to such petition. The said opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reported in 113 Fed. (2d)

217. The cross-petitions for certiorari (Nos. 423, 424) of Chase National Bank being conditional upon what disposition is made of the City's petitions, are not separately answered.

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND MATTERS INVOLVED.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals in these causes, the review of which by this court is now sought by the petitioner, is set out in IV R. 1281-1305 and reported in 113 Fed. (2d) 217.

The facts are there fully and accurately stated, and while in neither the petition nor brief of the petitioner does there appear any direct contradiction of or objection to any statement of fact or issue as therein made, we shall briefly discuss the same as they bear on the correctness of the decision challenged.

A. In 1902, Indianapolis Gas, operating in the City of Indianapolis, executed a mortgage to secure a bond issue in the authorized amount of $7,500,000, of which $4,000,000 were originally authenticated and issued. Chase is now sole trustee under said mortgage indenture.

B. In 1905, Citizens Gas was formed as a public utility for the purpose of supplying the City of Indianapolis with light, heat and power. The Citizens Gas was original trustee of a charitable trust in the property it acquired with the right given the City of Indianapolis to become successor trustee, subject to legal obligations.

C. In 1913, under express provisions section 95½ of the Indiana Public Utility Law (Appendix No. I, p. 16), Citizens Gas, with the approval and by order of the Public Service Commission, leased the property of the Indianapolis Gas for a term of 99 years. Among other provisions, lessee for itself, successors and assigns undertook to pay interest on all outstanding bonds of Indianapolis Gas. At hearing by Public Service Commission on petition to approve proposed lease, City was represented by counsel and consented to order of approval. (Bill, par. 8, I. R. 9, 10; admitted I R. 149, 150.)

Following the order of Commission and the execution of the lease, one Fishback, a resident of Indianapolis and certificate holder of Citizens Gas, brought suit in the court of Marion County, Indiana, to set aside the order of the Public Service Commission and to enjoin the lease being put into effect. Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, the City and members of the Public Service Commission, were made parties defendant. Among other alleged grounds for invalidity of the lease, Fishback alleged the lease was for too long a time and that it would be so burdensome as to defeat the charter provisions by which the City might take under the plant and property of the Citizens Gas. Upon trial judgment was entered against plaintiff; appeal was taken to Supreme Court of Indiana, where it was dismissed (193 Ind. 282).

In 1921 Citizens Gas surrendered its City franchise and received from Public Service Commission an indeterminate permit pursuant to Acts 1921, Chapter 93, page 197.

Appendix No. 3, p. 17.

On March 20, 1929, City, through its Board of Public Works, declared its intention to succeed to the property and interest of Citizens Gas pursuant to franchise agreements and demanded of that company its entire property and interests "of whatever nature or character." (I R. 671-672.) Said gas system was to be taken by the City subject to "all legal obligations against said Company," by virtue of Ordinance of the Common Council of the City (Vol. III R. 1017-1019) and pursuant to the Acts of 1905, pages 246, 247.

Appendix No. 2, p. 16.

It was provided by the ordinance "that the Public Charitable Trust in all such plant and property so delivered to and accepted by said Board of Directors for Utilities be and is hereby received and accepted and the City of Indianapolis hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out" (III R. 1017-1019).

E. In 1930, one Williams brought a representative suit in Marion County, Indiana, naming as defendants the City, and its trustees and directors for utilities, Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, and the then trustees under the mortgage deed of trust of Indianapolis Gas, being all parties to the action at bar. Williams sued as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust and for all others similarly situated, seeking judgment declaring the 99-year lease invalid.

The following grounds, among others, were alleged in the complaint: that the lease was void and a cloud on the title of the public charitable trust, and that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease was invalid (II R. 785).

That the lease was disadvantageous to the lessee and burdensome on the public charitable trust (II R. 795).

That the lease was "ultra vires" said Citizens Gas Company (II R. 790).

In the hearing of said cause, all defendants, including City and Citizens Gas, demurred to the complaint and urged the validity of said lease (II R. 806-807). The trial court entered final judgment in the cause against plaintiff (II R. 632-633), from which judgment Williams appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana. Judgment was affirmed by that court in an opinion reported in Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448.

F. In March, 1935, City by its Board of Directors for Utilities authorized the issuance of bonds in the principal aggregate amount of $8,000,000, principal and interest to be paid from income and revenue of the gas system. The proceeds from such sale of bonds to be used to take over the property owned by Citizens Gas "and/or in which it had an interest" (II R. 822-830).

G. In seeking sale of its revenue bonds, City issued a prospectus to certain security firms as prospective bidders. The City there stated that the gas system of Citizens Gas was owned partly in fee and held partly under the 99-year lease (II 535).

Said bonds were purchased by security houses in reliance on said statements (II R. 533 to 536) who in turn offered them for sale to the public under a circular setting out similar statements of fact (I R. 194-198).

H. On September 9, 1935, after having previously notified Indianapolis Gas that it would take over the property "which has been operated by Citizens Gas," (III R. 836), the City accepted, recorded and retained instruments of conveyance and assignments of all property of Citizens Gas, including the lease in question and went into possession of all of said property, including the leased property and has continued in possession and operation of the said property continuously thereafter (II R. 230, 350, 622-3). Subsequent to receipt of said instruments and on taking possession of said property, it adopted an ex parte resolution in which it denied the acceptance of the obligations incidental to the leasehold estate (I R. 131). By Ordinance of City's Common Council above referred to the City accepted the public trust and agreed to be bound by the conditions and terms accompanying it (III R. 1017-1919).

Until March 2, 1936, no right was granted City by any party to retain possession of the leased property other than by virtue of the assignment to it of the lease by Citizens Gas (III R. 981).

Interest on bonds of Indianapolis Gas due October 1, 1935, and April 1, 1936, was paid by the City. All interest due thereafter has been unpaid and in default.

SUIT AND JUDGMENT.

This action was brought by Chase as Trustee under the mortgage indenture against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas and the City seeking a declaratory judgment that the lease was valid and to recover judgment for unpaid bond interest, with interest thereon, against all defendants and the trust property taken over by the City.

The decision now sought to be reviewed held:

1. That Chase was entitled to a declaratory judgment that the lease is valid and enforceible according to its terms and provisions against City as trustee and the trust property and all other parties defendant.

2. That judgment be entered in favor of Chase, as Trustee for bondholders, for all past due bond interest with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, against the City as Successor Trustee, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas, in said order of liability.

ARGUMENT.

The petitioner in the brief supporting its petition presents certain assignments of error, with argument thereon. We shall briefly discuss these in the order they are presented.

A.

THE DECISION OF THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY DIRECTED A JUDGMENT TO BE ENTERED AGAINST THE CITY AS SUCCESSOR TRUSTEE AND NO ISSUE OF BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE REMAINED IN THE CASE FOR ANY FURTHER TRIAL. BY THE DECISION THE CITY WAS NOT DENIED ANY RIGHT OF DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The question of burdensomeness of the lease arose solely through allegations by City in its counter-claim that it had the right as Successor Trustee "to refuse and reject an assignment of the lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to the trust" (I R. 186).

This issue was entirely removed from the case, and properly so, by the decision that the lease is valid, and that the leasehold estate became, upon its creation, a part of the res of the public charitable trust expressly accepted by the City. By its express acceptance of the trust as Successor Trustee, "agreeing to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust" (III R. 1017-1019), and through the instruments of conveyance and assignment of the entire trust property, including that held both in fee and under the lease, and taking possession, an alleged reason for "rejecting" part of it becomes solely academic.

Indianapolis Gas in its brief to the Circuit Court of Appeals urged that this alleged burdensomeness of the lease was immaterial and not a proper issue in the cause, and that it required no further trial by the District Court. To this contention the City made no denial, either in brief or by oral argument.

Whether or not the lease was invalid because of being burdensome on the trust had been raised in early litigation in the courts of Indiana by beneficiaries of the trust, suing in behalf of all so situated. It was in those cases decided that no "burdensomeness" existed, such as might create a defense to or cast a cloud upon the validity of the lease.

The decisions so rendered were in accord with the contentions made both by City and Citizens Gas throughout that litigation.

> Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282 (II R. 624 to 626; 648 to 668);
> Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448 (II R. 630 to 633; 761 to 812).

The issue of burdensomeness as a ground for urging invalidity of the lease was thus settled and determined in those adjudications, as to the trust itself, which bind all succeeding trustees. This issue being fairly and definitely tried and adjudicated, no constitutional right exists to a party or privy to retry that issue in subsequent litigation.

The issue of burdensomeness was, however, definitely presented to the City in the forming of its decision whether it would or would not succeed Citizens Gas as trustee of the charitable trust. It was for the City to determine in that decision whether the trust in its entirety, weighing both its assets and liabilities, was one which it desired to administer as a succeeding trustee. It decided upon succession, and voluntarily accepted said trust in its entirety, with all of its values and likewise subject to all its liabilities.

It is respectfully submitted that the question of burdensomeness was never a proper issue in this cause and even had it been, it would have ceased to be so upon the decision of Circuit Court of Appeals that the lease was valid for its express term upon execution and approval by the Public Service Commission, and that the leasehold estate was part and parcel of the trust res at the time of City's succession as trustee.

All the cases cited by petitioner declare rulings universally accepted, but that they support the present petition of the City or are in anywise applicable to the present issues is conclusively disproved by the undisputed facts and the issues determined.

It is submitted that petitioner's contentions that it has been deprived of constitutional rights of due process are wholly without substance.

B.

JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OVER THE CAUSE RESTS UPON DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP AND THE REALIGNMENT OF INDIANAPOLIS GAS TO THE POSITION OF A PLAINTIFF WAS PROPERLY DENIED.

The District Court upon the pleadings and prior to the trial on the merits, realigned Indianapolis Gas as a party plaintiff and thereupon dismissed plaintiff's Bill for want of jurisdiction. This decree was reversed upon appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals with opinion reported in 96 Fed. (2d) 363; II R. 285-293. City's petition for certiorari was by this court denied (305 U. S. 600).

The contention of the City made then, and now repeated, that no substantial controversy existed between Chase and Indianapolis Gas, indeed seems extraordinary in view of the decree rendered after trial on the merits by the District Court granting judgment in favor of Chase solely against Indianapolis Gas in the amount of $1,032,150; and the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals directing a judgment in favor of Chase against Indianapolis Gas and others in even a larger amount. It is true that by the judgment of the Court of Appeals the liability for the discharge of this judgment by Indianapolis Gas is a secondary one, but that it remains liable for its payment until its satisfaction may not be denied. Being the mortgagor its liability continues as a surety and a surety is a necessary co-defendant.

The cases cited and argument here made by petitioner were all presented to this court in support of the former petition for certiorari which this court denied (305 U. S. 600).

Suffice it to say that existence of the controversy between Chase and Indianapolis Gas, as alleged in the pleadings, was substantiated both by the judgment of the District Court after trial on the merits and by the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, a review of which is now sought.

Venner v. Great Northern R. Co., 209 U. S. 24, 31-32, 52 L. Ed. 666;

Republic Nat. Bank v. Massachusetts B. & I. Co., 68 Fed. (2d) 445, 447;

Rex. Co. v. International Harvester Co., 107 Fed. (2d) 767, 768.

C.

The Rule Announced by the Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, Was Not Disregarded or Violated by the Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, in the Determination of Any Issue Presented.

Both in the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals, this respondent contended that under the rule of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins all issues as to the validity of the lease and its enforceibility against the City as successor trustee and the trust property should be determined by the law of Indiana. And Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448, was cited as declaring the law which controls. This was accepted by the Circuit Court of Appeals and its decision is in full accord with both the statutory law of the State and the decisions of its court of last resort.

It was accepted by the courts both at the trial and on appeal and all parties litigant that no federal question was in issue, nor was any presented either in brief or in argument.

It has long been established in Indiana, as it has generally, that where an issue has been legally adjudicated that judgment is binding upon the parties and their privies in interest.

> Skelton v. Sharp, 161 Ind. 383;
> Fischli v. Fischli (1825), 1 Blackford (Ind.) 360;
> Knott v. Clark Construction Co., 191 Ind. 365.

It is also settled in Indiana, as it is generally, that the judgment in a representative suit brought by one beneficiary of a trust in behalf of all is binding upon all.

Burns Ind. Ann. Statutes (1933), sec. 2-213; 2-220;
Gaiser v. Buck, 203 Ind. 9;
Sigel v. Archer*, 212 Ind. 599.

The cases cited by petitioner wholly fail to support a contention that the judgment in this cause is other than entirely in accord with the controlling laws and decisions of Indiana. The decision itself conclusively shows that it firmly rests upon that law.

D.

THE JUDGMENT IS AGAINST THE CITY SOLELY AS TRUSTEE AND THE TRUST PROPERTY. IT IS NOT AN OBLIGATION OF THE CITY AS A MUNICIPALITY OR A CHARGE UPON ITS POWERS OF TAXATION.

The sole issue presented in this cause, so far as City is concerned, is the liability it assumed as a successor trustee of the public charitable trust. No judgment was either sought or given declaring any liability against the City as a taxing unit. The language of the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is clear and definite upon this point.

No direct obligation of the City being in issue, the statutes set out in appendix in the petitioner's brief have no application to any issue presented. These statutes refer solely to the creation of direct obligations of the City, such as contracts for street lighting, police and fire protection, etc. Were it otherwise, the bonds issued by the City in the principal amount of $8,000,000 which are solely a charge upon the revenues of the gas system, would be invalid. The City had express statutory power > "to receive gifts * * * and p[illegible] rusts and to agree to conditions and terms a[illegible]panying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out' (See Appendix 2, pp. 16, 17).

The section quoted and sections 85 and 254 cited by petitioner are parts of the same statute.

It is submitted no public question is here presented, no municipal rights are involved, and the sole responsibilities determined are those of a trust now voluntarily administered by the City as trustee; responsibilities all of which were expressly undertaken and assumed by the City in its succession to such trusteeship.

SUMMARY

This respondent respectfully submits that no valid reason has been presented or exists for granting the writ sought by the petitioner. No important public question is presented or federal issue involved. The decision itself rightly decides the questions presented in accord not only with the law of Indiana, but with principles universally accepted and followed.

WHEREFORE, this respondent prays that the petition for the writ here sought be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

LOUIS B. EWBANK,
WILLIAM R. HIGGINS,
Both of Indianapolis, Indiana,
Counsel for Respondent,
The Indianapolis Gas Company.

BRIEF OF RESPONDENT, CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS, UPON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

THE OPINION OF THE COURT BELOW

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reported in 113 Federal (2nd) 217.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitioners' statement of facts should be supplemented in the following particulars:

(1) Citizens Gas* was a quasi-public corporation organized for the purpose of acting as the original Trustee of a public charitable trust created for the benefit of the gas users of the City. (I R. 246, 250.) The Franchise Ordinance and the Articles of Incorporation (I R. 81) constituted the trust instruments and defined the powers and duties of Citizens Gas.

Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al, 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7).

(2) Such trust instruments provided that upon satisfaction of the claims of stockholders, the property of Citizens Gas should be conveyed to the City subject to all the legal obligations of the Company, and that thereafter Citizens Gas should be wound up (I R. 84, 85, 98, 115).

(3) During its trusteeship, Citizens Gas entered into the lease with Indianapolis Gas (I R. 51-80), pursuant to the authority granted by the statutes of the State of Indiana then in force. Upon joint petition of both parties the lease was approved by the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana (I R. 116-122). It has been stipulated that the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit under the Public Service Commission Law of Indiana did not have the effect of modifying or rendering nugatory the terms of the Franchise in so far as they created a Public Charitable Trust and defined the terms and conditions thereof and the rights, duties and liabilities of Citizens Gas as original trustee, of the City as successor trustee, and of the inhabitants of the City as the beneficiaries of the trust (II R. 622).

* Throughout this brief the parties will be referred to by the appellations used by Petitioners in their petition and brief.

(4) Citizens Gas continued in possession and operated the leased property until September 9, 1935, and fully performed the rental covenants of the lease (II R. 627-628).

(5) Prior to September 9, 1935, the claims of stockholders of Citizens Gas had been completely satisfied (II R. 634), and the authority and duty of Citizens Gas to convey and transfer all of its property to the City had been finally adjudicated (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7)).

(6) Thereupon, on September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas conveyed and transferred to the City all of its property subject to all outstanding obligations of the Company, and otherwise in strict accordance with the terms and conditions of the trust instruments (I R. 122, 127; III R. 833, 835). The City reserved its right to contest the validity of the lease (I R. 202-204, II R. 468). After September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas owned and held no property of any description and engaged in no business activity (II R. 466).

ARGUMENT

The primary controversy in this litigation is whether the City and the property conveyed to it by Citizens Gas are liable under the lease for the remainder of the term of ninety-nine years. Throughout, Citizens Gas has asserted that it has no interest in that primary controversy and has adopted a completely neutral position with reference thereto. Citizens Gas contends that whether or not the City and the property are liable under the lease, Citizens Gas has fully and lawfully performed its duties as Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust and has no further obligation to any person.

Furthermore, Citizens Gas has never denied its power and authority to bind itself as Trustee and the trust property for the term of its trusteeship. It has always recognized the validity of the lease during all the time it had the power and authority to operate as a public utility, and it fully performed the lease covenants during that period of time (II R. 627-628).

In so far as the propriety of the acts of Citizens Gas is in question, the essential factors which define the rights and duties of Citizens Gas are as follows:

(1) No party has questioned the validity of the Public Charitable Trust as created and defined in the Franchise Ordinance and the Charter of Citizens Gas (I R. 233, 242, 246, 250). This had been adjudicated prior to the conveyance to the City (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7); Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Indiana 448, 188 N. E. 212).

(2) The terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust defined the powers and duties of Citizens Gas. As stated by the Court in Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (865) (C. C. A. 7): "Provisions for the protection of the public interests were properly included in its charter, and are binding upon its stockholders and directors, who must act in accordance therewith until they are legally abrogated or altered."

(3) Both Indianapolis Gas and the purchasers of its bonds from Citizens Gas had full knowledge of the terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust, and the obligation of Citizens Gas to convey all of its property to the City and thereafter wind up its affairs (I R. 62; II R. 583-586). Moreover, Indianapolis Gas was notified of the contemplated transfer and of the City's desire to contest the validity of the lease some time before the conveyance was made (III R. 836).

(4) Since Citizens Gas was a public utility as well as the original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, the lease in question was made pursuant to the authority of the Public Service Commission Law of Indiana and only after approval had been given by the Public Service Commission of Indiana (I R. 116-122).

(5) Prior to September 9, 1935, it had been adjudicated that neither the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana nor the granting of an indeterminate permit thereunder to Citizens Gas had affected in any way the terms of the Franchise Ordinance in so far as they created the Public Charitable Trust and defined the terms and conditions thereof (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7)). Moreover all the parties hereto have conceded that fact (II R. 622).

(6) On September 9, 1935, after the complete satisfaction of the claims of stockholders of Citizens Gas, it conveyed all of its property of every kind to the City subject to the legal obligations of the Company. The conveyance and transfer was made in strict accordance with the provisions of the Franchise Ordinance and the Charter of Citizens Gas (I R. 122, 127; III R. 833, 835). Thus Citizens Gas completely carried out and performed its duties as Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, and as provided in the Franchise Ordinance and its Charter (I R. 84, 85, 98, 115). Citizens Gas has no further duty or obligation except to wind up its affairs.

Throughout its corporate existence Citizens Gas has acted within its authority and duty both as the original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust and as a public utility. It affirms the validity and binding effect of the lease during the period during which it had the authority and the ability to operate as a public utility in the City of Indianapolis. Citizens Gas also affirms the validity and binding effect of the terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust. Whether or not the City has any liability under the lease, it is clear that Citizens Gas has fully performed its duties and obligations and that its legal capacity to secure further performance of the lease covenants terminated on September 9, 1935.

II. City's Specification of Errors 25

E. SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 27

F. ARGUMENT 28

I. The Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Refused to Realign Indianapolis Gas with Chase as a Party Plaintiff 38

II. The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard on the Question Whether the Alleged Burdensomeness of the Lease Was a Valid Defense and the Court of Appeals' Direction to Enter Final Judgment Without a Retrial of That Issue Was in Full Accord with Due Process of Law 45

(a) The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard in Both Lower Courts on the Question Whether Burdensomeness Would be a Valid Defense—Moreover the Hearing in the District Court Was Not Essential to Due Process of Law 47

(b) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the Alleged Burdensomeness Would Not be a Valid Defense is Obviously Correct 50

1. The issue of burdensomeness is moot and wholly immaterial 50

2. The decision of the Indiana Public Service Commission forecloses the question of burdensomeness 51

3. The Williams case forecloses the question of burdensomeness 52

4. Obligations incurred by contract or lease cannot be avoided on the ground that they are burdensome 53

(c) The Circuit Court of Appeals Having Correctly Determined That Burdensomeness Would Not Be a Valid Defense, Its Direction to Enter Final Judgment Was in Full Accord With Due Process of Law 55

III. The Circuit Court of Appeals Was Correct in Holding that Citizens Gas Had the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Public Charitable Trust for the Full Term of the Lease 56

(a) Citizens Gas Had Express Statutory Authority to Make the Lease For 99 Years... 56

(b) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease..... 58

(1) The possibility that the City would succeed Citizens Gas as trustee did not limit the right of Citizens Gas to make the Lease binding on the trust for the full term of the Lease..... 63

(c) The Express Statutory Power of Citizens Gas to Effect a Merger by Making the Lease For 99 Years Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising from the Public Charitable Trust 66

(d) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease 69

(e) The Practical Construction of the Franchise and Articles by the City and Citizens Gas Shows That Those Instruments Gave Citizens Gas Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease..... 70

IV. The Validity of the Lease and Its Binding Effect on the Public Charitable Trust Have Been Conclusively Established by the Judgment in the Williams Case and Other Decisions..... 74

(a) The Judgment in the Williams Case Conclusively Determined that the Lease is Binding on the Public Charitable Trust, on Citizens Gas as Initial Trustee, and on the City as Successor Trustee 75

1. The City has raised no issues as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust which were not adjudicated in the Williams case 76

2. The judgment in the Williams case would be conclusive even if the City were relying on new grounds of attack..... 79

3. The mere transfer of the trust property did not affect the conclusiveness of the decision in the Williams case..... 82

4. Since Williams sued in behalf of the trust, the judgment binds the trust and any trustee thereof, although defendants presented no issues to the trustee and prospective successor trustee, their co-defendants 83

5. The Williams case is an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust and, under the rule of Erie R. R. Co. v. Tompkins, is controlling in all federal courts 89

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission Conclusively Determined That the Lease Is in the Public Interest (Consequently in the Interest of the Trust Also) and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility..... 90

(c) The Fishback Case..... 92

V. The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Obligations, Including the Obligations Under the Lease, and Took the Necessary Action to Exercise That Authority..... 93

(a) The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Accompanying Obligations, Including the Obligations Under the Lease 93

(b) The City's Acceptance of the Trust Property Included the Acceptance of the Leasehold Estate and the Obligations Under the Lease 98

(c) The City Accepted the Assignment of the Lease, Took Possession of the Leased Property and is Liable by Privity of Estate For the Obligations Under the Lease..... 107

(d) The City Became Liable, as Successor Trustee, for All the Obligations of Citizens Gas, Including the Obligations Under the Lease. 111

VI. The Continued Acquiescence in the Validity of the Lease by Citizens Gas and the City for 22 Years, Their Acceptance of the Benefits Under the Lease, and Their Representations as to Its Binding Effect on the Trust Preclude Both of Them from Attacking the Lease..... 118

(a) Citizens Gas is Estopped by Its Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid for its Full Term..... 120

(b) The City is Estopped by Its Own Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid for Its Full Term..... 124

(c) The City is Precluded by Its Own Laches and the Laches of Citizens Gas From Denying That the Lease is Valid and Binding For Its Full Term..... 129

VII. The Rule of Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins Required the Decision Made by the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Court Fully Complied With That Rule..... 132

VIII. The Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Held That Plaintiff's Judgment Should Include Interest on the Coupons After Their Maturity and Interest on the Judgment Itself. But in Each Case the Rate of Interest Should be Six Per Cent 134

OFFICIAL REPORT OF OPINIONS BELOW.

The District Court made findings of fact (III R. 1160) and conclusions of law (III R. 1190) and wrote an opinion (III R. 1122). The opinion has not been officially reported.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (IV R. 1281-1306) is reported in 113 F. (2d) 217. Its opinion on the first appeal (II R. 285-293) is reported in 96 F. (2d) 363; certiorari denied 305 U. S. 600.

NOTE: In the interest of brevity the parties will be referred to as follows:

The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, respondent in causes 421 and 422, cross-petitioner in causes 423 and 424, and plaintiff in the trial court, as "Chase" or as "plaintiff";

B.

JURISDICTION.

The City filed petitions for certiorari (Nos. 421 and 422) on the 12th day of September, 1940. On the same day Chase filed a cross-petition for writs of certiorari (Nos. 423 and 424). In each petition the jurisdiction of this Court was invoked under Section 240(a) of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. § 347(a)). These cases are now before the Court upon the granting of these petitions and the cross-petition.

The judgments of the Circuit Court of Appeals were entered on June 6, 1940 (IV R. 1307-8). The City's petition for a rehearing and its petition for a reargument were denied July 19, 1940 (IV R. 1336). The City's second petition for a rehearing was denied August 15, 1940 (IV R. 1405).

C.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

Plaintiff brought this action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, suing as trustee under the Indianapolis Gas Mortgage and joining Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas and the City as defendants. All of the defendants were citizens of Indiana and federal jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship. Plaintiff sought to recover judgment for the overdue interest on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds, with interest on unpaid interest, against all the defendants and against the property once owned by Citizens Gas and later transferred by it to the City. Plaintiff also sought a declaratory judgment to establish that the Lease from Indianapolis Gas Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis as "Citizens Gas";

The Indianapolis Gas Company as "Indianapolis Gas";

The City of Indianapolis and the members of the Board of Trustees and the members of the Board of Directors for Utilities of said City, collectively, as the "City";

The holders of Indianapolis Gas Bonds as "Bondholders."

to Citizens Gas (later assigned to the City), under which the lessee agreed to pay the interest on the Bonds, was and is binding on all the defendants and on the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas.

The District Court denied plaintiff any relief except a judgment against Indianapolis Gas alone in the sum of $1,032,150, the amount of the unpaid coupons on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds at the time of the court's decree (III R. 1193). The Circuit Court of Appeals held that plaintiff was entitled to all the relief sought, but differed with plaintiff as to the rate of interest on the unpaid coupons and the rate to be paid on the judgment itself (IV R. 1305-6).

Most of the facts were established by a Stipulation in which all the parties joined (PX 1, II R. 616-639, Offered,* II R. 326-7).

The Indianapolis Gas Mortgage.

In 1902 Indianapolis Gas gave an open mortgage on its plant and property to one of plaintiff's corporate predecessors to secure an authorized bond issue of $7,500,000 (Bill, Exhibit A, I R. 23, Offered, II R. 327). Originally only $4,000,000 of Bonds were issued, but the Mortgage provided that additional Bonds could be issued to acquire additional property or make improvements and extensions (I R. 28). Under this provision of the Mortgage $833,000 of additional Bonds were issued prior to September 30, 1913 and $2,048,000 of additional Bonds were issued between June 22, 1914 and February 11, 1932 (Stip. 10, II R. 627). There are now $6,881,000 of Bonds outstanding, of which $120,000 principal amount are held by

* All of the exhibits offered by plaintiff on the trial (except PX 135, which was excluded) were admitted in evidence after the close of the trial by a formal order appearing at III R. 1057.

Indianapolis Gas and $18,000 principal amount by the City (Stip. 3(a), II R. 618).

The Mortgage contains a very broad after-acquired property clause (I R. 37) and all the property or rights which Indianapolis Gas might acquire after its execution are pledged under the Mortgage. The Mortgage also contains a covenant whereby Indianapolis Gas expressly agreed "to and with" the trustee that it would provide for and pay the principal and interest on the Bonds (I R. 44).

Organization of Citizens Gas Company.

On August 30, 1905 the City entered into a Franchise contract (Bill, Exhibit C, I R. 81-94, Offered, II R. 327) in which it granted the right to carry on the business of manufacturing and distributing gas to the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants. This Franchise was granted on the express condition that the grantees thereof (three individuals) would organize an Indiana corporation to which the Franchise would be assigned and whose articles of incorporation would include certain specified provisions (I. R. 82).

Citizens Gas was organized in 1906 under the general laws of Indiana for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies. Its Articles (Bill, Exhibit C, I R. 95-100, Offered, II R. 327) contained the provisions required by the Franchise and the Franchise was assigned to it in May, 1906.

In pursuance of its Franchise Citizens Gas, starting with an authorized capital of $1,000,000 (I R. 96), acquired the necessary property to manufacture and distribute gas throughout part of the City of Indianapolis and began to conduct such a business. Although organized as a corporation for profit, Citizens Gas was a quasi-public corporation and held the property acquired by it subject to a public charitable trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of the City of Indianapolis. Todd v. Citizens' Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855 (C. C. A. 7th, 1931).

Both the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas provided that its stock should be held by voting trustees who, in turn, would issue certificates of equitable ownership entitling the holders thereof to all dividends on their stock. The Franchise and Articles further provided that the City would be entitled to a conveyance of the "plant" of Citizens Gas upon the occurrence of certain events, among which were:

> (1) Whenever certificate holders had received the amount of their certificates plus a return of 10% per annum thereon (I R. 84).
> (2) Upon the expiration of the Franchise period the City could itself pay the certificate holders and require the conveyance of the property (I R. 93).

In 1921 Citizens Gas, in pursuance of the Indiana statutes authorizing it to do so, surrendered the Franchise previously granted by the City and accepted an indeterminate permit from the Public Service Commission, with the result that it operated from August 27, 1921, until September 9, 1935, as a public utility under an indeterminate permit (Stip. 6(b), II R. 622). At various times after its organization Citizens Gas increased the amount of its authorized common shares and sold additional common stock, authorized the issuance of and sold shares of preferred stock, and authorized various bond and note issues which were sold to the public for the purpose of financing and expanding its business (I R. 112-13, II R. 598-603). At the time when the City took over the property of Citizens Gas it had $2,000,000 of common stock, $1,000,000 of preferred stock and $2,745,000 of mortgage bonds outstanding (Stip. 16, II R. 634-5).

Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas in 1913 and Public Service Commission Approval Thereof.

In May, 1913, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas filed a joint petition with the Public Service Commission requesting authority to make a lease of the property of Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas for a period of 99 years (PX Stip. 13, II R. 652-3, Offered, II R. 328, 331; Finding 38, III R. 1175). In the proposed lease the lessee agreed to pay the interest on the Bonds of Indianapolis Gas and a 7% return on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas in the par value of $2,000,000 (PX 91, III R. 893, Offered, II R. 342). The considerations which led up to the making of this Lease are set forth in detail in the reports issued by Citizens Gas to its stockholders during the period when the petition was pending before the Public Service Commission and immediately following the Commission's approval of the Lease (PX 91, 92, 93 and 94, III R. 886-904, Offered, II R. 342). We quote only a few excerpts from these statements:

> "COMPETITION DANGEROUS TO THE COMPANY AND THE COMMUNITY.
> "Although the Citizens Gas Company has been able to compete successfully with its larger rival, and will continue to do so if necessary, *this competition has not been without dangers in the past, and may be found to be more dangerous in the future. The old management of the Indianapolis Gas Company was bent on bringing the Citizens Gas Company into bankruptcy." (PX 91, III R. 887.)

And again:

> "Your Directors * * * have therefore carefully considered the interests of the Stockholders of the Citizens Gas Company under the operation of the proposed lease, and they have concluded that there will be a large profit therefrom which will enable your Company more quickly to reach the maximum dividend authorized and to pay off the accrued back dividends authorized, and to reduce the price of gas still further in this community." (PX 91, III R. 890.)

* Emphasis appearing in quotations throughout this brief is ours unless otherwise indicated.

And again:

"* * * However, it was possible to begin certain important economies soon after the merger became effective, and these have already resulted in some net increase in your Company's profits after payment of all rental charges as well as your own bond interest." (Report to Stockholders, March 28, 1914; PX 93, III R. 902-3.)

After prolonged hearings before the Public Service Commission, it required certain modifications of the Lease, including a reduction in the rent so as to provide for a 6% rather than a 7% return on the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas. The parties agreed to these modifications and the Commission entered an order on October 1, 1913, approving the Lease as so modified (Stip. 7, II R. 623; Bill, Exhibit D, I R. 116-122, Offered, II R. 327).

Fishback intervention and petition for rehearing.

During the proceedings before the Public Service Commission one Frank S. Fishback filed an intervening petition in which he objected to the proposed lease. Fishback asserted that he was a stockholder of Citizens Gas and a resident freeholder of the City of Indianapolis and that he was objecting both as such stockholder and as such resident (PX Stip. 13, II R. 654, Offered, II R. 328, 331; Finding 38, III R. 1175). Fishback objected to the proposed lease on the following grounds among others (Bill, Par. 7, I R. 8-9; admitted by all defendants, I R. 137, 149, 223):

(a) That the rental provided therein was excessive.

(b) That Citizens Gas had no power to make such a lease because

(1) The proposed lease was for a period longer than the lessee's corporate life.

(2) The City of Indianapolis was the true owner of the lessee's property.

Following the approval of the Lease Fishback filed a petition for rehearing in which he contended (PX Stip. 13, II R. 659-60, Offered, II R. 328, 331; Finding 38, III R. 1175):

(1) That performance of the terms of the Lease would make it impossible for Citizens Gas to perform its contract with the City relating to the taking over of the property of Citizens Gas.

(2) That the City had not given its consent to the Lease.

(3) That Citizens Gas was not authorized to enter into such a Lease for a period of 99 years.

On November 28, 1913, this petition for rehearing was overruled and immediately thereafter Citizens Gas took possession and control of the plant and system of Indianapolis Gas (Stip. 8, II R. 624).

In these proceedings before the Public Service Commission the City of Indianapolis was duly served with notice to appear and did appear and participate through its duly authorized and appointed counsel. The City made no objection either to the execution of the Lease or to the order made by the Commission, and the City had never, down to the year 1935, sought to have the order of the Public Service Commission set aside or attempted to enjoin the enforcement thereof (Bill, Par. 8, I R. 9-10; admitted by all defendants, I R. 137, 149, 223).

Fishback's Suit to Enjoin Performance Under the Lease.

On November 28, 1913, the day when the Commission overruled his petition for rehearing, Fishback filed a suit to set aside the Commission's order and to enjoin the Commission and the parties to the Lease from carrying out the provisions of the Lease. The Commission, Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas and the City were all parties to this suit (Stip. 9(a), II R. 624). In his pleadings in this suit Fishback asserted, among other things (PX Stip. 13, 14; II R. 648, 662; Offered, II R. 328, 331):

(1) That the City had not consented to the Lease (II R. 662, 665).

(2) That the rental and fixed charges to be paid were excessive (II R. 661, 664-5).

(3) That the obligations assumed by Citizens Gas under the Lease impaired the obligations of the contract between Citizens Gas and the City (II R. 665).

(4) That the Lease constituted such a lien and encumbrance upon the property and earnings of Citizens Gas that the City would not be able to acquire the Citizens Gas plant and system, as provided in its Franchise (II R. 666).

(5) That the trustees, directors and officers of Citizens Gas were not authorized to enter into such a Lease for a period of 99 years (II R. 668).

The City filed an answer in which it denied all of these contentions (Stip. 9(c), II R. 625).

Fishback brought this suit both as a resident of the City of Indianapolis and as a stockholder of Citizens Gas (PX Stip. 13, II R. 650, Offered, II R. 328, 331). As such resident he alleged that his rights as a beneficiary of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas were not being protected and that he was himself attempting to protect those rights.

This suit was not disposed of until February 15, 1921, when the court rendered judgment against Fishback (Stip. 9(c), II R. 625). During all of the period from 1913 to 1921 the City never joined with Fishback in asserting the invalidity of the Lease but, on the contrary, maintained its position in direct opposition to Fishback until the case was disposed of.* Fishback carried the case to the Supreme Court of Indiana on appeal where the appeal was dismissed and a petition for rehearing denied in 1923. Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282; 138 N. E. 346, 139 N. E. 449. (Stip. 9(h), II R. 626.)

Representations by Citizens Gas as to Existence of 99 Year Lease.

There were $4,833,000 principal amount of Indianapolis Gas Bonds outstanding when the Lease was made. After Citizens Gas took possession of the Indianapolis Gas property it made various additions, extensions, and improvements to that property, and, in pursuance of the terms of the Mortgage and the Lease, Bonds of the Indianapolis Gas Company in the principal amount of about $2,000,000 were delivered to Citizens Gas to reimburse it for such expenditures. Citizens Gas sold these Bonds to the public and retained the proceeds of such sale. (Stip. 10, II R. 627.)

In the sale of these Bonds as well as in the sale of its own securities Citizens Gas represented that it had a 99 year Lease on the property of Indianapolis Gas and that it had guaranteed the payment of the interest on these Bonds.

We call the Court's attention to a few of the circulars used by Blodget & Co. in marketing Indianapolis Gas Bonds and securities of Citizens Gas. Mr. Baker, formerly a partner in Blodget & Co., testified that these circulars were prepared under his direction from information received from Citizens Gas and that it was the custom to send copies of the circulars to Citizens Gas for approval and correction (II R. 573). Thus, in 1921 the circular on which Indianapolis Gas Bonds were sold contained the following language (PX Dep. 3, II R. 592, Offered, II R. 420, 555):

* The action was voluntarily dismissed by the plaintiff as against the City on the same day and by the same entry which entered final judgment against Fishback (Stip. 9(e), II R. 625).

"The Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, in 1913, leased the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company for 99 years at a rental equivalent to the annual bond interest required, and 6% on the $2,000,000 stock of the latter company. This lease was executed with the approval of the Public Service Commission of Indiana."

A similar representation was made in 1925 in the sale of the same Bonds (PX Dep. 4, II R. 595, Offered, II R. 420, 557):

"* * * The property of the Indianapolis Gas Company is leased for 99 years from 1913 for a sum equal to the interest on the outstanding bonds, and 6% on the $2,000,000 stock of the Indianapolis Gas Company."

The circular issued in 1926 left no doubt that Citizens Gas was guaranteeing the payment of interest and the refunding of the principal on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds (PX Dep. 5, II R. 596-7, Offered, II R. 420, 558):

"INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY

First Consolidated Mortgage 5% Gold Bonds

Dated October 1, 1902 Due October 1, 1952

* * * * *

GUARANTEED BY CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS AS TO INTEREST AND REFUNDING OF PRINCIPAL

The Indianapolis Gas Company was incorporated in 1890 to supply artificial gas to the city of Indianapolis and vicinity. The property of the company is leased for 99 years from October 1913 to the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis which now controls the entire gas business of the city of Indianapolis and surrounding communities, serving a population of about 375,000. The Citizens Gas Company operates under an indeterminate permit of the Public Service Commission of Indiana."

There are many other instances of such representations which will be discussed later (infra, pp. 121-2).

Continuous Performance by Citizens Gas under Lease.

From November 28, 1913, to September 9, 1935, a period of almost 22 years, Citizens Gas operated the plant and property of Indianapolis Gas under said Lease, paid the interest on the outstanding Bonds of Indianapolis Gas either directly to the Bondholders or at the office of the Mortgage trustee, and paid all the other rentals payable in cash under the terms of the Lease, as well as the taxes upon the leased property (Stip. 11 (a), II R. 627-8). The plants of the two companies were operated as a single unit (I R. 156, II R. 349-50) and Citizens Gas was thus relieved from the waste and expense of competition and duplication of facilities.

During all this period neither the City of Indianapolis nor Citizens Gas ever suggested that the Lease was invalid or that there was any lack of power in Citizens Gas to make a lease for 99 years. On the contrary, on every occasion when the question was raised, both the City and Citizens Gas contended that the Lease was valid and was binding according to its terms. This occurred not only before the Public Service Commission and in the Fishback case, but in the Todd case, the Cotter case, and the Williams case, to which we shall refer hereafter.

Exercise by City of Right to Take Citizens Gas Property.

On March 20, 1929, the City of Indianapolis, through its Board of Public Works, adopted a resolution (PX Stip. 22, II R. 670, Offered, II R. 327) by which it

> "* * * hereby asserts, claims and demands all rights, title, interests and ownership, of whatever nature or character granted, reserved, transferred or vested in and to said City in and to the gas plant, mains and property of said Citizens Gas Company * * *."

and demanded that Citizens Gas

> "* * * convey said plant, property and assets of said company to said City of Indianapolis in accordance with the premises; * * *."

As we shall see (infra, pp. 101-4), the circumstances surrounding the adoption of this resolution, as well as the language of the resolution itself, show conclusively that the City intended at that time to take over all of the property of Citizens Gas, including the 99 year Lease of the Indianapolis Gas property.

The Todd and Cotter cases.

On April 30, 1929, Newton Todd, a stockholder of Citizens Gas, commenced an action in the federal court in Indianapolis to enjoin Citizens Gas from transferring its property to the City. About two weeks later a similar action was filed in the same court by Cotter and others, non-resident stockholders of Citizens Gas. The court dismissed both bills of complaint on May 29, 1930. On appeal the two cases were heard together and the judgments of the District Court were affirmed (46 F. (2d) 855). Subsequently this Court refused to grant a writ of certiorari (283 U. S. 852). In these cases the Circuit Court of Appeals held that the property of Citizens Gas was subject to a public charitable trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of Indianapolis and that the City, upon taking over the property of Citizens Gas, would become the successor trustee of this trust (46 F. (2d) 855, 864, 866).

The Todd and Cotter cases involved the right of the City to take over the property of the Citizens Gas, including the Lease in question, after the City's exercise of that right. In its answer in the Cotter case, the City said (PX 89, III R. 859-60, Offered, II R. 334, III R. 1057):

> "* * * after the passage of the Shively-Spencer Act of 1913 the Citizens Gas Company, pursuant to an order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana and with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis, entered into a contract whereby it leased from the Indianapolis Gas Company all its plants and property for a period of ninety-nine years; * * *.
> * * * * *

"These defendants admit that since 1913 the Citizens Gas Company with full knowledge and consent of the City has operated the combined properties under the provisions specified by the Commission and has used its earnings and its financial credit in the making of extensions, improvements and betterments, both to its own property and to the property subject to said lease."

Similarly, in the Todd case the stipulation of facts signed by the various parties, including Citizens Gas and the City, and filed with the court, recited (PX 139, III R. 942, 943, Offered, II R. 335, III R. 1057):

"* * * Defendant Company [Citizens Gas] also is the owner of a certain leasehold estate in and to the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, as created by a certain contract of lease for ninety-nine years dated September 30, 1913, and recorded in Miscellaneous Record 78, pages 257-278, inclusive, of the records in the Recorder's office of Marion County, State of Indiana."

Questions Adjudicated in Williams Case.

On March 12, 1930, before the District Court had decided the Cotter and Todd cases, Allen G. Williams, an inhabitant and taxpayer of Indianapolis, brought suit as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust to protect it from the Lease, which he claimed to be burdensome. The following parties were joined as defendants: The City of Indianapolis and numerous officials of the City; Citizens Gas and a number of its officers; the Public Service Commission; Indianapolis Gas; and the trustees under the Indianapolis Gas Mortgage. Thus all of the parties to the present litigation were before the court (PX Stip. 35, II R. 761-4, Offered, II R. 328).

In his complaint Williams quoted in full the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas (II R. 765) and the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas (II R. 780). Williams alleged (PX Stip. 35, II R. 761, Offered, II R. 328):

(1) That the Lease was "ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company" and wholly void (II R. 790, Par. 29).

(2) That the Lease "impairs the charter of said Citizens Gas Company" (II R. 780).

(3) That the Lease "impairs, also, the said contract of August 25, 1965, * * * whereby said Public Charitable Trust was created" (II R. 780-1).

(4) That the Lease was improvident and a burden upon the trust estate (II R. 780).

Williams declared that "said trust is now entitled to have made the formal and final transfer, accordingly, of all the property and franchises of said Citizens Gas Company" (II R. 771, Par. 14) and that the Lease should "be determined and adjudged to constitute an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Public Charitable Trust and should be removed by the proper decree of this court in this suit" (II R. 790, Par. 29).

Williams had been made a party to the Todd case and by stipulation filed in that case it was agreed that the Williams case would not be tried until the final determination of the Todd case (Stip. 13(f), II R. 629-30).

A number of defendants, including Citizens Gas and the City, filed a joint demurrer to Williams' complaint. Indianapolis Gas and the Mortgage trustees filed a separate demurrer, as did the Public Service Commission. The court sustained the demurrers and entered final judgment dismissing the complaint. (Stip. 14(d), (e), (f), (h); II R. 632-3).

On the appeal, the Supreme Court of Indiana considered the case on its merits, held the Lease to be valid, and affirmed the judgment of the lower court. Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212. No relief was granted in respect of the claim that the City was then entitled to receive the Citizens Gas property, this relief having been obtained in the Todd case. In disposing of the contention that the Lease was an unlawful cloud on the title of the public charitable trust, the court said (pp. 215-16):

"In respect to the alleged invalidity of the lease executed between the Citizens' Gas Company and the Indianapolis Gas Company, it appears from the complaint that the lease was one which the Citizens' Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had the power to execute and one which would result in great advantage to the Citizens' Gas Company. * * *. Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the commission in approving the same."

Williams' suit to protect and enforce the rights of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust was decided after it had been judicially determined that the City was entitled to receive the trust property from Citizens Gas. The Supreme Court of Indiana held that the alleged burdensomeness or improvidence of the Lease was not a valid ground for the attack on the Lease, that Citizens Gas had power to make the Lease and that, although the City was entitled to receive the trust property, that property would have to remain subject to the obligations under the Lease.

Sale of Revenue Bonds by City of Indianapolis.

In its resolution of March 20, 1929 (supra, p. 12) the Board of Public Works reserved the right to furnish the funds to retire the stock of Citizens Gas, instead of having that company mortgage its property for the purpose of raising such funds.

The Todd case, filed as early as April 30, 1929, and the Williams case, not finally disposed of until April, 1934, interfered with the City's carrying out the resolution of March 20, 1929. However, on May 7, 1935, these suits in respect of the contemplated transfer of the trust estate having been brought to an end, the Board of Directors for Utilities adopted a resolution for a public offering of $8,000,000 of the City's Revenue Bonds. This began by reciting the purpose of issuing said bonds as follows (PX Stip. 47, III R. 822-3, Offered, II R. 327):

> "That for the purpose of obtaining funds for the taking over of certain property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and or in which it has an interest, * * *."

The resolution later set out specifically the form of the Revenue Bonds to be issued. This form stated that the bonds were to be (III R. 825):

> "* * * issued for the purpose of providing funds for the purpose of taking over property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and or in which it has an interest, * * *."

The form of the bonds recited how they were to be secured as follows (III R. 826):

> "The payment of the principal and interest of this and of all other bonds of this issue is secured by a charge upon all the revenue from the operation of all of the gas system owned and or operated by the City of Indianapolis."

Toward the end of the resolution the City made the following agreement (III R. 828):

> "The City agrees * * * that when it has obtained the possession of the property operated by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, it will cause the same to be continually operated as a gas system in an efficient manner and at reasonable cost, and maintained in good operating condition; and it will use all reasonable efforts to resist competition and maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis * * *."

In connection with the public offering of the Revenue Bonds the City issued a prospectus which was produced and identified by Mr. Simond of Halsey, Stuart & Company (II R. 497-8). This prospectus (PX Dep. 110, II

R. 533, Offered, II R. 420, 518), was issued in May, 1935 and contained the following information for the benefit of prospective bidders (II R. 535):

> "For over twenty-one years gas has been supplied to the inhabitants of Indianapolis and neighboring communities solely through the system operated by Citizens Gas Company; a system having 867 miles of mains and with 75,949 meters in use as of May 1, 1935.
>
> "This system is in part owned by Citizens Gas Company and in part is leased by it from Indianapolis Gas Company, which is not an operating company.
>
> "The lease is for a term of 99 years from October 1, 1913, subject to a mortgage dated October 1, 1902, from Indianapolis Gas Company to Trust Company of America securing a 5% fifty year bond issue of $7,500,000 (not all of which bonds have been issued). The rental thereunder is (a) the amount of the interest on the outstanding bonds under said mortgage, and on any refunding bonds; * * *."

Thus the City expressly represented to the prospective bidders that the Citizens Gas property included the ninety-nine year Lease from Indianapolis Gas and that the leased property was included in "the system operated by Citizens Gas."

The Revenue Bonds were sold to Halsey, Stuart & Co. and Otis & Co., who relied upon the representations in the resolution of May 7, 1935, and the prospectus in making this purchase (II R. 493-4, 497-8, 456-7). In connection with the resale of the bonds, Halsey, Stuart & Co. issued an advertising circular, a copy of which appears as Exhibit B to the City's answer and counterclaim (I R. 192-9, Offered, II R. 327). This circular was submitted to and approved by Thompson, Rabb & Stevenson, counsel for the City of Indianapolis, before it was issued on July 1, 1935 (PX Dep. 111, 112, 113, 114, II R. 536-46, Offered, II

R. 420, 518). It contained, among others, the following representations:

(1) That said Revenue Bonds were issued to provide funds for the City to acquire the "property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and or in which it has an interest, * * *." (I R. 194).

(2) That Citizens Gas had "leased for a period of 99 years the properties and business of the Indianapolis Gas Company, thereby gaining control of the entire gas business of the City of Indianapolis and its environs." (I R. 195).

(3) That the Indianapolis Gas property covered by the Lease had a depreciated physical value of $9,181,960 and a reproduction value of $12,730,490, as against which there were outstanding $6,381,000 of Bonds and $2,000,000 of capital stock (I R. 195-6).

(4) That the City covenanted "That upon acquisition of the property operated by the Citizens Gas Company, it will cause the same to be continually operated as a gas system * * * and it will use all reasonable efforts to resist competition and maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis and in Marion County * * *." (I R. 198).

(5) That "we are advised the coke oven and water gas plants of the leased property are not used in operations but it is anticipated that the coke oven plant will be in operation by October 1, 1935" (I R. 196).

The first, second and fourth of these representations were taken almost verbatim from the statements made by the City itself in its prospectus (supra, pp. 17-18), or from the resolution authorizing the sale of the Revenue Bonds (supra, pp. 16-17). Simultaneously with the publication of this circular, Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Company published an advertisement in more than forty newspapers throughout the country, which contained substantially the same representations as those in the circular (PX Dep. 104, 116; II R. 526, 547-8; Offered, II R. 420, 518).

Transfer of Citizens Gas Property, Including the Lease, to the City.

The City used some of the proceeds of the Revenue Bonds to retire the common stock, the preferred stock and the bonds of Citizens Gas. Then on September 9, 1965 Citizens Gas delivered to the City instruments transferring all of its property including the Lease. No cash was paid or any property transferred to Citizens Gas in return for the conveyance of all its property. On the contrary, the entire consideration for the transfer of the Citizens Gas property was paid to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas (Stip. 16, II R. 634).

The instruments of conveyance delivered to the City on September 9 were:

(1) A deed conveying all the real estate of Citizens Gas (PX Stip. 55, III R. 833, Offered, II R. 327).

(2) A transfer and assignment of the personal property (Bill, Exhibit E, I R. 122, Offered, II R. 327).

(3) An assignment of a lease of certain office space (PX Stip. 56, III R. 835, Offered, II R. 327).

(4) An assignment of the Lease here in question (Bill, Exhibit F, I R. 127, Offered, II R. 327).

Each of these four instruments specifically recited that the conveyance was made subject to all the existing liens and encumbrances on the Citizens Gas property and subject to all other legal obligations of Citizens Gas.

The four instruments of conveyance were all retained by the City and the City had three of them, including the assignment of the Lease here in question, filed for record with the County Recorder (II R. 339, 467-8). The City immediately took possession of the Indianapolis Gas property and since September 9, 1935 it has continuously operated that property as a unified part of the entire system received from Citizens Gas (II R. 350; Stip. 6(c) II R. 622-3).

As a condition precedent to conveying its property to the City, Citizens Gas, by resolution of its Directors and Trustees (IX Stip. 86, 87; III R. 842, 845, Offered II R. 327), required that the City give an indemnity agreement of a specified form to Citizens Gas, and the City gave such an indemnity agreement (Stip. 21, II R. 638; Exhibit J to Second Amendment and Supplement to Bill, II R. 306, Offered II R. 327). By this Indemnity Agreement the City agreed to indemnify and save Citizens Gas harmless "from any and all loss, damage, costs, charges, liability or expense" on account of a large number of things, particularly including "any actions or suits which may hereafter be brought against said Company, arising from any and all acts or actions or omissions to act on the part of said company of any nature whatsoever" (II R. 307).

Thus we have a typical example of one corporation taking over all the assets and business of another corporation. The transferor is, of course, deprived of all resources with which to meet its liabilities and the transferee, therefore, takes the property subject to all existing obligations of the transferor and also agrees to indemnify the transferor against any liabilities of any kind whatsoever. That is precisely what occurred in the present case.

City's Performance Under the Lease.

Since September, 1935, the City has performed many of the obligations imposed upon the lessee under the terms of the Lease. Thus, it has continued to pay all the city, county, and state taxes on the Indianapolis Gas property (II R. 374, 377-9). It has continued to keep the property of Indianapolis Gas insured (II R. 379), and, although it has done so quite inadequately, it has continued to spend some funds in the maintenance of the Indianapolis Gas property (II R. 380-81, 398-9). In addition to this the City furnished the money to pay the coupons falling due on October 1, 1935, and April 1, 1936, and paid $60,000 for dividends to the stockholders of Indianapolis Gas on December 31, 1935 (II R. 373, 375).

Proceedings in this Litigation.

On March 2, 1936, without any notice to the Mortgage trustee or the Bondholders (II R. 405-6, 408), the City and Indianapolis Gas entered into a written agreement which has never been modified or supplemented in any way (Stip. 19(a), II R. 637; Exhibit E to City's Answer, I R. 205, Offered as City's Exhibit B, II R. 386). This agreement provides that during the continuance of the agreement the City will make deposits in escrow in sums equal to the Lease rentals, including the amount of the interest due on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds. In direct violation of the rights of the trustee and of the Bondholders, however, the agreement provides that if the Lease is held to be binding on the City, the entire funds deposited in escrow, including those deposited in respect of the interest on the Bonds, shall be paid to Indianapolis Gas (I R. 206). The existence of this agreement came to the attention of the trustee and certain Bondholders some time later in March, 1936 (II R. 405-6), and in April, 1936 the Bondholders requested the trustee (Chase) to bring suit (PX 125, 126; III R. 937, 939; Offered, II R. 408). The Bill was filed on June 8, 1936, less than three months after plaintiff first learned of the agreement of March 2.

The District Court originally held that Indianapolis Gas should be realigned with plaintiff, thus destroying the requisite diversity of citizenship, and on November 15, 1937 dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction (I R. 271).

The Court of Appeals reversed this decision and remanded the case for trial (II R. 285; 96 F. (2d) 363). This Court denied certiorari (305 U. S. 600).

While the appeal was pending, certain Bondholders filed a wholly independent suit against those defendants who were made parties to Chase's Bill and also against the holder of the escrow fund. In this bill the plaintiffs, who hold Bonds aggregating almost $600,000.00 (Stip. 3(d), II R. 619), sued on behalf of themselves and all other Bondholders and asked for a personal judgment against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City of Indianapolis for the unpaid interest on the Bonds and also asked, as Chase had, for a declaratory judgment holding that the Lease is a binding obligation of Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City.

In accordance with an order made by the District Court the two cases were tried together but not consolidated (II R. 325). All exhibits and evidence were considered as having been presented in both cases. This accounts for the designation of certain exhibits as "Plaintiffs' Exhibits," and certain other references in the record to "plaintiffs." The District Court has not yet decided the Bondholders' case.

In the trustee's case, the City renewed its attack on the court's jurisdiction, but the District Court upheld its jurisdiction (III R. 1192). On the merits, the court refused to grant plaintiff any relief against Citizens Gas or the City. The court held that the Lease was invalid and unenforceable against the City, Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, or "the property formerly owned by the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and now owned and operated by said City * * *"; and that the decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana in the Williams case was neither res judicata nor a binding decision as to the law of Indiana which the court was required to recognize (III R. 1192 3). The court did, however, give plaintiff a judgment against Indianapolis Gas in the sum of $1,032,150.00, the amount of the unpaid coupons on the Bonds (III R. 1193).

Separate appeals were taken by plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas. These appeals (Nos. 7143 and 7144) were heard together on the same record. The Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the District Court and held (IV R. 1306):

> (I) That Chase is entitled to a coercive judgment for the overdue interest, with interest on overdue interest at 5%, against "(1) the City as successor trustee and the trust property; (2) Citizens Gas; and (3) Indianapolis Gas." (The amount due is now about $1,700,000.)
> (II) That "Chase is entitled to a declaratory judgment to the effect that the lease is valid and enforceable against the parties * * *."

The City filed a petition for rehearing (IV R. 1309) in which it asserted, among other things, that it had not been given its day in court on the issue of the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease and that there could be no federal jurisdiction of the case. The Court of Appeals denied this petition but modified its opinion in certain respects, taking pains to make it clear that the judgment to be entered would bind the City only in its capacity as trustee of the public charitable trust and not as a municipality (IV R. 1335-6). A second petition for rehearing (IV R. 1343) was also denied (IV R. 1405).

The City filed two petitions for certiorari (Nos. 421 and 422). Chase filed a cross-petition for writs of certiorari (Nos. 423 and 424). The case is now before this Court upon the granting of these petitions and the cross-petition.

D.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

Since Chase was plaintiff in the District Court and is a cross-petitioner here, it has been agreed by all parties that it is to file the first brief in this Court. Plaintiff will accordingly present not only the error upon which it relies, but also the reasons why the judgments of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed except as to the single error of which plaintiff complains. In this connection we will deal with the alleged errors upon which the City relies.

I. PLAINTIFF'S SPECIFICATION OF ERROR.

The single error upon which plaintiff relies is that the Circuit Court of Appeals should have allowed interest on the overdue coupons from the dates of their respective maturities, and upon the judgment to be rendered from the time of its entry, at the rate of 6% in each instance and not at the rate of 5%. Plaintiff claims this right under the clear language of the Indiana statutes. (As of October 1, 1946, the difference amounted to more than $30,000.00.)

II. CITY'S SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

The City's "Reasons Relied Upon for Allowance of Writ" are (Pet. 13-16):

First: That the City has been denied a hearing on the question of the alleged burdensome character of the Lease and has thus been denied due process of law. (See below, p. 45.)

Second: That the Court of Appeals should have realigned Indianapolis Gas with plaintiff, in accordance with the City's conception of their interests in a so-called "dominant controversy," without regard to their conflicts of interest in the other controversies. (See below, p. 38.)

Third: That the Court of Appeals refused to follow the law of Indiana:

(1) As to the estoppel of a city. (See below, p. 118.)

(2) On the question of res judicata. (See below, p. 74.)

(3) As to the proper interpretation of a grant made by a municipality. (See below, p. 56.)

(4) To the effect that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes. In this connection the City claims that certain Indiana statutes prohibited the Lease in question. (See below, p. 93.)

E.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY REFUSED TO REALIGN INDIANAPOLIS GAS WITH CHASE AS A PARTY PLAINTIFF.

(Brief, pp. 38-45.)

The decision of the Court of Appeals requires a judgment against Indianapolis Gas of over $1,700,000. A party against whom plaintiff is entitled to such a judgment should not be aligned with plaintiff. A defendant with whom the plaintiff has one or more controversies is never realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, and this rule applies without regard to whether plaintiff and such defendant are in accord as to some other phase of the same suit.

II. THE CITY HAD AMPLE OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD ON THE QUESTION WHETHER THE ALLEGED BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE WAS A VALID DEFENSE AND THE COURT OF APPEALS' DIRECTION TO ENTER FINAL JUDGMENT WITHOUT A RETRIAL OF THAT ISSUE WAS IN FULL ACCORD WITH DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

(Brief, pp. 45-56.)

The City had ample opportunity to be heard on the question whether the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease was a valid defense, both in the trial court and in the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals was correct in determining this question of law adversely to the City's contentions and the City is not entitled to prove allegations which would be ineffectual as a defense even if they were proved.

The City admits that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease is a conclusive determination that the Lease was "advisable and in the public interest" (Reply Br. 8). The Williams case* is a conclusive determination by the Indiana Supreme Court (both as res judicata and as a statement of the Indiana law) that the Lease would be binding upon the public charitable trust even if it were proved to be burdensome. Also, the law is well settled in Indiana that neither a party to nor an assignee of a contract or lease can escape his obligations thereunder by showing that they were originally or have become burdensome. Thus, the Court of Appeals was correct in holding that the City's allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense.

* Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212 (1934).

The right to prove allegations which would be wholly immaterial and ineffectual as a defense even if they were proved is not an element of due process of law.

III. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS WAS CORRECT IN HOLDING THAT CITIZENS GAS HAD THE POWER TO EXECUTE THE LEASE AND MAKE IT BINDING UPON THE PUBLIC CHARITABLE TRUST FOR THE FULL TERM OF THE LEASE.

(Brief, pp. 56-74.)

The City concedes that the Lease was valid until the trust property was transferred to the City (I R. 145-6). The theory that a trustee's contract, valid when made, becomes voidable when his successor takes his place as trustee is obviously unsound. In fact, Citizens Gas had ample authority to execute the Lease and make it binding on the trust for the full term of the Lease.

(a) Citizens Gas Had Express Statutory Authority to Make the Lease for 99 Years.

(Brief, pp. 56-58.)

Section 95½ of the Public Service Commission Law* specifically authorized competing public utilities to merge by purchase or lease, "at a price and on terms fixed by the

---

* The pertinent portions of this Law are quoted in "Appendix A" to this brief, infra, p. 142.

commission." The Lease here in question was one between competing public utilities and was "at a price and on terms fixed by the commission."

(b) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust for the Full Term of the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 58-66.)

The fact that its Articles gave Citizens Gas no express power to buy or sell property, hire employees, or make leases does not negative the existence of those powers, since they are necessarily implied from its general authority "to supply the city of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power." The charter powers of an Indiana corporation are derived both from its articles and the general laws governing such corporation, so that the statutory provisions authorizing public utilities to make leases were an express grant of such power to Citizens Gas.

(c) The Express Statutory Power of Citizens Gas to Effect a Merger by Making the Lease For 99 Years Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising From the Public Charitable Trust.

(Brief, pp. 66-69.)

In the Williams case the Supreme Court of Indiana held that the rights of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust are "subject to the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility." This power was exercised by the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law and by the Commission's approval of the Lease, pursuant to the provisions of that Law.

(d) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 69-70.)

The decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana in the Williams case that "the lease was one which the Citizens' Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had the power to execute" is a binding adjudication between the parties and a controlling authority as to the Indiana law.

(e) The Practical Construction of the Franchise and Articles by the City and Citizens Gas Shows That Those Instruments Gave Citizens Gas Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 70-74.)

Over a period of more than 22 years (from 1913 to 1935) the City and Citizens Gas consistently construed the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas as granting it the power to execute this Lease and bind the public charitable trust thereto for the full term of the Lease. This practical construction of these documents by the parties themselves is of great, if not controlling, significance as to their proper interpretation.

IV. THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE AND ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE PUBLIC CHARITABLE TRUST HAVE BEEN CONCLUSIVELY ESTABLISHED BY THE JUDGMENT IN THE WILLIAMS CASE AND OTHER DECISIONS.

(Brief, pp. 74-92.)

The decision of the Indiana Supreme Court in the Williams case, the order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease, and the decision in the Fishback case conclusively determined every issue now presented by the City in its attack on the Lease.

(a) The Judgment in the Williams Case Conclusively Determined That the Lease is Binding on the Public Charitable Trust, on Citizens Gas as Initial Trustee, and on the City as Successor Trustee.

(Brief, pp. 75-90.)

Williams sued in behalf of the public charitable trust and made all the parties to the case at bar, including the initial trustee and the successor trustee of the public charitable trust, parties to his suit. The refusal of the Indiana Supreme Court to remove the Lease as an "unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" is a conclusive determination that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust, of the initial trustee and of the City as successor trustee.

The City presents no issues as to the binding effect of the Lease which were not adjudicated in the Williams case and the judgment in that case would be conclusive even if the City were relying on new grounds of attack. Likewise, the mere transfer of the trust property did not affect the conclusiveness of the decision that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust. The obligations of a trust cannot be evaded merely by changing the trustee.

Williams, a beneficiary, was permitted to present the case on behalf of the trust. It makes no difference, therefore, what issues, if any, were raised between the trustee (the City) and its co-defendants. The City had the opportunity to support Williams's contentions. It elected to oppose them.

Entirely aside from the question of res judicata, the Williams case conclusively settles the law of Indiana as to the very facts now presented to this Court.

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission Conclusively Determined That the Lease Is in the Public Interest (Consequently in the Interest of the Trust Also) and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility.

(Brief, pp. 90-92.)

The City admits that the Public Service Commission has conclusively determined that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest" (Reply Br. 8). The Lease must, therefore, be in the interest of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust—"the public." The Commission's decision is also a conclusive determination that the Lease was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility and, therefore, superseded any limitations (in fact there were none) which might have been involved in the existence of the trust.

(c) The Fishback Case.

(Brief, p. 92.)

The decision in the Fishback case is res judicata between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas. The primary importance of this case lies in the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City in upholding the validity of the Lease during the eight years immediately following the execution of the Lease, before the trial court entered final judgment.

V. THE CITY HAD AMPLE AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT THE TRUST AND ITS OBLIGATIONS, INCLUDING THE OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE LEASE, AND TOOK THE NECESSARY ACTION TO EXERCISE THAT AUTHORITY.

(Brief, pp. 93-117.)

The statutes* which the City asserts "prohibit any such lease" as the one here in question have no application to this case. The City had ample authority to take over

---

* These statutes are quoted in full in "Appendix B" to this brief, infra, p. 147.

the public charitable trust and all its accompanying obligations, including those under the Lease, and took proper steps to exercise that authority.

(a) The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Accompanying Obligations, Including the Obligations Under the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 93-98.)

Under Section 53 (clause 6) of the Cities and Towns Act the City had express power to accept trusts and "to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same." This power is not subject to the limitations on the City's ordinary governmental powers. Moreover, the "validating acts" of 1929* conferred express authority on the City to accept the very trust here in question, including the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations. Indeed, the "validating acts" were prepared and their enactment procured by the City's counsel for this very purpose.

(b) The City's Acceptance of the Trust Property Included the Acceptance of the Leasehold Estate and the Obligations Under the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 98-107.)

The City admits that it took over all the trust property (I R. 243). Since it also admits that the Lease was valid during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas (I R. 145), the leasehold must have been part of the trust property taken over by the City. The fact is that in March, 1929 the City demanded the transfer of all the trust property, including the leasehold estate, and during the succeeding six years consistently construed this demand as including a demand for the transfer of the Lease.

---

* The pertinent portions of the "validating acts" are quoted in "Appendix C" to this brief, infra, p. 150.

(c) The City Accepted the Assignment of the Lease, Took Possession of the Leased Property and is Liable by Privity of Estate For the Obligations Under the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 107-111.)

The City received an assignment of the Lease, had it recorded, and took possession of the leased property, thereby becoming an assignee of the Lease. Its ex parte resolution saying that it rejected the assignment of the Lease is meaningless in view of its acts whereby it accepted the assignment. Also, the City had no agreement with Indianapolis Gas authorizing the City to take possession of the leased property. It had the right to take possession only as assignee of the Lease.

(d) The City Became Liable, as Successor Trustee, for All the Obligations of Citizens Gas, Including the Obligations Under the Lease.

(Brief, pp. 111-117.)

The City admits that it took the property of Citizens Gas "subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company" (I R. 243) and that the Lease was valid during the 22 years before the City received the trust property (I R. 145). This necessarily means that the obligations under the Lease were included among those to which the property was subject in the hands of the City. The City, as successor trustee, became liable for all the obligations of Citizens Gas in three ways: (1) by accepting the instruments transferring the trust property, all of which were expressly made subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas; (2) by giving Citizens Gas an Indemnity Agreement, in which the City agreed to protect Citizens Gas from all liability arising from any acts or omissions to act on the part of Citizens Gas; and (3) by taking all the assets of Citizens Gas and paying the consideration therefor to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas, leaving it with no property out of which to satisfy its obligations.

VI THE CONTINUED ACQUIESCENCE IN THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE BY CITIZENS GAS AND THE CITY FOR 22 YEARS, THEIR ACCEPTANCE OF THE BENEFITS UNDER THE LEASE, AND THEIR REPRESENTATIONS AS TO ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE TRUST PRECLUDE BOTH OF THEM FROM ATTACKING THE LEASE.

(Brief, pp. 118-132.)

Although the Court of Appeals made no decision on the question of estoppel in pais, it would have been fully warranted in holding that both the City and Citizens Gas are estopped to deny that the Lease is binding for its full term.

(a) Citizens Gas is Estopped by its Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid for its Full Term.

(Brief, pp. 120-124.)

Before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, and in the Williams case, Citizens Gas insisted that the Lease was valid for its full term and in each instance this contention was sustained. Also, Citizens Gas represented to the investing public that it had a 99-year Lease on the property of Indianapolis Gas, under the terms of which it guaranteed the interest on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds. There can be no doubt that as a result of these representations the general public was not only induced to buy the $2,000,000 of Indianapolis Gas Bonds sold by Citizens Gas, but also to continue to hold all the outstanding Bonds.

(b) The City is Estopped by Its Own Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid For Its Full Term.

(Brief, pp. 124-129.)

From 1913 to 1935 the City both actively urged and represented and stood by with full knowledge while Citizens Gas represented that the Lease was valid and binding for its full term. On several occasions when beneficiaries of the trust attacked the Lease the City not only failed to join in the attack but affirmatively insisted that the Lease was valid. As late as June, 1935 it sold its Revenue Bonds upon the express representation that it was taking over the entire system operated by Citizens Gas, including the property leased from Indianapolis Gas.

(c) The City is Precluded by Its Own Laches and the Laches of Citizens Gas From Denying That the Lease is Valid and Binding For Its Full Term.

(Brief, pp. 129-132.)

Citizens Gas and the beneficiaries of the trust had all the benefits of the Lease for a period of 22 years before the City asserted that the Lease was no longer binding. Moreover, during this period the City was a party to several proceedings in which it was incumbent on the City to speak if it ever intended to repudiate the Lease and in each instance the City failed to speak or took the affirmative position that the Lease was a binding obligation of the public charitable trust.

VII. THE RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY v. TOMPKINS REQUIRED THE DECISION MADE BY THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS AND THE COURT FULLY COMPLIED WITH THAT RULE.

(Brief, pp. 132-134.)

Every Indiana decision bearing upon the validity of the Lease compels the conclusion that it is valid for its full term. The City's present contentions as to the validity of the Lease were all conclusively negatived, as a matter of Indiana law, in the Williams case.

VIII. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY HELD THAT PLAINTIFF'S JUDGMENT SHOULD INCLUDE INTEREST ON THE COUPONS AFTER THEIR MATURITY AND INTEREST ON THE JUDGMENT ITSELF, BUT IN EACH CASE THE RATE OF INTEREST SHOULD BE SIX PER CENT.

(Brief, pp. 134-138.)

Under the express provisions of the Indiana statutes plaintiff is entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent on (1) the overdue coupons from the dates of their respective maturities, and (2) the judgment itself. The fact that the Bonds bear interest at the rate of 5% is wholly immaterial with respect to the proper rate of interest on the overdue coupons and on plaintiff's judgment.

F.

ARGUMENT.

I. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY REFUSED TO REALIGN INDIANAPOLIS GAS WITH CHASE AS A PARTY PLAINTIFF.

In the Court of Appeals the City raised no question as to federal jurisdiction of this case until its first petition for rehearing. It was content with federal jurisdiction so long as the decision on the merits was in its favor. The Court of Appeals having decided the merits against it, the City is once more raising the question of jurisdiction which was determined adversely to it by the Court of Appeals in April, 1938. Chase National Bank, Trustee v. Citizens Gas Co., 96 F. (2d) 363 (H R. 285).

After the Court of Appeals sustained federal jurisdiction of these cases in 1938, the City filed a petition for a writ of certiorari, which was denied (305 U. S. 600). Both in the Court of Appeals and in this Court the City argued, as it is now arguing again (Pet. 11-12), that > "* * * the attitude of the respective parties toward the essential, substantial controversy, should determine whether realignment shall take place for the purpose of testing the jurisdiction of the court as a federal court; irrespective of the attitude of the parties toward subsidiary or different issues." (Supporting Brief, p. 16, case No. 168, 1938.)

The Court of Appeals denied that there was any such test for determining when realignment should be required, saying (96 F. (2d) 367, H R. 291):

> "* * * A perusal of these authorities discloses that such realignment has been required when there is no actual controversy between plaintiff and defendant, or no bona fide prayer for relief against it. * * * The rule seems to be that before such realignment may be required, the parties must be in substantial accord upon all issues presented. Boston Safe-Deposit & Trust Co. v. City of Racine, C. C., 97 F. 817. It is not sufficient that they merely be in accord upon one issue or some of the issues."

In the case at bar the District Court gave plaintiff a judgment against Indianapolis Gas for $1,032,150 (III R. 1193). The decision of the Court of Appeals requires a coercive judgment against Indianapolis Gas for approximately $1,700,000. It is inconceivable that a party against whom plaintiff is entitled to recover such a judgment can be aligned with the plaintiff under any circumstances.

The City's argument is based entirely on the fact that the City, as successor trustee, has been held primarily liable and Indianapolis Gas secondarily liable for the amount of the judgment, and that the City is well able to pay the judgment out of the funds of the public charitable trust (Pet. 11). A parity of reasoning would require a realignment whenever a creditor sues a principal and surety on a debt. No such realignment is required.

It is clear under the authorities, particularly in Indiana, that this case itself involves a principal and surety relationship. The situation here is substantially the same as that when a mortgagor sells the mortgaged property to a third person, who agrees to pay the mortgage debt. In such a situation the mortgagor becomes the surety, and the grantee of the mortgaged property becomes the principal debtor.

Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hanford, 143 U. S. 187 (1892);
Birke v. Abbott, 103 Ind. 1, 1 N. E. 485 (1885);
Todd v. Oglebay, 158 Ind. 595, 64 N. E. 32 (1902).

The relationship of principal and surety is similarly involved where, as in the case at bar, the mortgagor merely leases the property to a third person, who in turn agrees to pay the interest on the mortgage as rent. Thus, in Central Trust Co. v. Berwind-White Coal Co., 95 Fed. 391 (1899) the court had such a situation before it and said (pp. 395-6):

> "* * * The fact that the parties were lessor and lessee, instead of being vendor and vendee, and that a sum equal to the interest only was to be paid by the lessee to the mortgagee, instead of its principal, makes no difference in the principle which underlies all the mortgage cases. * * * The lessee, as between the lessor and lessee, has become the principal for the payment of interest. The intention and the object of the provision were, as in the mortgage cases, palpably and primarily for the benefit of the plaintiff, and to enhance its certainty of securing the interest upon the lessor's mortgage."

When there has been an assumption of the mortgage obligations, either by a vendee or a lessee, and the mortgagee sues to recover the debt, he ordinarily joins as defendants both the original mortgagor and the vendee or lessee who has assumed the mortgage obligations. The mortgagor may be vitally interested in having an adjudication that his vendee or lessee did assume the mortgage and that he, the mortgagor, is merely a surety on the obligation, but such a fact does not require a realignment of the mortgagor with the mortgagee. The mortgagee has a bona fide claim for relief against both defendants and it is wholly immaterial that one of them is liable only as surety.

So in the case at bar. The plaintiff has a bona fide claim for unpaid interest against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City, and they are all properly aligned as defendants, even though some of them may be primarily and others only secondarily liable.

The City has never cited a single case in which the plaintiff had even one substantial controversy with a defendant and such defendant was realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes. The fact that plaintiff and such defendant may be in accord as to some of the other issues in the case is wholly immaterial. To be sure, realignment is required where there is no bona fide prayer for relief against a particular defendant, as in City of Dan- son v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178 (Pet. 12, 27), but that is not the situation in the case at bar. An analysis of Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, the only other case on which the City relies (Pet. 28-9),* will show how completely it supports federal jurisdiction of this case. The facts were as follows:

Moses and Mary Jane Hubbard accumulated community property valued at about $100,000 and made a joint will establishing a charitable trust of this property on the death of Moses. After Moses' death the trustees secured a "pretended judgment" confirming the trust. Subsequently Mary Jane accumulated separate property of her own worth about $18,000 and died leaving all her property to a niece, Cora Spencer.

There were eight heirs at law of Mary Jane, of whom Cora was one. The other seven heirs (nonresidents of Texas) brought suit in a federal court in Texas, joining Cora Spencer and the trustees as defendants. All defendants were citizens of Texas. The objects of this suit, as stated by this Court, were (pp. 203-4):

(1) To annul the joint will setting up the trust.

(2) To set aside the judgment confirming the trust.

(3) To annul the will of Mary Jane in so far as it bequeathed the community property to Cora Spencer, but not to take the $18,000 from her.

(4) To partition the community property among plaintiffs and Cora Spencer.

Clearly, the interests of plaintiffs and Cora Spencer were identical as to issues (1), (2) and (4), since all the heirs would benefit by having the community property taken from the trustees and distributed among the heirs. Unless plaintiffs were successful as to issues (1) and (2), in which Cora Spencer was interested with plaintiffs against the other defendants, the remaining issues would never become important, because they related solely to the distribution of the property to be recovered under issues (1) and (2). Thus, the only controversy between plaintiffs and Cora Spencer related to the distribution of the property which the plaintiffs sought to recover from the trustees. This Court held that this single divergence of interest prevented the realignment of Cora Spencer as a plaintiff. Thus Sutton v. English directly refutes the City's proposition that a defendant with whom plaintiff has a genuine controversy can nevertheless be aligned with the plaintiff.

* The City's prior petition for certiorari was based entirely on this case (Petition, No. 168, 1938, pp. 17-19).

The Court will notice the similarity between Sutton v. English and the case at bar. Here the interests of plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas are clearly adverse as to the disposition of the rent under the Lease. The Lease makes part of this rent payable to plaintiff or the Bondholders, as interest on the Bonds. In the contract of March 2, 1936, however, Indianapolis Gas is contending that all the rent should be paid to it. (I R. 206.) Plaintiff's judgment for the unpaid interest, against both Indianapolis Gas and the City, the present lessee, settles this matter in plaintiff's favor. Thus this case presents a conflict of interests substantially the same as the only conflict between the plaintiffs and Cora Spencer in Sutton v. English, i.e. as to how the fund shall be distributed once it has been recovered from the other defendants.

In direct contrast with the City's inability to cite a single case in which its theory was adopted and put into effect is the fact that the decision of this Court in Sutton v. English and the decisions of the Circuit Courts of Appeals are unanimous in holding that there will be no realignment if there is a single substantial controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant sought to be realigned.

Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 204 (1918);

Republic National Bank & Trust Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Co., 68 F. (2d) 445, 447 (C. C. A. 5th, 1934);

Detroit Tile & Mosaic Co. v. Mason Contractors' Association, 48 F. (2d) 729, 731 (C. C. A. 6th 1931);

Franz v. Franz, 15 F. (2d) 797, 799 (C. C. A. 8th, 1926);

Feidler v. Bartleson, 161 Fed. 30, 35 (C. C. A. 9th, 1908).

In each of these cases there was at least one controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant sought to be realigned, and this single controversy prevented such realignment, despite the fact that plaintiff and such defendant were in accord as to some of the other controversies. The rule of law applied in these cases and in the case at bar on the first appeal (II R. 291-2)—that a defendant against whom plaintiff asks relief and with whom plaintiff has distinct conflicts of interests cannot be realigned with the plaintiff in determining federal jurisdiction—has been universally recognized. The federal courts have continued to apply this rule since the decision of the jurisdictional question in this case in 1938. For example, see Rea Co. v. International Harvester Co., 107 F. (2d) 767, 768 (C. C. A. 5th, 1939), in which the court cited Sutton v. English and the first decision of the Court of Appeals in the case at bar in support of its decision.

The City's contention that the question as to the validity of the Lease is the dominant controversy in this case and must govern the question of realignment, without regard to any other controversies, is based on the proposition that plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas are on the same side of that controversy (Pet. 28-9). The fact is however that plaintiff asks precisely the same relief against Indianapolis Gas on this issue that it asks against the City and Citizens Gas, namely, that the Lease be held binding on each (Prayer 2, I R. 20-21). The fallacy in the City's argument is its assumption that a defendant can destroy the controversy upon which federal jurisdiction depends by admitting its liability, or even by consenting to have its liability enforced. The law is well settled to the contrary.

Re Metropolitan Railway Receivership, 208 U. S. 90 (1908).

In this case the Court sustained the jurisdiction of a federal court to appoint a receiver, against the contention that the court had no jurisdiction because (p. 107):

> "* * * the defendant admitted the indebtedness and the other allegations of the bill of complaint, and consented to and united in the application for the appointment of receivers."

Thus, this Court said (pp. 107-8):

> "* * * Notwithstanding this objection, we think there was such a controversy between these parties as is contemplated by the statute. * * * Jurisdiction does not depend upon the fact that the defendant denies the existence of the claim made, or its amount or validity. If it were otherwise, then the Circuit Court would have no jurisdiction if the defendant simply admitted his liability and the amount thereof as claimed, although not paying or satisfying the debt."

It is, therefore, wholly immaterial that Indianapolis Gas admits the validity of the Lease and is willing to have its binding effect established.

Plaintiff sought and obtained a substantial judgment against Indianapolis Gas, to say nothing of its other controversies with it, and the City has no support for its novel theory that a defendant against whom such a judgment has been obtained should be, or even could be, made a party plaintiff to this suit. Plaintiff has several direct controversies with Indianapolis Gas and that company was properly made a party defendant. As shown by the authorities reviewed above, even if plaintiff's interests were not adverse to those of Indianapolis Gas as to one phase of this suit, that would not warrant the realignment of Indianapolis Gas as a party plaintiff, so long as there is a single substantial controversy between it and the plaintiff.

II. THE CITY HAD AMPLE OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD ON THE QUESTION WHETHER THE ALLEGED BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE WAS A VALID DEFENSE AND THE COURT OF APPEALS' DIRECTION TO ENTER FINAL JUDGMENT WITHOUT A RETRIAL OF THAT ISSUE WAS IN FULL ACCORD WITH DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The Court of Appeals determined that a final judgment should be entered declaring the Lease valid and enforceable against the parties and awarding plaintiff judgment for the portion of the rent represented by the unpaid interest on the Bonds. The City contends (Pet. 13-14) that it has been denied due process of law because the Court of Appeals did not remand the case to the District Court to determine:

(1) The question of fact whether the Lease is burdensome; and

(2) The question of law whether such burdensomeness, if any, would be a valid defense.

This contention is based on the assertion that the District Court "reserved for future determination the question of the burdensome character of the lease," and that when the Court of Appeals directed a final judgment to be entered in plaintiff's favor it denied the City "a hearing in a trial court on the issue of the burdensome character of the lease" (Pet. 11). The absurdity of the City's contention is clearly demonstrated by a recital of what the record shows as to the reservation made by the District Court with respect to the issue of burdensomeness.

To facilitate the trial below several claims presented by plaintiff's Bill were excluded from the first trial, pursuant to Rule 42(b) of the new Rules of Federal Procedure. As to the claims not so excluded, the District Court entered an order* directing that evidence should be heard upon the issues whether the Lease is binding and enforceable and whether plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for interest on the Bonds against the defendants or the trust property—

> "with the one exception that evidence shall not be heard therewith but shall be deferred on one certain reason assigned by the City of Indianapolis in its answer, for claimed unenforceability of such lease against it or its said property viz., that the City as successor trustee of a certain public charitable trust in property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust: * * *." (II R. 321-2.)

The language just quoted is very similar to that in the proposed form of order presented to the District Court by counsel for the City, and the italicized language is precisely the same as that in the City's proposed order (IV R. 1320, Par. (3); IV R. 1330). Thus the only issue, so far as the validity of the Lease is concerned, upon which the taking of evidence was deferred was whether the City "had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome." This is the "reserved" issue.

* Under this order several claims on which Chase relied are still to be tried (e.g., failure to maintain the leased property, recovery of fees and expenses, etc.), but they do not affect the determination of the validity of the Lease.

While Chase did not object to this order (Pet. 11, 21, 25), it has consistently maintained that the allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense and that no evidence to support them should be received. (e.g. see IV R. 1331-2.)

stated in the City's own language, as to which the City complains it has not had its day in court (Pet. 11). This is a much narrower issue than that to which the City refers in its petitions (Pet. 10-11) and, as we shall see (infra, p. 93), the fact is that the City did not reject an assignment of the Lease, so that there was no occasion to determine whether it had the right to do so.

However, whether the questions as to burdensomeness were as broad as the City contends or as narrow as we contend, the City had ample opportunity to be heard both in the District Court and in the Circuit Court of Appeals on the broad question of law whether burdensomeness would be a valid defense.

(a) The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard in Both Lower Courts on the Question Whether Burdensomeness Would be a Valid Defense—Moreover the Hearing in the District Court Was Not Essential to Due Process of Law.

In the District Court plaintiff filed a motion to strike from the City's answer and counterclaim all the allegations asserting that the Lease was burdensome, thereby squarely raising the issue whether the alleged burdensomeness would be a valid defense if proved (II R. 317). This motion was denied (II R. 320). In its appeal plaintiff assigned as error the District Court's failure to strike out these immaterial allegations (Points 1 and 2, III R. 1196), and this question was fully argued in the briefs in the Court of Appeals. It is, therefore, clear that the City has in fact had its day in court on this question of law, both in the District Court and in the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals concluded, as a matter of law, that the City's allegations of "burdensomeness" presented no defense.

The City had ample opportunity in both lower courts to present its views as to the validity of the defense of burdensomeness. Moreover, even if this question of law had not been considered by the District Court, the requirements of due process of law would have been fully satisfied. The City's proposition that "The City was entitled to a trial in the District Court on all questions of fact and law" (Pet. 13,* 14, emphasis is the City's) is clearly unfounded. The cases cited to support this proposition (Pet. 14, 23-5) hold that due process necessitates a judicial determination or review of relevant questions of fact as well as questions of law. None of them holds that there must be a determination of all questions of law and fact by a trial court and these cases are, therefore, not germane to the question here presented.

American Surety Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U. S. 156 (1932), completely refutes the City's proposition that due process of law requires a hearing of all questions of law and fact in the trial court and that a hearing of either type of question in the reviewing court only is not adequate. In that case the Surety Company sought relief from a judgment entered against it by an Idaho state court on a supersedeas bond. This bond was given on an appeal from a judgment against Singer Company and its employee, Anderson. After the bond had been given the state Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in plaintiff's favor against the defendant, Anderson, but reversed it as to the defendant, Singer Company. When the case came back to the trial court, that court entered judgment against the Surety Company, without notice to that company.

The Surety Company attacked the judgment against it on the ground that its bond had not stayed the judgment as to Anderson, that it was not subject to judgment upon Anderson's failure to pay and that, since the judgment was entered without an opportunity for a hearing as to the construction and effect of its bond, the judgment was void under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. This Court held that there was no denial of due process, since the state procedure afforded the Surety Company opportunity to be fully heard on appeal. Thus, this Court said (p. 168):

* This statement appears in the two petitions as follows: Cause 421 at p. 13, Cause 422 at p. 14.

> "* * * Due process requires that there be an opportunity to present every available defense; but it need not be before the entry of judgment. [citing cases] An appeal on the record which included the bond afforded an adequate opportunity. Thus, the entry of judgment was consistent with due process of law."

The rule announced in the above case—that an opportunity for a hearing on appeal, after judgment has been entered, fully satisfies the requirements of due process of law—is especially applicable to the case at bar. This case is a federal equity case and the Court of Appeals hears such a case de novo, with full power to adjudicate all questions of law and fact.

Alexander v. Redmond, 180 Fed. 92, 93, 96 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1910);
Lyon v. Union Gas & Oil Co., 281 Fed. 674, 67[illegible] (C. C. A. 6th, 1922); Uukle v. Wills, 281 Fed. 29, 34 (C. C. A. 8th, 1922).

Thus it is apparent that the City had an opportunity to be heard in both lower courts on the question whether burdensomeness would be a valid defense. Beyond that, it is entirely clear that no constitutional right of the City would have been violated if the Court of Appeals had been the first court to pass on that question.

(b) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the Alleged Burdensomeness Would Not be a Valid Defense is Obviously Correct.

The City does not complain that the decision of the Court of Appeals on the question of law as to the validity of the defense of burdensomeness is erroneous, but does complain that this question should have been referred to the District Court for rehearing there (Pet. 11, 13-14). Thus there is no issue in this Court as to the correctness of the decision by the Court of Appeals that the alleged burdensomeness is not a valid defense.

The City's statement (Pet. 11) that the Court of Appeals held "that if the lease were in fact burdensome Citizens Gas, as initial trustee, had no authority to execute the same, * * *" is not supported by the record. The Court of Appeals did say in passing (IV R. 1300) that the beneficiaries of a trust may set aside "a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances." This was far from holding that the allegations of burdensomeness asserted by the City for the first time 22 years after the Lease was made could be a valid ground of defense to a Lease which was executed "with the full consent and approval of the City," after the Public Service Commission had determined that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest." It is clear that the Court of Appeals actually held that Citizens Gas did have authority to make the Lease (IV R. 1300) and that the City's allegations of burdensomeness constituted no valid defense. Indeed, the City admits that the Court made the latter holding (Pet. 25).

The record discloses ample reasons why this decision by the Court of Appeals is sound.

1. The issue of burdensomeness is moot and wholly immaterial.

As we have seen (supra, p. 46), the only issue, so far as the validity of the Lease is concerned, upon which the taking of evidence was deferred was whether [illegible]

"had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome." Actually, the City did not "refuse and reject an assignment of such lease." The Circuit Court of Appeals so held, and that holding is not challenged by the City's petitions for writs of certiorari.

The City affirmatively elected to take over the entire trust property, including the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations (infra, pp. 98-107). In addition, the City accepted the assignment of the Lease and had it recorded and has been in possession of the leased property ever since (II R. 330, 350, 467-8; Stip. 6(c), II R. 622-3). Under such circumstances it is wholly immaterial whether the City had the right "to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease," since it not only did not exercise this supposed right, but affirmatively elected to take the trust property in toto, including the Lease.

2. The decision of the Indiana Public Service Commission forecloses the question of burdensomeness.

When the Lease was made in 1913 it was expressly approved by the Public Service Commission of Indiana as being in the public interest, after prolonged hearings and careful consideration of the objections made by Fishback, a beneficiary of the public charitable trust (see pp. 6-8, supra). The City was a party to the proceedings before the Commission and the Lease was made, as the City formally admitted in the Cotter case, "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis" (PX 89, III R. 569, offered, II R. 334, III R. 1057).

With reference to the Commission's approval of the Lease, the City says (Reply Br. 8):

> "Petitioners are cognizant of the rule that where the Commission has jurisdiction to decide questions of fact and enter an order thereon, and acts within its jurisdiction, its decision is conclusive on the courts in a collateral action. But the order of the Commission approving the lease went no further, and could go no further, than to determine upon the facts adduced, whether it was advisable and in the public interest that the property of Indianapolis Gas be leased to Citizens Gas on the terms stated in the Commission's order."

Thus the City admits that this determination of the Public Service Commission—that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest," and hence not burdensome to the trust of which the members of the general public were the beneficiaries—is conclusive on the courts in this collateral action. Moreover, it is the settled law of Indiana that such decisions of the Public Service Commission are conclusive on the courts in a collateral action.

Public Service Commission v. Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 43; 137 N. E. 705, 707 (infra, pp. 90-1).

In the present case the City is demanding the right to make a collateral attack upon the Commission's decision that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest."

3. The Williams case forecloses the question of burdensomeness.

In the Williams case (see pp. 14-16 above) Williams alleged that the Lease was part of a conspiracy "to destroy said Public Charitable Trust" (PX Stip. 35, Par. (20), II R. 777-8, Offered, II R. 328), that it was burdensome (II R. 780), and that it should be removed as "an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Public Charitable Trust" (II R. 790). The Supreme Court of Indiana held, among other things, that the Public Service Commission was authorized to approve the Lease and that the Lease would be valid and binding even if it were proved to be burdensome. Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212, 215-16 (1934).

This decision of the Indiana Supreme Court that the trust could not be relieved from the obligations of the Lease on the ground that those obligations were burdensome is binding in the case at bar because it was (1) a conclusive adjudication between the parties to this case,* all of whom were parties to the Williams case, and (2) an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana.

The City complains that it was not heard in the trial court as to whether the decision in the Williams case is res judicata (Pet. 14, Par. (b)). As a matter of fact, it was fully heard on this question, both in the trial court and in the reviewing court. All the pleadings in the Williams case are in evidence (Stip. 14(g), II R. 632) and the record contains all the available facts as to the proceedings in that case. Also, the legal effect of that case was fully argued (e.g. see IV R. 1331, 1332-3), and indeed the City obtained a ruling by the District Court that the Williams case is not res judicata here (III R. 1178, No. 40; III R. 1190, No. 2).

4. Obligations incurred by contract or lease cannot be avoided on the ground that they are burdensome.

Under well settled rules of law, in the state of Indiana as elsewhere, neither a party to nor an assignee of a contract or lease can escape its obligations thereunder by showing that they were burdensome in the first instance or have become burdensome during the period of the contract or lease. This rule is peculiarly applicable to this case, where the Lease was made "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis."

Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88; 75 N. E. 582, 592 (1905);

Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas-Light & Coke Co., 66 Ind. 396, 407 (1879);

Terre Haute v. Terre Haute Waterworks Co., 94 Ind. 305, 307 (1884).

---

*The effect of the Williams case as res judicata is fully discussed at pages 75-90 below.

The City seeks comfort from the statement of the Court of Appeals that a trustee must act with prudence when making a long term lease and that otherwise the lease may be set aside at the suit of the beneficiaries (Pet. 22). Any such rights in the beneficiaries must, of course, be promptly asserted and are subject to the equities of the other parties to the lease, who are to be treated fairly under all the circumstances. The fact is that the beneficiaries of this particular trust have been fully heard with respect to the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease here in question, before the Public Service Commission before the Lease became effective and subsequently in the Fishback and the Williams cases. The City is in no position to make this collateral attack on these decisions by the Commission and the Indiana Supreme Court, particularly after receiving all the benefits of the Lease for a period of 22 years (1913 to 1935) without raising any question as to its validity (see pp. 129-32, infra).

We have already pointed out (supra, pp. 6-7) the opinions expressed by the officers and directors of Citizens Gas in 1913 and 1914 as to the extraordinary advantages accruing to that company and the community from the Indianapolis Gas Lease. There has never been a suggestion throughout this case that the officers and directors of Citizens Gas were guided by anything but the highest motives in making the Lease here in question. Their contemporaneous opinions, the authoritative determination of the Public Service Commission, and the decision in the Williams case should set at rest forever the bogy which counsel for the City attempt to raise in asserting that the Lease is burdensome.

(c) The Circuit Court of Appeals Having Correctly Determined That Burdensomeness Would Not Be A Valid Defense, Its Direction to Enter Final Judgment Was in Full Accord With Due Process of Law.

As we have already seen, the Court of Appeals concluded, as a matter of law, that the City's allegations of "burdensomeness" presented no defense. The City claims that its constitutional rights have been violated because it was not given an opportunity to prove these immaterial allegations. This claim is without substance. It is the universal practice for a court upon sustaining a demurrer, a motion to strike, or a similar attack upon a cause of action or defense, to refuse to allow a party to prove facts which would constitute no cause of action or defense if they were proved.

United States v. Metropolitan Body Co., 79 F. (2d) 177 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1935); Sarasota County v. American Surety Co., 68 F. (2d) 543 (C. C. A. 5th, 1934).

This universal practice must be proper, for the right to prove facts which would constitute no defense if proved cannot be a requisite element of due process of law. The Court of Appeals having determined, as a matter of law, that the alleged burdensomeness would be no defense, there was no occasion for a further hearing on that question, or for the presentation of evidence in support of this ineffectual defense.

In the case now before this Court, the City has had its hearing on the issue of burdensomeness just as truly as a party has had his day in court when a demurrer to his pleading is sustained and a final judgment entered. The Court of Appeals having properly determined that this defense would be wholly ineffectual, there is no basis for the City's demand that the case be sent back to the trial court, either to receive the evidence on this ineffectual defense or to secure a second expression of the views of the District Court as to the validity of this defense.

III. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS WAS CORRECT IN HOLDING THAT CITIZENS GAS HAD THE POWER TO EXECUTE THE LEASE AND MAKE IT BINDING UPON THE PUBLIC CHARITABLE TRUST FOR THE FULL TERM OF THE LEASE.

The City asserts that Citizens Gas did not have authority to make the Lease. In this connection, however, the City admits (I R. 145-6):

> "* * * said lease although conceded for the purpose of this litigation to be valid for the period of said franchise contract and until the property for which the Citizens Gas Company was Trustee was conveyed to the City of Indianapolis as Trustee was ultra vires, invalid and void after the expiration of the term of the trusteeship of the Citizens Gas Company * * *."

Thus the City concedes the authority of Citizens Gas to make the Lease effective for the term of its own trusteeship, but contends that the Lease would have to terminate whenever Citizens Gas was replaced as trustee. The theory that a trustee's contract, admittedly valid when made, becomes a nullity when his successor takes his place as trustee is clearly unsound, and, as we shall now show, Citizens Gas had in fact ample authority to execute the Lease and make it binding upon the trust for its full term of 99 years.

(a) Citizens Gas Had Express Statutory Authority to Make the Lease For 99 Years.

The City's contention that the right of Citizens Gas to execute the Lease "was based solely on implied power" (Pet. 15) completely disregards the express statutory authority of Citizens Gas to make this Lease.

Prior to 1913 it was generally considered that the Indiana anti-trust laws forbade the consolidation of competing utilities, either by lease or otherwise. Section 95½ of the Public Service Commission Law (Chapter 76, Acts of 1913*) was passed in 1913, for the obvious purpose of avoiding the prohibitory language of the anti-trust legislation. It read as follows:

> "Sec. 95½. That with the consent and approval of the commission but not otherwise, any two or more public utilities, furnishing a like service or product and doing business in the same municipality or locality within this state, or any two or more public utilities whose lines intersect or parallel each other within this state may be merged and may enter into contracts with each other that will enable such public utilities to operate their lines or plants in connection with each other; and any public utility may also, with the consent of the holders of three-fourths of the capital stock outstanding, purchase or lease the property, plant or business or any part thereof of any other such public utility at a price and on terms fixed by the commission. Any such public utility may, with the consent of three-fourths of the holders of the outstanding stock, sell or lease its property or business or any part thereof to any other such public utility at a price and on terms fixed by the commission upon paying in cash to nonconsenting stockholders the appraised value of their stock as fixed by the commission."

It is significant that this statute does not limit the period for which a lease may be taken. The statute provides for consolidations or mergers, whether by lease or otherwise, and authorizes the lease of a utility's entire assets upon a three-fourths vote of the stockholders. Obviously a merger effected by such a lease is not meant to be limited to a short period of time. As the court said in Dickinson v. Consolidated Traction Co., 119 Fed. 871, 872 (C. C. A. 3rd, 1903), in sustaining the validity of a lease of public utility property for a term of 999 years (p. 872):

* The pertinent parts of Chapter 76 of the Acts of 1913 are set forth in "Appendix A" to this brief infra, p. 142.

> "* * * as corporation leases for 999 years were well known when, by the statutory provisions to which we have referred, the power to lease was broadly and unqualifiedly given, we are not at liberty to assume that the exercise of that power was intended to be restricted to leases for a term not to exceed some limited, but wholly undefined and indeterminate, period."

Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas were, in the language of the statute, "furnishing a like service or product and doing business in the same municipality or locality," and therefore came within the express provisions of this statute. Citizens Gas was an Indiana public utility, as it was required to be by its Franchise from the City (I R. 82), and as such it had express statutory authority to enter into this Lease for a term of 99 years.

(b) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

The City contends that the right of Citizens Gas to execute the Lease was based solely on an "implied power" and that in the case of a grant made by a municipality "nothing is to be taken by implication against the public" (Pet. 15). The cases cited on the latter proposition (Pet. 15, 30) all deal with grants of rights to use public property, whereas the question at issue here is the nature and extent of the powers of Citizens Gas under its contract with the City.

This distinction was clearly pointed out in City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573 (1892). The plaintiff in that case sued the city to recover for gas supplied for lighting the streets. The plaintiff relied on an ordinance which granted it the right to use the streets to supply coal gas and which also contained an agreement by the city to purchase gas from the plaintiff for lighting its streets. The defendant city presented the same argument and relied upon the same Indiana case as the City of Indianapolis is relying upon in the case at bar. In response to that argument the Indiana Supreme Court said (pp. 575-6):

> "* * * In addition to the grant above referred to, the ordinance embodies a contract between the city and the company for the supply of gas. * * * The ordinance was in effect an offer by the city, the acceptance of which by the company created a contract between the parties, measured, like any other contract, by the terms and conditions of the writings. We see no reason why the contract thus formed should not be construed and interpreted like any other written contract."

Similarly, in the case at bar the Franchise in question contained both a grant to use the City streets and a contract between the City and Citizens Gas. While the grant may be subject to the strict construction for which the City contends, the contract thus formed is to be "construed and interpreted like any other written contract."

As a matter of fact, neither the Franchise contract between the City and Citizens Gas nor its Articles conferred any specific authority to buy property, to hire employees, or to do any of the things necessarily incidental to carrying on its business, except as such powers were implied from the provisions of the Franchise and Articles stating that the company was to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with gas for light, heat, and power. Thus Section 1 of the Franchise authorizes the use of the City streets to maintain, operate, and repair the pipes required "for the distribution and supply of gas to said city, and the inhabitants thereof, * * *." (I R. 82, lines 6 and 7). Similarly, Section III of the Articles provides:

> "The object of the promotion of this company shall be to supply the city of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power." (I R. 95.)

Beyond this, Section 17 of its Franchise required Citizens Gas "to so extend the various lines and mains of said plant that all the inhabitants of said city may be supplied with gas" (I R. 89).

Plainly, it is just as absurd to argue that Citizens Gas had no power to lease property because such power was not expressly conferred as it would be to argue that it had no power to acquire any property or hire any employees because no such powers were specifically conferred. The City's concession that the Lease was valid "until the property for which the Citizens Gas Company was Trustee was conveyed to the City" (I R. 145) necessarily involves the further concession that Citizens Gas had authority to take leases of property and that its powers were not limited to those specifically conferred by its Articles.

Clearly, Citizens Gas had all the power of any public utility to buy, lease, or construct the plant and system, or any part thereof, required to carry out its purposes, that is to furnish artificial gas to the City and all its inhabitants. Although Citizens Gas started out by purchasing the property of the Consumers' Gas Trust, there was no requirement in the Franchise or otherwise that it should acquire that particular property. Following that acquisition it purchased other property and mortgaged its plant from time to time in order to secure additional property or to extend its facilities or expand its plant (infra, p. 65). There is no reason why it was not as much within its power to lease the plant of Indianapolis Gas as it was to purchase the plant of the Consumers' Gas Trust.

In determining the extent of the charter powers of Citizens Gas, we are confronted with the question: What is the charter of an Indiana corporation? We find a most illuminating answer to this question by the Supreme Court of Indiana in Westport Stone Co. v. Thomas, 175 Ind. 319, 94 N. E. 406 (1911). In that case the Stone Company brought suit to condemn a right-of-way for a lateral railroad over the lands of the defendant. The defendant insisted that it would be ultra vires for the Stone Company to build and operate a railroad. The Stone Company was organized under the Indiana laws governing the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, as was Citizens Gas, and claimed the right to condemn the defendant's property under the provisions of the general statutes of Indiana authorizing the construction of lateral railroads and granting the power of eminent domain. It is important to observe that the authority upon which the Stone Company relied was not contained in the statutes providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and mining companies, but in the general laws dealing with lateral railroads. In disposing of the defendant's contention, the court said (p. 410):

> "It is next contended by appellee that, if appellant actually constructed said road and sought to exercise the powers of a common carrier, such acts would be ultra vires, since by its articles of incorporation it is organized only for the purpose of mining, quarrying, producing, manufacturing, and dealing in stone. It may be admitted that such are the powers of the corporation as shown by its articles of incorporation, and that a corporation can exercise no powers nor engage in any business not authorized by its charter. But it is well settled that the charter of a corporation formed under a general law consists of its articles of incorporation and the laws governing such corporation. Bent. Rec., v. Underdown, 156 Ind. 516, 519, 60 N. E. 307; State v. Anderson, 31 Ind. App. 34, 42, 67 N. E. 207; 1 Cook on Corporations, (6th Ed.) § 2; 1 Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 172. This being true sections 5398 et seq., Burns 1908, enter into and become a part of appellant's charter and confer upon it the right to construct and operate said railroad. Any other construction would nullify the effect of said statute."

Thus, the Supreme Court of Indiana held that the general statutes of Indiana, providing for the construction and operation of lateral railroads, became part of the charter of the Stone Company, although there was no authority to build or operate railroads contained in its articles and it is doubtful whether such authority could have been implied from its general purposes.

It is also well settled law in Indiana that the state legislature has the reserved power to add to or change the powers of Indiana corporations previously incorporated, and that it can make such changes by a general statute, without changing the corporation's articles of association themselves.

Denny v. Brady, 201 Ind. 59, 163 N. E. 489 at 490 (1928).

The Franchise provided that it should be assigned to an Indiana corporation and be carried out by that corporation (§ 1, I R. 82). Consequently it must have been contemplated that the corporation to be formed would have powers as extensive as those which were then or should thereafter be conferred upon public utility corporations of Indiana. Under the rule stated in Westport Stone Co. v. Thomas and in Denny v. Brady, § 95½ of the Public Service Commission Law became part of the charter of Citizens Gas as soon as it was enacted, and thereafter its charter powers included the express authority to enter into the Lease for its full term of 99 years.

(1) The possibility that the City would succeed Citizens Gas as trustee did not limit the right of Citizens Gas to make the Lease binding on the trust for the full term of the Lease.

The City concedes that the Lease in question was valid during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas (I R. 145). The mere change of trustees in 1935 did not make voidable the Lease recognized to be valid during the preceding 22 years. In other words, the possibility that the City would succeed Citizens Gas as trustee did not limit the authority of Citizens Gas to execute the Lease and bind the trust thereto for the full term of the Lease.

In this connection it is vital to remember that the term of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas was of very uncertain duration, although the trust itself was to be perpetual. The City was entitled to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee whenever the Citizens Gas certificate holders had received the face amount of their certificates and a 10% per annum return thereon in any one of five different ways: (1) payment by Citizens Gas itself (I R. 84, Par. (g)); (2) payment with the proceeds of a mortgage on the Citizens Gas property, after August 30, 1930 and upon demand by the City (I R. 84, Par. (i)); (3) payment by the City, after August 30, 1930 (I R. 93, § 22); (4) payment by the City, in case of the insolvency of Citizens Gas (I R. 93, § 23); and (5) by mortgage or by payment by the City, in the event Citizens Gas charged more than a stipulated rate for gas (I R. 88, § 14).

Obviously, none of these events was certain to occur. With the exception of event (1), all of them depended upon the City's exercise of its rights, and this was an uncertain matter because the exercise of those rights involved the raising of funds and the assumption of substantial obligations. Event (1) was particularly uncertain because it depended upon Citizens Gas earning enough to pay a 10% per annum return on its stock and also to retire all its stock. This might take place within a few years or it might never occur.

There was, therefore, no assurance that the City would ever succeed Citizens Gas as trustee. Citizens Gas necessarily proceeded on the assumption that it might be in business indefinitely and that it should do everything any other public utility would do to increase its capacity to serve the public and earn an adequate return for its certificate holders. On the other hand, there was no assurance that Citizens Gas would remain as trustee for any definite period, and its term of office might soon come to an end.

The powers conferred by the Franchise and Articles must be interpreted in the light of the indefinite term of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas. No one would deal with Citizens Gas if his contract with Citizens Gas were subject to an early end upon the termination of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas at an unknown date in the future. Citizens Gas could not, however, remain idle and wait for its successor to take action, for it could not tell when, if ever, the City would succeed to its position as trustee. Hence Citizens Gas necessarily had to have power to make contracts which would bind the trust in the hands of the successor trustee.

It is clear under the authorities that a trustee has power to make a contract or lease which may extend beyond his term of office and that the obligations so created will bind his successor in office.

City of Richmond v. Davis, 103 Ind. 449, 3 N. E. 130 (1885);

Greason v. Keteltas, 17 N. Y. 491, 494-5, 497 (1858).

This general rule that trustees have power to enter into agreements binding upon their successors in office is especially applicable here in view of the nature of the trust property, the perpetual duration of the trust, and the indefinite term of office of the initial trustee. It was clearly contemplated that Citizens Gas would enter into obligations which would carry over into the period of the City's trusteeship, and that when the City took over the trust property it would have to do so subject to all such obligations. Thus both the Franchise and the Articles provided that in certain events Citizens Gas should mortgage its property to pay off its certificate holders and should then convey its plant to the City "subject to such obligations and other legal obligations against said company" (I R. 85, 93, 99).

As a matter of fact, one of the first things Citizens Gas did was to acquire outright title to the property of another gas company. This necessarily involved the assumption of burdens such as taxes, insurance, maintenance, etc., which would continue indefinitely, unless Citizens Gas or the City disposed of the property. In 1912, in order to expand its business, Citizens Gas gave a mortgage upon its property which was not to mature until 1942, and from time to time additional bonds were issued under that mortgage (Stip. 16 (b), II R. 634; PX Dep. 10, II R. 607, Offered II R. 420, 564). Beyond that, from time to time Citizens Gas issued additional stock, either common or preferred, in order to extend its business or for other similar corporate purposes (PX Dep. 7, II R. 599, Offered II R. 420, 561); PX 90, III R. 879, Offered, II R. 356). Later on Citizens Gas entered into a lease for office space in the Majestic Building. This lease was still in force when the City took over the trust property, and yet the City took all of the Citizens Gas property, including the assignment of the Majestic Building lease (PX Stip. 56, III R. 835, Offered, II R. 327), thus recognizing the right of Citizens Gas to impose burdens of this character upon the trust estate.

If, in 1913, Citizens Gas had bought the Indianapolis Gas property outright and either given a purchase money mortgage or mortgaged all of its property, or had issued additional stock to pay the purchase price, the City would apparently admit the validity of such a transaction and would pay the mortgage bonds or the stock, as it has paid off the bonds and stock of Citizens Gas. As a matter of fact, it was a far more advantageous arrangement from the public point of view and from the point of view of the Citizens Gas stockholders to make the Lease in question than it would have been to issue Citizens Gas stock in a sufficient amount to pay for the Indianapolis Gas property. The major part of the investment in the Indianapolis Gas property (the Bonds) has received a return of only 5% during the period since 1913, and the maximum return (on the stock) has been 6%, whereas the issuance of Citizens Gas stock for the purpose of buying the property outright would have required an annual dividend rate of 10%, in accordance with the terms of its Articles and Franchise. Since there is no dispute as to the right of Citizens Gas to acquire the title in fee to real estate or the absolute title to other property, all of which entails the assumption of burdens and obligations which may extend beyond the actual trusteeship of Citizens Gas, it must be clear that Citizens Gas also had authority, subject to the approval of the Public Service Commission, to enter into leases which might extend beyond the term of its trusteeship.

(c) The Express Statutory Power of Citizens Gas to Effect a Merger by Making the Lease For 99 Years Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising From the Public Charitable Trust.

Citizens Gas had ample authority under its Articles and its Franchise to make the Lease, but even if we assume that the public charitable trust involved some limitation of the authority of Citizens Gas in this respect, its power as a public utility to effect a merger by making such a Lease (conferred by §95½ of the Public Service Commission Law of 1913, supra, p. 57) would override any such limitation.

The power of the state of Indiana over Citizens Gas as a public utility transcended the rights of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust. This principle was conclusively established by the Williams case. The plaintiff in that case challenged the validity of the act of Citizens Gas in surrendering its Franchise and accepting an indeterminate permit from the state. This attack was unsuccessful. The Supreme Court of Indiana pointed out that the action taken by Citizens Gas was authorized by the Public Service Commission Law (§§ 100, 101, quoted in Appendix A, pp. 145-6 below). The court then said (188 N. E. 215):

> "* * * Granting the existence of a trust relationship between the Citizens' Gas Company and a class of persons of which appellant is representative, that relationship cannot qualify the power of control of the state over the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility; nor can it limit the power of the Citizens' Gas Company to voluntarily relinquish any contractual or franchise privilege which a public utility may relinquish under the law; nor can any beneficial interest of appellant and members of his class in the property or business of the Citizens' Gas Company preclude the state from exercising all control over the affairs of the Citizens' Gas Company which the state has the power to exercise by reason of the fact that the Citizens' Gas Company is a public utility. In short, the class of beneficiaries of which appellant is a member hold whatever interest they may have in the Citizens' Gas Company subject to the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility."

The rights of the City as trustee of this public charitable trust can rise no higher than the rights of the beneficiaries whom it represents. When the Indiana Supreme Court held that the rights of those beneficiaries were "subject to the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility," it necessarily held that this power was predominant over the rights of the City.

This principle established in the Williams case is, of course, binding upon the federal courts, and, as a matter of fact, the federal courts have approved and followed it. For example, Todd v. Citizens' Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855 (see pp. 13-14 above) presented the issue whether the surrender of the Citizens Gas Franchise completely terminated the public charitable trust. On that subject the Court of Appeals said (p. 868):

> "We are not dealing with the question of the power which the state might have exercised with respect to vested property rights created in the public interest as an inducement to the grant, if it had seen fit to do so. The supreme authority of the state over both proprietary and governmental functions of its agency, the municipality, is not to be gainsaid."

We are now dealing with the power which the state has in fact exercised by authorizing the making of the Lease. The supreme authority of the state of Indiana over the activities of Citizens Gas and the City in conducting the business of a public utility "is not to be gainsaid."

Section 95½ of the Public Service Commission Law (quoted above, p. 57) was a grant of authority from the state authorizing competing utilities to merge or make leases, but a competing utility could be leased only "at a price and on terms fixed by the commission." Thus the Commission was clothed by the state with power to determine when, at what price, and upon what terms public utilities could merge or make long term leases. As the court said in the Williams case, speaking of the Lease here in question (188 N. E. 216):

> "* * * Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it."

Hence the Commission's approval of the Lease was, in the language of the Williams case, an exercise of "the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility." This exercise of the state's supreme power gave Citizens Gas authority to execute the Lease, without regard to any limitations (in fact there were none) arising from the public charitable trust.

(d) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

After all, the question whether Citizens Gas had power to execute the Lease and make it binding on the public charitable trust for the full term of the Lease was conclusively determined in the Williams case (see pp. 14-16 above) and is no longer open to discussion. In his complaint Williams alleged that the Lease (II R. 790):

> "* * * was ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company, its officers and representatives, and is unlawful and should be determined and adjudged in this suit to be, and to have been ab initio, void and said pretended lease should herein be determined and adjudged to constitute an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Public Charitable Trust and should be removed by the proper decree of this court in this suit."

The Indiana Supreme Court sustained the validity of the Lease and refused to remove this alleged "unlawful cloud upon the title of said Public Charitable Trust." Thus, the court said (188 N. E. 215-16):

> "[7, 8] In respect to the alleged invalidity of the lease executed between the Citizens' Gas Company and the Indianapolis Gas Company, it appears from the complaint that the lease was one which the Citizens' Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had the power to execute and one which would result in great advantage to the Citizens' Gas Company, > * * * Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the commission in approving the same."

Even if this decision were not binding on all parties to this litigation as res judicata (as we shall see, p. 75 below, there can be no doubt that this decision is res judicata), this decision is an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana and is a binding precedent in all federal courts.

(e) The Practical Construction of the Franchise and Articles by the City and Citizens Gas Shows That Those Instruments Gave Citizens Gas Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

We have seen that the City was duly represented in the proceedings before the Public Service Commission at which the Lease was approved, that the Lease was executed "with the full consent and approval of the City," and that in the Fishback case the City formally denied all of Fishback's allegations attacking the validity of the Lease, which denial was maintained from 1913 to 1921, when the case was finally disposed of and the City dismissed as a party defendant (supra, pp. 8-10, 13). Likewise, both the City and Citizens Gas resisted the attack on the Lease in the Williams case (supra, p. 14). As late as June 2, 1931, after (Stip. 13(j), II R. 630) the Todd case had established the City's right to have Citizens Gas comply with its demand for a transfer of all the trust property (supra, pp. 12-14), the City, Citizens Gas, and others joined in a motion to strike large portions of Williams' complaint (Stip. 14(b), II R. 631; PX Stip. 37, II R. 804, Offered, II R. 328). This motion asserted (II R. 807):

> "Third. It appearing that the lease so approved by the Public Service Commission has been in full force and effect for nearly 17 years and that many millions of dollars have been expended in reliance upon its validity, all persons including plaintiffs (if they have any standing under any circumstances) are estopped to question the validity of the same."

Concerning the allegations that the Lease was part of a conspiracy to destroy the trust, the motion said (II R. 808):

> "Second. The lease of the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company having been validly made, the actions of any individuals leading up to such lease are wholly immaterial."

We have discussed elsewhere (supra, pp. 10-11, 16-20; infra, pp. 104-6, 120-9) the sale of the City's Revenue Bonds in 1935 and some of the other acts and representations which estop both the City and Citizens Gas from denying that the Lease is valid and enforceable for its full term. Thus, during a period of over 22 years (May, 1913 to July, 1935) both Citizens Gas and the City insisted, before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, in the Williams case, and in many other ways, that the Lease was a valid and binding Lease for 99 years. This conduct constitutes a practical construction of the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas and the related documents having to do with the public charitable trust. The parties to the trust instruments have themselves, for a period of more than 22 years, interpreted those instruments as conferring authority on Citizens Gas to execute the Lease and make it binding for its full term.

The familiar rule that the practical construction of a contract by the parties thereto is of great, if not controlling, importance in ascertaining the proper interpretation of the contract is well established in the State of Indiana. Thus, in City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573 (1892), supra, page 58, the Indiana Supreme Court said (p. 576):

> "* * * That it is the duty of a court, where the language of a contract is indefinite or ambiguous, to adopt the construction and practical interpretation which the parties themselves have put upon the contract, and to enforce that construction, has been so often asserted by this and other courts that no doubt of its soundness can be entertained."

Vandalia R. R. Co. v. Terre Haute Vitrified Brick Co., 183 Ind. 551, 108 N. E. 953, 955 (1915).

The statement of the Indiana Supreme Court in the City of Vincennes case, quoted above, is directly applicable here. The Franchise contract between the City and Citizens Gas is "indefinite" as to the powers of Citizens Gas. It is, therefore, the duty of the court "to adopt the construction and practical interpretation which the parties themselves have put upon the contract, and to enforce that construction."

This well established rule that the practical construction of an instrument by the parties thereto has great, if not controlling, influence is so familiar as to require no further discussion. This rule is, of course, applicable to various kinds of written instruments and, in particular, to trust instruments.

In re Leupp, 108 N. J. Eq. 49; 153 Atl. 842, 845 (1931).

In Lowrey v. Hawaii, just cited, this Court said (pp. 222-3):

"* * * In Brooklyn Life Insurance Co. v. Dutcher, 95 U. S. 269, it was said: 'There is no surer way to find out what parties meant than to see what they have done.' So obvious and potent a principle hardly needs the repetition it has received.

"* * * We hence see that not only the immediate practice of the government construed the agreement as contended for by appellants, but the practice of over fifty years proclaimed the same meaning—proclaimed it without question and against a suggestion and agitation to reject it. It is somewhat staggering to be told that such continuity of practice is not a legal interpreter of the meaning of the parties and that the only criterion can be a precise and isolated form of words which, at the end of half a century of contrary admission and declaration, one of the parties finds it convenient to bring forward.

"It is no defense that the government's policy has changed. It cannot so release itself from its engagements."

This Court's quotation from the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company case, "There is no surer way to find out what parties meant than to see what they have done," is peculiarly applicable here. Certainly there is no surer way of ascertaining what the parties meant in the instruments having to do with the public charitable trust than to see what they did under those instruments. Their practices for a period of 22 years proclaimed that Citizens Gas had authority to enter into this 99-year Lease. When this authority was challenged by Fishback and later by Williams, both Citizens Gas and the City proclaimed this interpretation of the trust instruments—"proclaimed it without question and against a suggestion and agitation to reject it." The City's policy changed in the summer of 1935, but: "It is no defense that the government's policy has changed. It cannot so release itself from its engagements."

The significance of the uniform interpretation of the trust instruments as conferring power upon Citizens Gas to enter into the Lease is perhaps best revealed by paraphrasing this Court's rebuke of the government in the above case:

> It is somewhat staggering to be told that such continuity of practice for a period of 22 years is not a legal interpreter of the meaning of the parties and that the only criterion can be whether the trust instruments conferred specific power to execute the Lease, a test which, at the end of 22 years of contrary admission and declaration, the City now finds it convenient to bring forward.

Citizens Gas had express statutory and charter power to enter into the Lease for its full term and this fact is borne out by the practical interpretation of the Articles and Franchise by Citizens Gas and the City for a period of 22 years.

IV. THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE AND ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE PUBLIC CHARITABLE TRUST HAVE BEEN CONCLUSIVELY ESTABLISHED BY THE JUDGMENT IN THE WILLIAMS CASE AND OTHER DECISIONS.

The decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals was based primarily on its own independent conclusion that the Lease is valid and binding. This decision is fully supported by the law and facts, without resorting to any prior adjudications. It is not clear whether the Court of Appeals relied on any prior decisions as being res judicata, as distinguished from being controlling statements of Indiana law.

but it is clear that the Court of Appeals would have been justified in holding that the validity and binding effect of the Lease on the public charitable trust had been conclusively established by the Williams case and other decisions. As the Court of Appeals said (IV R. 1300): "No amount of verbal magic resorted to by counsel for the City will avail to brush aside the barrier these cases present to him."

(a) The Judgment in the Williams Case Conclusively Determined that the Lease is Binding on the Public Charitable Trust, on Citizens Gas as Initial Trustee, and on the City as Successor Trustee.

We have already pointed out that all the parties to the case at bar were also parties to the Williams case and that the complaint in that case quoted in full the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas and its Lease from Indianapolis Gas (supra, pp. 14-16). In that case Williams sued as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, in behalf of the trust, and the original trustee (Citizens Gas) and the successor trustee (the City) were parties defendant (infra, pp. 84-5). As we have already shown (supra, pp. 15-16), this attack on the Lease was unsuccessful and the Indiana Supreme Court held that the trust could not be relieved from this alleged "unlawful cloud" on its title. Thus the court conclusively determined that the Lease is binding on the public charitable trust, on Citizens Gas as initial trustee, on the City as successor trustee and on the trust property, and this determination is res judicata as to all parties to this litigation.

None of the arguments by which the City seeks to avoid the decision in the Williams case is sound. We shall discuss those arguments briefly.

1. The City has raised no issues as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust which were not adjudicated in the Williams case.

In its attempt to escape from the decision in the Williams case the City asserts: "The issues in the Williams case were essentially different from the issues in this case" (Reply Br. 9). As a matter of fact, the City is attacking the binding effect of the Lease on the public charitable trust on the very same grounds as those relied on by Williams.

The only alleged new issues in this case to which the City refers are "The enforceability of the lease against the City and the right of the initial trustee (Citizens Gas) to bind the City to the terms of the lease" (Reply Br. 9). However, the fact is that these issues were squarely presented by Williams in his complaint.

Williams challenged "the right of the initial trustee (Citizens Gas) to bind the City to the terms of the lease." This right was challenged by allegations such as the following (II R. 780-1):

> "* * * that said pretended lease of October 1, 1913, * * * impairs the charter of said Citizens Gas Company and it impairs, also, the said contract of August 25, 1905, by and between the City of Indianapolis by and through its Board of Public Works, and Alfred F. Potts, Frank D. Stalnaker and Lorenz Schmidt, * * * wherein and whereby said Public Charitable Trust was created;" and allegations such as (II R. 790):

> "That the said pretended agreement of lease * * * was ultra vires said Citizens Gas Company, its officers and representatives, and is unlawful and should be determined and adjudged in this suit to be, and to have been ab initio, void and said pretended lease should herein be determined and adjudged to constitute an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Public Charitable Trust and should be removed by the proper decree of this court in this suit."

Williams attacked "the enforceability of the lease against the City" by his assertions that the City was then entitled to receive the trust property, free and clear from any obligations under the Lease. Thus, he alleged that (II R. 771):

> "* * * said trust is now entitled to have made the formal and final transfer, accordingly, of all the property and franchises of said Citizens Gas Company to said Municipal City of Indianapolis as the active trustee of said Public Charitable Trust for the use and benefit of the inhabitants and taxpayers of said city, among whom are these plaintiffs."

It should be noted here that when Williams filed his suit (March, 1930; Stip. 14(a), II R. 630) the City had already demanded the transfer of all the trust property (supra, p. 12). Also, Citizens Gas had expressly recognized the trust and had indicated its willingness to comply with the City's demand (PX Stip. 23, II R. 672, Offered, II R. 327), but the suit by Todd had prevented it from doing so (Stip. 13(a), II R. 628). Moreover, by the time the Williams case was heard the Todd case had been decided and the right of the City to take over the trust property had been established. (Stip. 13(j), 14(h), II R. 630, 632).

Williams contended, not only that the City was then entitled to receive the trust property, but also that the Lease would not be enforceable against the City after it had succeeded Citizens Gas as trustee. In this connection he alleged that the Lease and the other acts complained of constituted (II R. 772):

> "* * * an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee, * * *."

Williams also contended that a receiver should be appointed for Citizens Gas who should (II R. 795):

> "* * * pay all determined debts and thereupon deliver said Citizens Gas Company, clear and free from any obligation whatsoever, through the administrative agency > of this court in this suit, to said City of Indianapolis as trustee of said Public Charitable Trust, * * *."

In another connection the City asserts that "the question of the burdensomeness of the lease to the City was not in issue" in the Williams case (Reply Br., 10). Here, too, is a supposed new issue in the case at bar which was in fact fully presented in the Williams case. Williams' allegations as to the supposed burdensomeness of the Lease were fully as vigorous and far-reaching as any such allegations by the City in the case now before this Court. In Section (20) of his complaint (II R. 777-8) he alleged that a conspiracy had been formed "to destroy said Public Charitable Trust" and that the conspirators had accomplished certain things to their advantage which would be described in the succeeding sections of the complaint. He then described the making of the Lease as one of the accomplishments of the conspirators (II R. 779-80). He also tabulated the sums paid by Citizens Gas under the Lease and asserted (II R. 780):

> "That said payments with interest thereon in their aggregate are more than ten times the entire value of all the property of said Indianapolis Gas Company * * *."

It clearly appears that Williams was relying on the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease to the City as successor trustee. The theory advanced throughout the entire complaint was that Citizens Gas was through and that the City was then entitled to receive the trust property, without the alleged burdens of the Lease. As we have already noted, Williams contended that the Lease and the other acts described in his complaint constituted "an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee," and that the object of the suit was to remove such "unlawful cloud" (II R. 772).

It is, therefore, clear that "the question of the burdensomeness of the lease to the City," "the enforceability of the lease against the City" and "the right of the initial trustee (Citizens Gas) to bind the City to the terms of the lease" (Reply Br., 10) were in fact all put in issue in the Williams case. When the Indiana Supreme Court refused to remove this "unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee," that court conclusively determined these various questions adversely to the City's present contentions.

2. The judgment in the Williams case would be conclusive even if the City were relying on new grounds of attack.

We have just shown that the City has raised no issues as to the binding effect of the Lease upon it as successor trustee which were not adjudicated in the Williams case. Furthermore, even if the City were now attacking the Lease on different grounds than those presented in the Williams case, that fact would have no legal significance. Williams attacked the Lease in behalf of the public charitable trust and it was incumbent upon him, or upon the defendants who were present in the interests of the trust (both Citizens Gas and the City) to present in that case all the grounds for the alleged invalidity of the Lease. If the City thought that Williams was not making an effective attack on the Lease and was omitting proper grounds of attack which should have been urged upon the court, it had the opportunity to join in the attack and present any additional grounds it wished to present. This opportunity was, however, limited solely to the Williams case. The validity of the Lease was presented for determination and under well-settled rules of law that question had to be determined once and for all in that case. As a matter of fact, the City contended that the Lease was valid and binding and resisted Williams' attacks on its validity (supra, p. 15; infra, pp. 104, 119).

Under well-established rules of law, the defendants are precluded from asserting in this case any grounds for the alleged invalidity of the Lease which they might have asserted in the Williams case. For example, in Werlein v. New Orleans, 177 U. S. 390 (1900), the City of New Orleans sued to recover land which had been taken from it on execution. The defendant claimed through the purchaser at the execution sale and relied upon the adjudication in an earlier case in which the city had attempted to enjoin the execution sale. The city relied upon the fact that the property in question had been dedicated to public use as a public square and that this fact had not been relied upon in the earlier action. This Court admitted that the defense tendered by the city would be a valid one if there had been no prior adjudication, but held that the prior judgment was binding on the city.

In disposing of the contention that the city was presenting new facts or new grounds bearing upon the invalidity of the execution sale, this Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Peckham, said (p. 399):

> "The fact now alleged would have furnished in the chancery suit but another ground or reason upon which to base the claim of the city, that Klein had no right to sell the property under his writ. * * * and we think it was the duty of the city to set up in that suit and to prove any and all grounds that it had to support the allegation that Klein had no right to seize or sell the property."

The law in Indiana is in complete accord with these decisions by the United States Supreme Court.

Elwood v. Bogmer, 100 Ind. 504 (1884), was an action for partition in which the appellant, Vashti Elwood, by cross complaint claimed complete title to the property adversely to the other parties to the suit. The other parties alleged that one David Elwood had previously brought suit for partition of land which included the land in controversy, and that it was there decreed that David Elwood and the appellant each owned only a one-third interest in the land. (David's one-third interest was set off to him in the prior suit and he was not a party to the second suit.) The appellant urged that the prior suit was not res judicata because all the parties to the second suit had been defendants in the suit by David Elwood. The Indiana Supreme Court replied that it was incumbent upon the appellant to present her contentions by cross complaint in the first suit and ruled that the claims presented by her in the case then before it had been conclusively determined against her in the prior suit. Thus, the Court said (p. 509):

> "* * * Sixty years ago, in Fischli v. Fischli, 1 Blackf. 360, this court said: 'Whenever a matter is adjudicated, and finally determined by a competent tribunal, it is considered as forever at rest. This is the principle upon which the repose of society materially depends; and it therefore prevails, with a very few exceptions, throughout the civilized world. This principle not only embraces what actually was determined, but also extends to every other matter which the parties might have litigated in the case.' The doctrine of the case cited, upon the point now under consideration, is the recognized law of this State, and has been approved and followed, without doubt or question, in many of the more recent decisions of this court."

See also Griffin v. Hodshire, 119 Ind. 235, 21 N. E. 741, 743 (1889), and Cannon v. Castleman, 162 Ind. 6, 69 N. E. 455, 456 (1904).

Even if it should appear (as it does not) that the City relies on different grounds of attack on the validity of the Lease than were presented in the Williams case, such circumstance would have no legal significance.

3. The mere transfer of the trust property did not affect the conclusiveness of the decision in the Williams case.

The City's second proposition as to the binding effect of the Williams case is that "The Transfer to the City of the trust res on September 9, 1935, creates a situation which so alters the rights of the parties as to prevent a successful assertion of res adjudicata." (Reply Br. 10.) This argument ignores the well established principle that a transferee of property is bound by any judgment which affected the property in the hands of his transferor.

> Skelton v. Sharp, 161 Ind. 383; 67 N. E. 535, 536 (1903);
> Long v. Schowe, 181 Ind. 13; 103 N. E. 785, 787 (1914).

Also, as we have already pointed out (supra, pp. 76-9), the question of the enforceability of the Lease against the public charitable trust was put in issue in the Williams case, and the binding effect of the Lease on the trust was established by the decision in that case. The necessary effect of that decision—that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust—is that the Lease is binding on the trust property, whoever is trustee. Obviously, the judgment against Citizens Gas in the Williams case would be binding upon the City, as transferee of Citizens Gas and successor trustee, even if the City had not been a party to that case. The fact is, moreover, that the City was expressly made a party to the Williams case in its capacity as successor trustee of the public charitable trust (infra, p. 85).

The fact that the City had not yet become successor trustee at the time of the Williams case is wholly immaterial. That fact could not prevent the court from adjudging the Lease to be a binding obligation of the trust and the trust could not thereafter avoid that obligation merely by changing the trustee. Furthermore, when the Williams case was decided the City had already asserted its rights as successor trustee and had procured a judicial determination of its right to receive the trust property.

When in December, 1933 the Indiana Supreme Court held that the Lease was binding on the trust estate, it did not hold that it was binding only for a short period between its decision and the City's taking over of the trust property. Any such interpretation of its decision would completely disregard the surrounding circumstances and is in the teeth of the fact that the plaintiff in that case was seeking to have the Lease removed as "an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" (II R. 772). Williams was asking that the alleged cloud be removed, not for the few months remaining until the City should become trustee, but for all time. This relief would have been far more significant than a decree that the Lease either was or was not binding for the few months remaining while Citizens Gas still held the trust property. The binding effect of the Lease cannot be divided into various periods of time, as the City contends, and the decision in the Williams case necessarily means that the Lease is binding on the trust for its full term of 99 years.

Clearly the City's proposition that the decision in the Williams case is not conclusive because the City was not then the successor trustee and received title to and possession of the trust property at a later date is without substance.

4. Since Williams sued in behalf of the trust, the judgment binds the trust and any trustee thereof, although defendants presented no issues to the trustee and prospective successor trustee, their co-defendants.

The City's third proposition on the question of res judicata is that the decision in the Williams case is not conclusive here because the parties to this case were all co-defendants in the Williams case and presented no issues between themselves in that case (Reply Br. 11). This fact has no significance. Williams sued in behalf of the trust and for the purposes of the suit he replaced the trustee as the representative of the trust. It makes no difference, therefore, what issues, if any, were raised between the trustee itself (the City) and its co-defendants. The law is well settled that in a suit by a beneficiary of a trust in behalf of the trust, in which the trustee is made a defendant, the judgment binds the trust and any trustee thereof, without regard to the issues, if any, raised between the trustee and his co-defendants. The City has never cited any authority denying this well established rule.

The rule just stated fits the Williams case precisely. In the first place, Williams sued as a beneficiary of the trust. Thus, in describing themselves, the plaintiffs in the Williams case (originally there were two) said (II R. 762):

> "That the plaintiffs Allen G. Williams and Harold L. Bartholomew, each is an inhabitant and taxpayer of the City of Indianapolis in the State of Indiana, and as such bring this suit in the right and behalf, and for the use and benefit, of themselves and of all other inhabitants and taxpayers of said City, similarly situate, any of whom may join as plaintiffs herein."

And again (II R. 764):

> "That the plaintiffs are inhabitants and taxpayers of said City of Indianapolis and as such are cestuis que trustent of the Public Charitable Trust herein defined."

As a beneficiary, Williams was entitled to sue in behalf of the trust, the City itself, as Williams alleged (II R. 782-3), having neglected to take action. It is well established that a trustee represents the trust estate and in ordinary circumstances has the exclusive right to prosecute or defend actions affecting the rust. However, as stated in 4 Bogert on Trusts (§ 870, pp. 2533-4):

> "If the trustee cannot or will not enforce the cause of action running to him for the benefit of the cestui, a practical difficulty arises which compels the courts to vary their usual rules as to parties. * * * In the emergency the court permits a suit in equity by the cestui to enforce the cause of action running to the trustee, in which the third party and the trustee should be made parties defendant. The cestui is not enforcing his own cause of action, but is acting as a temporary representative of the trust in order to effect a recovery which will go to the trustee or his successor for the benefit of the cestui."

It is clear that Williams was in fact "acting as a temporary representative of the trust." Thus Williams alleged (II R. 770):

> "* * * That said Public Charitable Trust is of the nature of a corporation sole with its beneficiaries the real parties in interest and the equitable owners thereof, and it may be dealt with accordingly in this suit and this right in its behalf these plaintiffs herein now claim and they ask that their said claim be determined and adjudged by this court in this suit."

The court upheld Williams' right to appear for the trust, went into the merits of his claims, and decided the case against him on the merits.

Furthermore, the City was expressly made a party to the Williams case in its capacity as successor trustee. Williams alleged (II R. 763):

> "That the defendant City of Indianapolis is a municipal corporation and a city of the first class of the State of Indiana and it is, also, the trustee of said Public Charitable Trust hereinafter described and in each of these capacities it is made a party herein."

Thus the Williams case was a suit by a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, in behalf of the trust, in which the origina' trustee and the successor trustee were parties defendant, a: the decision in that case binds the trust and every trustee thereof.

In Corcoran v. Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co., 94 U. S. 741, this Court disposed of the very contention now advanced by the City. Corcoran was one of several trustees for the benefit of bondholders and was himself a large holder of the bonds. He filed this suit in behalf of all the bondholders to collect payment of interest due and unpaid for many years. This Court said that one of the two issues to be determined was whether the bondholders could recover interest on their overdue interest coupons from the dates of their respective maturities. On this issue the Canal Company, the mortgagor, relied on a prior suit brought by a bondholder, to which suit Corcoran and his co-trustees were parties defendant, as was the Canal Company itself.

In the prior suit the plaintiff therein (the State of Virginia) claimed interest on the coupons which it held, which were of the same class as those upon which Corcoran later sued. The court determined that although interest might be recovered on unpaid interest, such interest was not included in the lien of the mortgage (see 32 Md. 501, 547). In the Corcoran case this Court said that the prior suit decided the very point in controversy before it, and that this matter was therefore res judicata. Thus the Court said (pp. 744-5):

> "It is said that Corcoran and his co-trustees, the canal company, and the State of Maryland, were all defendants to that suit, and that as between them no issue was raised by the pleadings on this question, and no adversary proceedings were had.
> "The answer is, that in chancery suits, where parties are often made defendants because they will not join as plaintiffs, who are yet necessary parties, it has long been settled that adverse interests as between co-defendants may be passed upon and decided, and if the parties have had a hearing and an opportunity of asserting their rights, they are concluded by the decree as far as it affects rights presented to the court and passed upon by its decree. It is to be observed, also, that the very object of that suit was to determine the order of distribution of the net revenue of the canal company, and that the Corcoran trustees were made defendants for no other purpose than that they might be bound by that decree. And, lastly, as the decree did undoubtedly dispose of that question, its conclusiveness cannot now be assailed collaterally on a question of pleading, when it is clear that the issue was fairly made and was argued by Corcoran's counsel, as is shown by the third head of their brief, made a part of this record by stipulation."

The principles applicable to the present situation are the same principles which apply in stockholders' suits brought in the right of the corporation. Thus, in Dana v. Morgan, 232 Fed. 85 (C. C. A. 2nd 1916), a stockholder's action had first been brought in a state court to set aside a certain contract on the ground that it was ultra vires the corporation. The judgment in the first suit upheld the validity of the contract. Subsequently another stockholder brought a similar action in a federal court to set aside the same contract on the ground that it was procured by fraud. In holding the first judgment a bar to the second action, Judge Rogers said (p. 89):

"* * * And as in such suits the wrong to be redressed is the wrong done to the corporation and as the corporation is a necessary part [party] to the suit, it inevitably follows that there can be but one adjudication on the rights of the corporation. And it is undoubted law that the judgment in the state court is an estoppel and a finality not only as to all matters actually litigated in the suit but also as to all matters which were not but might have been presented to the court and passed upon therein."

The similarity between (1) the above suit by a stockholder to set aside the contract between his corporation and the third party defendant, and (2) the suit by Williams, as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, to set aside the Lease between the trustee of his trust and the third party defendant (Indianapolis Gas), is apparent. In the above case the court said that "there can be but one adjudication on the rights of the corporation." Likewise, in the instant case there can be but one adjudication on the rights of the trust.

Secor v. Singleton, 41 Fed. 725, 727-8 (C. C. Mo. 1890).

In this connection Elwood v. Beymer, 100 Ind. 504 (supra, p. 80), is of interest. The appellant in that case claimed that (p. 510) "the parties to this record were all defendants, and therefore not, as to each other, adversary parties in the former suit." However, the Indiana Supreme Court ruled that the issues sought to be raised were res adjudicata, saying (p. 510):

> "* * * It is none the less true, however, that the appellant might have filed her cross complaint in the former suit, and might then have litigated every matter which she seeks, by her cross complaint in this case, to litigate with the appellees."

In the Williams case the issues concerning the validity of the Lease were presented to Citizens Gas and the City, as well as to Indianapolis Gas and the Mortgage trustees, by the plaintiff Williams, not by the defendants, and they were all required to take their position with respect to those issues in that case. In fact, as we have seen (supra, p. 15), both the City and Citizens Gas took the position that the Lease was binding. They cannot now avoid the binding effect of the decision in that case merely because they were in agreement with their co-defendants therein and succeeded in procuring a decree adverse to the contentions presented by Williams in behalf of the trust.

5. The Williams case is an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust and, under the rule of Erie R. R. Co. v. Tompkins, is controlling in all federal courts.

Entirely aside from any questions of res judicata, it is clear that the decision in the Williams case conclusively settles the law of Indiana as to the very facts which are here presented to this Court. The Williams case has conclusively settled, as a matter of Indiana law which is controlling in the federal courts:

(1) That Williams was entitled to maintain his suit in behalf of the public charitable trust.

(2) That the trust and the interests of the beneficiaries therein are "subject to the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility" (supra, p. 66).

(3) That the action of the Public Service Commission in approving the Lease was a valid exercise of the state's power to control Citizens Gas as a public utility.

(4) That the Lease was within the powers of Citizens Gas.

(5) That the Lease was valid and binding on the trust, on Citizens Gas as initial trustee, and on the City as successor trustee.

(6) That proof of any allegations that the terms of the Lease are burdensome to the lessee would not affect the binding effect of the Lease on the trust and on the City as successor trustee.

We submit that the determination of these questions of Indiana law in the Williams case completely disposes of the contentions advanced by the City in the case at bar.

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission Conclusively Determined That the Lease Is in the Public Interest (Consequently in the Interest of the Trust Also) and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility.

As previously set forth (supra, pp. 6-8), the Lease was approved by the Public Service Commission after extended hearings and an attack on the validity of the Lease by one Fishback, both in the original proceedings and on his petition for a rehearing, in which attack Fishback set forth substantially all the objections to the Lease on which the City now relies. Then Fishback brought suit to set aside the order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease, in which he reiterated the objections which he had made before the Commission (supra, pp. 8-10). The Indiana courts refused to disturb the Commission's order and that order still remains in full force and effect. Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282; 138 N. E. 346; 139 N. E. 449.

The order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease (Bill, Exhibit D, I R. 116-22, Offered, II R. 327) is binding as to everyone and cannot be collaterally attacked.

> Public Service Commission v. Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 43; 137 N. E. 705, 707 (1922);
> Batesville Telephone Co. v. Public Service Commission of Indiana, 38 F. (2d) 511, 515 (1930).

In the first case cited the Indiana Supreme Court said (p. 707):

> "If the Commission had jurisdiction and kept within it, and its action was not vitiated by fraud, its deci> sion of all questions of fact as to the value of the properties, the sufficiency of the income to pay interest and dividends on the bonds and stocks authorized, the petitioner's qualifications as a purchaser, and all other questions which it was required to decide as preliminary to taking action in the matter, is conclusive upon the courts in a collateral action."

In the Williams case, speaking of the Lease here in question, the court said (188 N. E. 216):

> "* * * Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the commission in approving the same."

Plaintiff does not contend that the order of the Public Service Commission is conclusive as to all issues in this case. Plaintiff does contend, however, that the order is a conclusive determination of two matters of fundamental importance (1) that the Lease is in the public interest and consequently in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust, and (2) that the Lease is in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility.

The City admits the first of these contentions when it says that a decision by the Public Service Commission "is conclusive on the courts in a collateral action" and that the Commission determined whether the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest" (Reply Br. 8).

The other matters determined by the Commission upon which plaintiff relies—that the Lease was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility, and that Citizens Gas was such a public utility as the state statute authorized to enter into such a Lease—are of vital significance. These facts were among those which the Commission "was required to decide as preliminary to taking action in the matter" of the Lease, and which were, therefore, conclusively established by the Commission's order.

As previously pointed out (supra, p. 57), the express statutory authority for public utilities to make leases required that they be made "at a price and on terms fixed by the commission." The price and terms of the Lease were, therefore, expressly subjected to the Commission's control. When the Commission approved the price and terms of the Lease, the power of Citizens Gas, as a public utility, to enter into the Lease superseded any limitations (in fact, as we have seen, supra, pp. 58-66, there were none) which might have been involved in the existence of the public charitable trust. In other words, the Commission's order, plus the statute, are conclusive as to the power of Citizens Gas to enter into the Lease.

(c) The Fishback Case.

As we have seen (supra, pp. 8-10), in his effort to have the Lease declared void and of no effect, Fishback presented substantially every ground of attack now relied on by the City. The Indiana courts sustained the validity of the Lease and denied Fishback any relief. Plaintiff does not rely on this decision as a binding adjudication between it and the City, but it is a binding adjudication between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas.

The primary importance of this case lies in the conduct of both Citizens Gas and the City in upholding the validity of the Lease during the eight years that the Fishback case was pending (supra, pp. 9-10). This is compelling evidence in support of plaintiff's claims relating to laches, estoppel and practical construction by the parties (supra, p. 70; infra, pp. 120, 124, 129).

V. THE CITY HAD AMPLE AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT THE TRUST AND ITS OBLIGATIONS, INCLUDING THE OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE LEASE, AND TOOK THE NECESSARY ACTION TO EXERCISE THAT AUTHORITY.

The City asserts that (Pet. 13):

> "4. Sections 85 and 254 of the Acts of the Indiana General Assembly of 1905* expressly prohibit any such lease for more than 25 years and prohibit its execution without municipal sanction."

This assertion is the basis for the City's argument that in sustaining the validity of the Lease the Circuit Court of Appeals "refused to follow the Indiana decisions that a municipal corporation cannot be bound by a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes" (Pet. 16).

In the argument which follows we shall show that these statutes have no application to this case, that the City had ample authority to take over the public charitable trust and all its accompanying obligations, including those under the Lease, and that the City took the proper steps to exercise that authority.

(a) The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Accompanying Obligations, Including the Obligations Under the Lease.

The City appears to contend that the Lease is "a contract made in violation of the Indiana statutes" (Pet. 16). However, since the statutes on which the City relies deal solely with the powers and duties of municipal corporations, it is clear that the City's argument relates to some supposed prohibition against the City (the powers of Citizens Gas in respect of the Lease have already been fully argued, supra, pp. 56-74). Furthermore, we are not concerned with the question whether the City itself could have entered into the Lease, for it did not purport to do so.

---

* These sections are quoted in full in "Appendix B" to this brief, infra, p. 147.

Thus, the question presented here is whether the City had the power to take over the public charitable trust, subject to the obligations under the Lease.

The statutes on which the City's argument is based are part of the Cities and Towns Act of 1905 (Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905), but the argument fails to take into account the provisions of Section 53 of the same Act. Clause 6 of Section 53 expressly authorizes cities to accept public trusts and to agree to the conditions and terms accompanying them. The pertinent portion of that section has always read (Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, § 48-1407):

> "The common council of every city shall have power to enact ordinances for the following purposes: * * * Sixth. To receive gifts, donations, bequests and public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out."

The City itself relied on this very statute in the Todd case, in support of its right to receive the public trust involved in the case at bar. In that case the City correctly interpreted this statute, but gave it an interpretation which is directly contrary to the argument it is now advancing.

In the Todd case the plaintiff alleged that under Sections 93 and 249 of the Act of 1905 the City could not acquire the property of Citizens Gas without a popular vote of the electors (PX Stip. 30, II R. 677, 706-8; Offered, II R. 328). To this the City replied (PX Stip. 31, II R. 718, 737, Par. (1); Offered, II R. 328):

> "* * * These defendants admit that said Sections are now in force, but allege that they have no application whatever to the acquisition by the City of Indianapolis of the plant and property of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.
> "These defendants say that under the terms of Section 53 of the aforesaid Act of 1905 the Common Council of said City had power by ordinance to receive and accept public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind such City to carry them out, and said defendants further allege that independently of statutory authority said City had power to accept and execute public trusts."

The Court will observe that the City advanced substantially the same argument in the Todd case in support of its authority to take over the trust property as that on which we are relying. The City was clearly right in its argument that its trust powers are not subject to the limitations of the Act of 1905. The Circuit Court of Appeals adopted this argument and held that the City had authority to accept the public charitable trust here in question and that its power to do so was not subject to the limitations on its ordinary governmental powers. Todd v. Citizens' Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855, 865-6. While the sections of the Act of 1905 involved in the Todd case are not the same sections of that Act upon which the City now relies, the rule of law there urged by the City and adopted by the court—that the City's trust powers are not subject to the limitations upon its ordinary governmental powers—is equally applicable to all limitations of the Act of 1905.

There can be no doubt that the City, in taking over the trust property in 1935, was attempting to comply with and claim the advantages of clause 6 of Section 53 of the Act of 1905, as well as the legalizing acts of 1929. This is shown by the language of General Ordinance No. 82—1935, ratifying and approving the steps taken in the acquisition of the trust property. The first section of that ordinance closes with language which parallels very closely the language of clause 6 of Section 53 (quoted above, p. 94). Thus Section 1 of the ordinance concludes (DX 8, III R. 1018-19, Offered, II R. 429):

"* * * and that the public charitable trust in all such plant and property so delivered to and as accepted by said Board of Directors for Utilities be and is hereby received and accepted, and the City of Indianapolis hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompany- ing such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out."

In addition to the powers conferred by the Cities and Towns Act of 1905, it is clear that the City had the express power to take over the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease, in March, 1929, when it elected to accept the outstanding offer from Citizens Gas, and at all times thereafter. The validating acts of 1929,* prepared by counsel for the City for this very purpose (infra, pp. 101-3), leave no doubt on this question.

Section 3 of Chapter 77, Acts of 1929, conferred the following powers, among others, on the Board of Directors for Utilities of the City:

> "(7) To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any such lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom, and in event there be any outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered by any such lease so taken over under the provisions of which bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage, to do and perform all things necessary in order to secure the benefit of such mortgage provisions * * *."

In view of the provisions of the Lease here in question (I R. 58) and the provisions of the "outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered" by the Lease (I R. 28), under which provisions "bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage," there can be no doubt that this statute was prepared and its enactment secured for the purpose of setting at rest any doubt as to the power of the City to take over the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease.

* The pertinent portions of Chapter 77 of the Acts of 1929 and all of Chapter 78 of the Acts of 1929 are quoted in "Appendix C" to this brief, infra, p. 150. These chapters are frequently referred to as the "validating acts."

Likewise, in Section 1 of Chapter 78, Acts of 1929, the provisions of the Citizens Gas Articles of Incorporation giving the City the right to take over the Citizens Gas property were "legalized and declared to be valid and binding," and this section further provided:

> "Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, * * * and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property."

Thus it clearly appears that the acts of the City in taking over the Citizens Gas property subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas, including those under the Lease, were fully authorized. This exercise of the City's power to accept trusts was not subject to the limitations set forth in the statutes on which the City's present argument is based. In addition, the validating acts of 1929 gave the City express power to do these things, and in fact were prepared by the City's counsel for the very purpose of removing any doubt as to the City's powers in this respect (infra, pp. 101-3).

The City had full authority to accept the Citizens Gas property, subject to all the obligations under the Lease, and it took proper action to exercise that authority. The latter fact is important because of the City's frequent assertions to the contrary and because it reveals the futility of giving the City the opportunity it demands to present evidence on the "reserved issue" as to whether the City "had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome" (supra, pp. 50-51).

The City's frequently repeated assertion that "the lease had no municipal sanction of any kind" (Pet. 13, Par. 4; also pp. 7, 16, 31) is wholly immaterial if it refers to the execution of the Lease in 1913,* and is contrary to the facts if it refers to the City's acceptance of the Citizens Gas property subject to all the obligations under the Lease. As we shall now see, the proper representatives of the City took the necessary action to make the Lease binding on the City by (1) taking over all the trust property, including the leasehold, (2) accepting the assignment of the Lease and taking possession of the leased property, and (3) taking over all the property of Citizens Gas, subject to all its obligations, and executing an agreement indemnifying Citizens Gas against all its liabilities.

(b) The City's Acceptance of the Trust Property Included the Acceptance of the Leasehold Estate and the Obligations Under the Lease.

The City's acceptance of the public charitable trust here in question necessarily involved its acceptance of the leasehold estate. It could not select those parts of the trust estate which were most advantageous to hold and reject those parts which it deemed to be burdensome, particularly after the initial trustee had been in control of the trust property for a period of thirty years. The Circuit Court of Appeals was clearly right when it held that (IV R. 1296-7) "the City is a successor trustee and as such must accept or disclaim the entire res," and the City makes no complaint of that holding.

There can be no doubt that the City did in fact accept the entire trust res. Thus, the City expressly admits in the case at bar (I R. 243):

* As noted above (p. 13), the City admitted in the Cotter case that Citizens Gas "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis, entered into a contract whereby it leased from the Indianapolis Gas Company all its plants and property for a period of ninety-nine years" (III R. 859).

> "* * * that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company * * *."

It is also clear that the Court of Appeals correctly analyzed the situation in this case when it said (IV R. 1296):

> "* * * Therefore, if the lease in question is valid, two conclusions follow: (1) the subject-matter of the lease contract is an asset and becomes part of the trust res; (2) the lease obligation binds the trust and is not discharged by a mere substitution of trustees."

The City itself recognized the validity of the first of these two conclusions when it said in the Williams case "If the lease is valid the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust" (II R. 808, quoted more fully p. 104, infra). This fact is vitally significant in view of the further fact that in the case at bar the City concedes "for the purpose of this litigation" that the Lease was valid "until the property for which the Citizens Gas Company was Trustee was conveyed to the City" (I R. 145). During this twenty-two year period in which the City says that the Lease was valid it must have been a binding obligation of the trust estate, for, as the City admits, the operation of the leased property by Citizens Gas during this period "was as the Trustee of a Public Charitable Trust" (I R. 155, Par. 11). The conclusion inevitably follows that the Lease was a valid and binding obligation of the trust estate, that the leasehold was part of the trust res taken over by the City and that the mere change in trustees did not relieve the trust from the obligations under the Lease.

There is no controversy as to whether the City took over the public charitable trust and no doubt the City will not contend that it did not take the proper steps to receive the trust property from Citizens Gas. The record in this case clearly shows that the City did in fact take the proper steps to accept the entire trust estate, including the leasehold and its accompanying obligations. In March, 1929 the City gave notice that it was exercising its right to take over the trust property, and it is clear that at that time it elected to take all the trust property. Thus, on March 20, 1929, the Board of Public Works of the City of Indianapolis adopted a resolution (PX Stip. 22, II R. 670, Offered, II R. 327) which stated that the City (II R. 670):

> "* * * hereby asserts, claims and demands all rights, title, interests and ownership, of whatever nature or character granted, reserved, transferred or vested in and to said City in and to the gas plant, mains and property of said Citizens Gas Company * * *."

The resolution also stated (II R. 670-71):

> "* * * and demand be and is hereby made upon said Citizens Gas Company * * * that the plant, property and assets of said company be conveyed to said City of Indianapolis in accordance with the premises * * *."

The Board of Directors of Citizens Gas responded by a resolution acknowledging "the right of the City of Indianapolis to take over the property and assets of said Company" (PX Stip. 23, II R. 672, at 673, Offered, II R. 327). The Board of Trustees of Citizens Gas unanimously approved this resolution by the Board of Directors (Stip. 12(b), II R. 628). These acts by Citizens Gas are significant as showing its interpretation of the City's resolution demanding the transfer of the trust property. The Citizens Gas resolution was brought to the City's attention by the Todd case (filed April 30, 1929), if not before (II R. 692, § XV).

Thus the City elected to take over all the property of Citizens Gas and, having made that election, its "power to choose" was exhausted and there could be no withdrawal or change in the terms of the acceptance of the trust property.

Castle Creek Water Co. v. City of Aspen, 146 Fed. 8 (C. C. A. 8th, 1906); Slocum v. City of North Platte, 192 Fed. 252 (C. C. A. 8th, 1911).

In the first case cited the city had elected to exercise its right to purchase certain water works. The court held that the water works company was entitled to specific performance of the city's agreement to buy its property. Thus the court said (p. 10):

> "* * * The city had but one option. When it had exercised it, its power to choose was exhausted. An election once made estops the elector. He may not revoke his choice and select another alternative."

If there could be any doubt as to the interpretation of the City's resolution exercising its right to take over the trust property, any such doubt would be set at rest by the surrounding circumstances and the City's subsequent conduct in recognizing the Lease as a binding obligation on the trust for its full term and as part of the trust estate which it was requiring the initial trustee to convey to the City.

On March 11, 1929, just nine days before the adoption of the City's resolution demanding the transfer of the trust property, Chapters 77 and 78 of the Acts of 1929* became effective. As we have seen (supra, pp. 96-7), these statutes gave the City express authority to take over the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations, in connection with the taking over of the trust property. As to Chapter 78, the City admitted in its answer in the Todd case that (PX Stip. 31, II R. 718, at pp. 729-30, Offered, II R. 328, 333):

> "* * * said bill was prepared by the legal department and special counsel of the City of Indianapolis employed for the purpose of bringing about a transfer of the plant and property of the defendant Citizens

* The pertinent portions of Chapter 77 of the Acts of 1929 and all of Chapter 78 of the Acts of 1929 are quoted in "Appendix C" to this brief, infra, p. 150.

Gas Company of Indianapolis to the City of Indianapolis; that said bill was passed in the exact form prepared and submitted by said counsel for the defendant City without change or amendment of any kind or character, and that it was introduced in the House of Representatives of the General Assembly by members residing in the City of Indianapolis and elected from Marion County;"

Chapter 78 had an express provision authorizing the City to accept the leased property. Thus it provided:

> "Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, * * * and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property."

An examination of Chapter 77 shows that it was prepared in the same way and that it too was enacted for the purpose of authorizing the City to take over all the Citizens Gas property, including the Lease. Thus, Chapter 77 applies only to cities "having a population of not less than 300,000," and the City of Indianapolis is and was then the only city having such a population (Stip. 23, II R. 638). Moreover, paragraph 7 of Section 3 of that Chapter (quoted more fully p. 96, supra) expressly authorized the board of directors of any utility district:

> "To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfil the terms of any such lease, * * *."

and also authorized such board of directors to operate under any mortgage to which the leased property might be subject.

Thus, in the legislation prepared as a forerunner to the resolution of March 20, 1929, counsel for the City expressly provided for authority to take over, adopt and assume the performance of any lease held by Citizens Gas. Obviously, these provisions were inserted for the purpose of authorizing the City to take over and assume the obligations of the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas. This was an unmistakable indication of the City's intentions as expressed nine days later in its demand for the transfer of the trust property. It is evident that the City intended to take over all of the property of Citizens Gas, including the leasehold estate in the Indianapolis Gas property.

In June, 1929 the City filed its answer in the *Cotter case in which it admitted that Citizens Gas had leased the property of Indianapolis Gas "for a period of ninety-nine years" and "with the full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis" (PX 89, III R. 859; quoted more fully supra, p. 13). The City also recognized the Lease as part of the Citizens Gas property by its answer in the Todd case. Thus, it admitted (II R. 719) the following allegation in subdivision IV of the Todd complaint (II R. 680):

> "* * * Defendant Company [Citizens Gas] also is the owner of a certain leasehold estate in and to the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company, as created by a certain contract of lease dated September 30, 1913, and recorded in Miscellaneous Record 78, pages 257-278, inclusive, of the records in the Recorder's office of Marion County, State of Indiana."

The City also recognized the Lease as part of the trust property by joining in the stipulation filed in the Todd case (PX 139, III R. 941, 943; quoted supra, p. 14). It is plain that no such admissions as these would have been made if the City had intended in 1929 to take only part of the Citizens Gas property and to reject the Indianapolis Gas Lease.

Again, in the Williams case, in June, 1931 the City joined with Citizens Gas and a number of the individual defendants (officials of Citizens Gas or the City) in a motion to strike parts of the complaint (Stip. 14(b), II R. 631). In moving to strike certain portions of the complaint directed against the Lease, the City and these other defendants said (PX Stip. 37, II R. 804, at 808, Offered, II R. 328):

> "Second. The lease of the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company to the Citizens Gas Company having been validly made, the actions of any individuals leading up to such lease are wholly immaterial.
> "Third. The validity of the public charitable trust set up in the complaint is in no wise affected by the validity of such lease. If the lease is valid the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as property owned by the Citizens Gas Company in its own right. If for any reason the lease is invalid, it would fall without the scope of the trust."

These evidences of the City's consistent construction of its election in March, 1929 to take over the leasehold estate together with the other property and assets of Citizens Gas are of great significance. The City consistently adhered to this construction of its election during the entire period from the preparation of the validating acts in 1929 down to July, 1935, after the City's sale of its Revenue Bonds.

In its resolution offering the Revenue Bonds (quoted pp. 16-17, supra), the City's Board of Directors for Utilities described the property to be acquired with the proceeds of the bonds as that "owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and or in which it has an interest," and also as "the property operated by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis." The form of bond, which was included in the resolution, stated that payment would be secured "by a charge upon all the revenue from the operation of all of the gas system owned and or operated by the City of Indianapolis." When the City referred to the property owned by Citizens Gas Company "and/or in which it has an interest," to "the property operated by Citizens Gas," and to the revenue from the operation of "the gas system owned and/or operated by the City," there can be no doubt that it was describing the entire property of Citizens Gas, including that under lease from Indianapolis Gas.

In the prospectus which it issued to prospective bidders for its Revenue Bonds the City said that "the system operated by Citizens Gas Company * * * is in part owned by Citizens Gas Company and in part is leased by it from Indianapolis Gas Company * * * The lease is for a term of 99 years from October 1, 1913 * * *" (quoted supra, pp. 17-18). The prospectus described the leased property and summarized the terms of the Lease and the amounts paid thereunder (II R. 535-6), information which would not have been included if the Indianapolis Gas property were not to be taken over by the City under the Lease. The prospectus also contained this significant statement (II R. 536):

> "The covenants of the lease are for the parties, their successors and assigns."

Thus, the Court of Appeals was clearly correct when it said (IV R. 1291):

> "The unescapable impression, however, from reading the context of the prospectus is that the leased property was treated as being a part of the utility property subject to the trust."

The advertising circular for the Revenue Bonds, approved by the City's counsel, and the brokers' advertisements printed in 45 different newspapers contained the same representations as to the property to be taken over by the City as those in the resolution and the prospectus (see pp. 18-19, supra).

In the prospectus, in the resolution authorizing the issuance of the Revenue Bonds, in the form of the bonds itself, in the Halsey-Stuart circular approved by counsel for the City, and in the newspaper advertisements there were repeated representations that the gas system to be taken over included the property of Indianapolis Gas. Now it is inconceivable that the City of Indianapolis, the members of its Board of Directors for Utilities, and its distinguished counsel were attempting to perpetrate a fraud, either upon Halsey, Stuart & Company or upon the members of the public to whom the bonds were to be sold. The conclusion is inevitable that those representations were made because as late as July 1, 1935, the date of the advertising circular, the City, the Board of Directors for Utilities, and its counsel fully expected to take over the leased property as part of the Citizens Gas system. This conclusion is further supported by the fact that on July 23, 1935 counsel for the City wrote to Indianapolis Gas notifying it that the City would "early in September, take over the property which has been operated by Citizens Gas Company" (PX Stip. 58, III R. 836, Offered, II R. 329).

Thus we have at least two official acts of the City of Indianapolis by which it became liable for the obligations under the Lease: (1) The first official act was the resolution of the Board of Public Works demanding the transfer of all the trust property, including the Lease. During the period from the preparation of the validating acts early in 1929 down to July, 1935 there were many official acts (supra, pp. 101-5) by which the City construed this resolution of March 20, 1929 as an election to take the entire trust estate, including the Lease. (2) Another vitally significant official act was that of the Board of Directors for Utilities in September, 1935 in carrying out the resolution of March 20, 1929, by accepting the transfer of all the trust property (II R. 467-8; Stip. 17, II R. 635). This act necessarily included the acceptance of the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations (see pp. 98-9, supra).

We shall now discuss another official act by which the City became liable for the obligations under the Lease, namely, the act of the Board of Directors for Utilities in accepting the assignment of the Lease, having it recorded and taking possession of the leased property.

(c) The City Accepted the Assignment of the Lease, Took Possession of the Leased Property and is Liable by Privity of Estate For the Obligations Under the Lease.

On September 9, 1935, at a meeting of the City's Board of Directors for Utilities, the Board received an assignment of the Lease here in question (Bill, Exhibit F, I R. 127, Offered, II R. 327), sent it to the recorder's office, and had it recorded (II R. 330, 467-8). At the same time the Board took possession of the leased property and has operated it ever since as an integral part of the Citizens Gas system (II R. 350; Stip. 6(c), II R. 622). These facts clearly establish that the City is the assignee of the Lease.

The City's contention that it rejected the assignment of the Lease (Pet. 9) is based on the single fact that when it received the assignment, had it recorded and took over the leased property, it also adopted an ex parte resolution saying that it rejected the assignment. The significance of this ex parte resolution, as contrasted with the affirmative acts taken by the City to accept the Lease, must be judged in the light of the maxim that "actions speak louder than words."

There are many analogous situations in the law where the courts have refused to allow parties to adopt one course by their actions and deny the adoption of such course by some declaration simultaneously made. An example may be found in the law as to accord and satisfaction. It is clear that, when there is a bona fide dispute between a creditor and a debtor as to an unliquidated claim, the acceptance by the creditor of a check designated as payment in full will amount to a full satisfaction, no matter what he says as to his intention in accepting such check.

Neubacher v. Perry, 57 Ind. App. 362; 103 N. E. 805 (1914);

Neher v. Kerr, 70 Ind. App. 363; 123 N. E. 467 (1919);

Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 1034 (1893);

Seeds, Grain & Hay Co. v. Conger, 83 O. S. 169; 93 N. E. 892 (1910).

An attempt by an assignee of a lease to do one thing and say another was presented to the Supreme Court of Illinois in a case which is in that respect strikingly similar to the one at bar. In Leiter v. Pike, 127 Ill. 287; 20 N. E. 23 (1889), a lease had been made for 20 years with an option in the lessee to renew for a further period of 20 years at a rental equal to 6% of the appraised value. The assignee of the lease, Pike, notified the assignee of the lessor, Leiter, that he exercised his right to renew the lease. Leiter replied that the city had condemned part of the property but that Pike could renew as to the remainder of the property if he cared to do so. Appraisers were appointed who appraised the remainder of the property at $300,000.

After negotiations as to the terms of the new lease, Leiter forwarded a lease to Cherry (who was acting for Pike). Cherry retained this lease, made a copy thereof, signed it, and returned it to Leiter with a letter in which he said (pp. 25-6):

> "* * * Now, therefore, I give you notice that I accept the lease signed by you, * * *; and I further give you notice that in accepting such lease I do not agree to pay the sum of eighteen thousand dollars ($18,000) per annum, being six (6) per cent. interest on the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, but shall claim that I am entitled to an abatement therefrom of the fair rental value of the west twenty-seven (27) feet of said lots as described in the original lease."

In holding that this was a valid acceptance of the lease by Pike the appellate court said, in language quoted and approved by the Supreme Court (p. 29):

> "* * * His most solemn and deliberate acts evince an acceptance; his words are said to be inconsistent therewith. But saith my Lord COKE: 'When the words are contrarie to the act which is the deliverie, the words are of none effect, non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur.' 1 Co. Litt. 36, A. And in Leake on Contracts, at page 13, it is said: 'In judging of intention from a person's words and conduct, where his acts are inconsistent with his words, the former are, in general, accepted as a more reliable guide to the intention than the latter; and the conduct may in some cases determine the intention, even in opposition to the words.' Under this rule, which is based on sound reason, it is very clear that Cherry's conduct proves an acceptance of the lease by him, even allowing that the words of his letter to Leiter indicate a contrary intent."

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the appellate court, holding that Cherry had accepted the new lease and that the parties were bound by such acceptance. As to the effect of Cherry's retention of the lease and his simultaneous declaration that he would not agree to pay the rent fixed by the terms thereof, the Supreme Court said (p. 32):

> "* * * The case, then, is precisely as if A., on executing and delivering his bond to B., whereby he obligates himself to pay B. $1,000 at a day named, were to say, 'I shall not consider myself bound to pay you $1,000.' It is the doing of one thing to which the law attaches a particular effect, and declaring that he intends directly the reverse, or something which is in legal effect materially different. That in such case the accompanying declaration is of no legal effect whatever is well settled."

The Court will observe the close parallel between Cherry's attempt to keep the lease and repudiate its obligations and the attempt by the City in the present case to repudiate its obligation under the assignment of the Lease, although accepting the assignment, recording it, and taking possession of the property covered thereby. It must be clear that the City's ex parte declarations in the resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors for Utilities can have no more effect than the ex parte declarations of Cherry to which the Supreme Court of Illinois referred. We submit, in the language of Lord Coke quoted by the Illinois court, "non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur," or, in other words, "not what is said, but what is done, is regarded."

The City's assertion (Pet. 9) that Indianapolis Gas consented to the City's taking possession of and operating the leased property is wholly unsupported by the record, except for the period subsequent to March 2, 1936. The earliest agreement of any sort between Indianapolis Gas and the City was contained in two letters exchanged between them on September 30, 1935 (DX Stip. 64, 65, III R. 968-9, Offered, II R. 384-5). These letters said nothing whatever about the taking possession of or the operation of the property. They merely referred to certain payments being made and to be made by the City to Indianapolis Gas and said (DX Stip. 64, III R. 968-9):

> "* * * We will make these payments without prejudice to our position or rights and you may accept the same without prejudice to your position or rights * * *."

Certainly, these letters, written three weeks after the City took possession of the leased property, cannot be tortured into a consent to the City's taking possession of the property three weeks earlier, or to the City's operation of the leased property, except in the capacity of an assignee of the Lease. On the contrary, since in these letters the City assured Indianapolis Gas that "you shall be at full liberty to assert, as we understand you do, that said lease is an obligation binding on the City of Indianapolis" (DX Stip. 64, III R. 968), they preserved the rights which had vested in Indianapolis Gas and its Bondholders on September 9, when the City accepted the assignment of the Lease and took possession of the leased property.

Thus, it plainly appears that the City had no right to take possession of the leased property on September 9, 1935, except as assignee of the Lease. The City, by accepting and recording the assignment of the Lease and taking possession of the leased property, made an ineluctable election to become an assignee of the Lease. Neither its ex parte resolutions and protestations nor the letters exchanged between the City and Indianapolis Gas three weeks later (which had nothing to say as to the effect of the City's acts on September 9) can relieve the City from the obligations which it incurred on September 9th, when it became an assignee of the Lease.

(d) The City Became Liable, as Successor Trustee, for All the Obligations of Citizens Gas, Including the Obligations Under the Lease.

Among the official acts of the City by which it accepted the trust property subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas and became liable for all those obligations in its capacity as successor trustee are:

(1) The City accepted instruments of transfer which provided that the property was transferred subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas, and the property remained subject to those obligations.

(2) The City executed an Indemnity Agreement (Bill, Exhibit J, II R. 306; Offered, II R. 327) by which it agreed to indemnify Citizens Gas against all liabilities, thus, in effect, agreeing to pay any liabilities which should be established against Citizens Gas.

(3) The City took all the Citizens Gas property and paid all the consideration to the stockholders and bondholders, leaving no assets for creditors, and thus became liable for all obligations of Citizens Gas.

We shall discuss each of these official acts briefly.

We have already noted the City's admission in this case (I R. 243):

> "* * * that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company * * *."

We have also referred to the City's concession that the Lease was valid "until the property for which the Citizens Gas Company was Trustee was conveyed to the City" (I R. 145). In addition, since Citizens Gas has not sought a review of the judgments of the Circuit Court of Appeals establishing the present binding effect of the Lease on Citizens Gas (IV R. 1307-8), the decision of the Court of Appeals that the Lease is binding on Citizens Gas for its full term has become final and conclusive. It necessarily follows that the obligations of the Lease were included when the City took all the Citizens Gas property "subject to ALL outstanding legal obligations of that Company."

Thus, one of the official acts by which the trust property was subjected to, or remained subject to, all the obligations of Citizens Gas was the act of the City's Board of Directors for Utilities, in meeting assembled, in accepting the instruments transferring the Citizens Gas property (II R. 467-8), all of which were made expressly subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas. The deed of the real estate (PX Stip. 55, III R. 833, Offered, II R. 327) recites that the conveyance is made subject to the mortgage to the Bankers Trust Company "and to all other existing liens, incumbrances and assessments of any nature whatsoever." The next paragraph, which follows immediately after the language just quoted, reads (III R. 834):

"This conveyance is made subject also to all other legal obligations of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis."

The assignment from Citizens Gas to the City of the lease on space in the Majestic Building contains substantially identical language (PX Stip. 56, III R. 835-6, Pars. 2 and 3, Offered, II R. 327). Since one paragraph in each of these two documents specifically provided that the conveyance was subject "to all other existing liens, incumbrances and assessments of any nature whatsoever," it is perfectly apparent that the next paragraph, providing that the conveyance was made subject "to all other legal obligations of the Citizens Gas Company," was not mere surplusage, but was intended to subject the property to ALL legal obligations of Citizens Gas.

Moreover, the instrument of transfer and assignment of personal property (Bill, Exhibit E, I R. 122, Offered, II R. 327) states (I R. 125):

"4. This transfer and assignment also are made subject to all other legal obligations of said Company, including the legal obligations of said Company, if any, under each of the leases hereinafter mentioned."

Section 5, which immediately follows the language just quoted, refers to the fact that separate instruments of assignment were being "executed and delivered contemporaneously with this instrument," assigning the 99-year Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas, and the lease on the space in the Majestic Building.

No one disputes that the City accepted the delivery of the deed to the real estate, the assignment of the Majestic Building lease and the instrument of transfer of the personal property and that the City also took over the property covered by those instruments of conveyance. In view of the language contained in those instruments of conveyance as quoted above, there can be no doubt that the transfer and assignment of the Citizens Gas property was made subject to all the legal obligations of Citizens Gas, including its obligations under the Lease.

It is clear under the law of Indiana, as elsewhere, that anyone who accepts a conveyance of property is bound by all the terms and conditions set forth in such conveyance, and no amount of protestations or reservations can avoid such terms and conditions, if the property covered by the conveyance is accepted.

Cudahy Packing Co. v. City of Omaha, 277 Fed. 49, 53 (C. C. A. 8th, 1921).

An official act by which the City in effect expressly assumed all the obligations of Citizens Gas was the act of its Board of Directors for Utilities in executing and delivering the Indemnity Agreement to Citizens Gas. On September 9, 1935, the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees of Citizens Gas each adopted resolutions authorizing the transfer of the property of Citizens Gas to the City. As a part of these resolutions each Board required that "prior to making delivery of the foregoing instruments [i.e., the instruments of conveyance] to the said City of Indianapolis, the said officers shall take and receive from the said City an indemnity agreement in the words and figures as follows, to wit: * * *." (Stip. 21(a), II R. 638; PX Stip. 86, 87, III R. 844-5, Offered, II R. 327.) Each resolution then set forth the terms of the indemnity agreement which was required. In pursuance of the requirements contained in these resolutions the City, acting by its Board of Directors for Utilities, executed and delivered to Citizens Gas an Indemnity Agreement, a copy of which is attached to the Bill as Exhibit J (Stip. 21 (b), II R. 638). That Indemnity Agreement reads in part (II R. 307, Offered, II R. 327):

> "Now, THEREFORE, in consideration of the premises and the conveyance, transfer and assignment as aforesaid, it is agreed by the City of Indianapolis, * * * that it will hereafter well and sufficiently save, defend, keep harmless and indemnify the said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its officers, Directors and Trustees, from any and all loss, damage, costs, charges, liability or expense on account of any pending actions or suits which have heretofore been instituted against said Company and on account of any actions or suits which may hereafter be brought against said Company, arising from any and all acts or actions or omissions to act on the part of said company of any nature whatsoever."

The Court will observe that the City expressly agreed to "save, defend, keep harmless and indemnify" Citizens Gas from all liability arising from any acts or omissions to act on the part of said company. There is a well settled distinction in the law between an agreement to indemnify against "loss or damage," on the one hand, and an agreement to indemnify against "liability" on the other. When the agreement is to indemnify against loss or damage, the liability of the indemnitor does not accrue until the indemnitee has actually had to pay the loss or damage in question. On the other hand, when the agreement is to indemnify against liability, the indemnitor becomes liable immediately upon the recovery of a judgment against the indemnitee.

Iroquois Underwriters v. State, 211 Ind. 463; 5 N. E. (2d) 908, 910 (1937);

Campbell v. Maryland Casualty Co., 52 Ind. App. 228; 97 N. E. 1026, 1028 (1912);

Ohio Casualty Insurance Co. v. Beckwith, 74 F. (2d) 75, 77 (C. C. A. 5th, 1935).

The Indemnity Agreement protected Citizens Gas against "any and all" liability, so that the City becomes liable at once upon the recovery of any judgment against Citizens Gas. It is also clear that the Indemnity Agreement covers the obligatioas of Citizens Gas under the Lease. The Agreement by its express terms covers "all acts or actions or omissions to act on the part of said company of any nature whatsoever." Obviously, these unlimited provisions covered the omission of Citizens Gas to fulfill its obligations under the Lease.

The City also became liable in equity for all the obligations of Citizens Gas as a consequence of its action in taking all the property of Citizens Gas and paying the entire consideration therefor to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas. The consideration for the transfer of the Citizens Gas property was given by the City directly to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas (Stip. 16, II R. 634-5), leaving Citizens Gas with no assets out of which to satisfy its obligations (Stip. 17(e), II R. 635). As a matter of law, the City thereby became responsible for all the liabilities of Citizens Gas.

Still another official act by which the City became subject to the obligations under the Lease is the act of the City Council in enacting "General Ordinance No. 82-1935" (DX 8, III R. 1017, Offered, II R. 429). By this Ordinance the Council formally ratified and approved all that the Board of Directors for Utilities had done in connection with the transfer of the trust property (III R. 1018). The Ordinance also stated that the public charitable trust (III R. 1019) "is hereby received and accepted, and the City of Indianapolis hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out."

Among the "conditions and terms accompanying such trust" which the City Council thus formally accepted and agreed to were:

> (1) The acceptance of the conveyances subject to ALL obligations of Citizens Gas.
>
> (2) The execution of the Indemnity Agreement.
> (3) The payment of all consideration for the property to the stockholders and bondholders of Citizens Gas, thus leaving no assets for creditors.

By this express acceptance of these "conditions and terms" the City Council necessarily agreed that the City as successor trustee was assuming the obligations of Citizens Gas and was accepting the trust property subject to all those obligations.

The various acts of the City's counsel, its Board of Public Works and its Board of Directors for Utilities, and this Ordinance leave no doubt that the proper municipal authorities have taken the requisite action to make the Lease binding on the City as successor trustee. Clearly, the City's statement that "no municipal authority having the power to do so ever authorized the execution of the lease, ratified it or agreed to be bound by its terms" (Pet. 7) is directly contrary to the facts established by the record.

VI. THE CONTINUED ACQUIESCENCE IN THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE BY CITIZENS GAS AND THE CITY FOR 22 YEARS, THEIR ACCEPTANCE OF THE BENEFITS UNDER THE LEASE, AND THEIR REPRESENTATIONS AS TO ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE TRUST PRECLUDE BOTH OF THEM FROM ATTACKING THE LEASE.

One of the grounds on which the City relied for the allowance of writs of certiorari was its assertion that the Court of Appeals "refused to follow the Indiana decisions set out below on estoppel of a City" (Pet. 15). The fact is that the Court of Appeals made no decision on the question of estoppel in pais. In both of its petitions for rehearing in that court the City admitted, as to the estoppel of the City, that "there is no express holding to that effect" (IV R. 1313, Par. 7; IV R. 1351, line 1). The Court of Appeals can hardly have disregarded the Indiana decisions on a question as to which it made no holding.

The Court will notice that the City has made no reference to the importance of the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City during the 22-year period from 1913 to 1935 as

(a) showing the practical construction of the Articles and Franchise of Citizens Gas;

(b) showing the practical construction of the City's exercise in 1929 of its rights under those instruments; and

(c) creating a situation which precludes Citizens Gas and the City from denying the validity of the Lease because of their laches.

It is apparent that City's counsel ignore these facts because the conclusion is inescapable that the City and Citizens Gas construed the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas as giving it the power to enter into the Lease for 99 years (supra, pp. 70-74) and construed the City's resolution of March 20, 1929 as an election to take all the Citizens Gas property, including the leasehold estate (supra, pp. 101-06).

Likewise, the City ignores the fact that for a period of 22 years Citizens Gas accepted the benefits of the Lease and the City and the beneficiaries of the trust had all the benefits derived from the operation of the leased property as an integral part of the trust property (infra, pp. 129-30). This fact and the further fact that the status quo cannot be restored are of vital importance with respect to the claim that the Lease was beyond the powers of Citizens Gas. Even if we suppose for the purposes of argument that the Lease was ultra vires Citizens Gas, the facts just referred to would preclude both the City and Citizens Gas from denying their liability under the Lease. It is well settled law in Indiana that a corporation which has had the benefits of a contract and which cannot restore the status quo cannot refuse to perform its part of the bargain on the ground that the contract was beyond its powers.

Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324, 21 N. E. 907, 909 (1889);

Huntington Brewing Co. v. McGrew, 64 Ind. App. 273, 112 N. E. 534, 536-7 (1916);

Frank Bird Transfer Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., 86 Ind. App. 259, 153 N. E. 816, 818-19 (1926).

The City was clearly right and correctly interpreted the Indiana decisions when, in its capacity as successor trustee, it said in the Williams case (PX Stip. 37, II R. 807, Offered, II R. 328):

> "Third. It appearing that the lease so approved by the Public Service Commission has been in full force and effect for nearly 17 years and that many millions of dollars have been expended in reliance upon its validity, all persons including plaintiffs (if they have any standing under any circumstances) are estopped to question the validity of the same."

This statement was even more applicable five years later, when the City first asserted that the Lease was not binding for its full term. The City's present contentions are directly contrary to those advanced by it in the Williams case. It was right in the Williams case; it is wrong now.

Although the Court of Appeals made no express holding on the question of estoppel, it would have been fully warranted in holding that both Citizens Gas and the City are estopped to deny that the Lease is valid for its full term. We shall first discuss the estoppel against Citizens Gas, which is equally binding upon the City.

(a) Citizens Gas is Estopped by its Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid for its Full Term.

It should be noted here that it is not essential to the City's liability that it be estopped by its own conduct or that it be precluded by the acceptance of benefits under the Lease, since it became liable for all the obligations of Citizens Gas (supra, pp. 111-17). The liabilities of Citizens Gas, predicated on its own laches or the estoppel against it, are among those liabilities to which the trust property is subject in the hands of the City. This same result follows as a matter of law from the fact that the City, as successor to Citizens Gas as trustee, is in privity with Citizens Gas and is, therefore, bound by any laches of or estoppel against Citizens Gas and by the adjudications to which Citizens Gas was a party.

Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Slaght, 205 U. S. 122, 128 (1907);

Bedon v. Davie, 144 U. S. 142 (1892);

Knerals v. Florida Central & P. R. Co., 66 Fed. 224, 233 (C. C. A. 5th, 1894); certiorari denied 159 U. S. 257;

Mull v. Orme, 67 Ind. 95, 98 (1879);

Roller v. Catlett, 118 Va. 185; 86 S. E. 909, 910 (1915).

Perhaps the most compelling reasons that estop Citizens Gas to deny the validity of the Lease for its full term arise from the various adjudications of the validity of the Lease in proceedings to which Citizens Gas was a party and in which it insisted upon the validity of the Lease. Before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, and in the Williams case Citizens Gas insisted that the Lease here in question was valid and that it had power and authority to make such a Lease. In each instance this contention was sustained. There are, however, other equally compelling reasons why Citizens Gas is estopped to deny that the Lease is valid for its full term of 99 years.

We have set forth above (pp. 10-11) some of the representations made by Citizens Gas through Blodget & Company in connection with the sale of Indianapolis Gas Bonds. Without duplicating those quotations we call the Court's attention to a few other instances in which Citizens Gas asserted that it had leased the Indianapolis Gas property for 99 years for a rental which included payment of the interest on the Bonds.

In 1916 the following representation was made through Blodget & Company (PX Dep. 9, II R. 694, Offered, II R. 420, 563):

> "* * * In October, 1913, with the consent of the Public Service Commission of Indiana, the Indianapolis Gas Company was leased to the Citizens Gas Company for 99 years, whereby the latter company controls the entire gas business of Indianapolis. As a part of the lease, the Citizens Gas Company guaranteed the interest on the Indianapolis Gas Company bonds, their refunding at maturity and 6% dividends on its $2,000,000 capital stock."

Beyond this, the excerpts from Poor's and Moody's Manuals (PX 95A-98A, 99-110, III R. 905-922, Offered, II R. 358-9) show a continuous representation during all the period from 1915 to 1935 that Citizens Gas had leased the property and business of Indianapolis Gas for 99 years, and that by the terms of the Lease Citizens Gas paid the interest on the Bonds. For example, Poor's Manual of Public Utilities for 1922 states (PX 96-A, III R. 907):

> "By the terms of the merger the Citizens Gas Co. leases the property of The Indianapolis Gas Co. for a period of 99 years and pays the interest on $4,833,000 Consolidated Mortgage bonds, and will pay the interest on such additional bonds as may be issued from time to time for extensions to the leased property. * * *"

Moody's Manual of Public Utilities for 1923 states (PX 98-A, III R. 912-13):

> "By the terms of the lease, the Citizens' Gas Co. leases the property of the Indianapolis Gas Co. for a period of 99 years and pays the interest on $4,833,000 Consolidated Mortgage bonds, and will pay the interest on such additional bonds as may be issued from time to time for extensions to the leased property. * * *"

A statement substantially identical with the one just quoted appeared in Moody's Manual each year from 1924 to 1934, inclusive (PX 99-109, III R. 915, Offered, II R. 359).

The various representations that the Lease was valid and binding for its full term were so widespread and so continuous over a period of more than 21 years that they must have come to the attention of any of the investing public who were at all interested. The public purchased Indianapolis Gas Bonds which were issued after the making of the Lease (Stip. 3 (e), II R. 619-20; 10 (a), II R. 627) and marketed upon representations that Citizens Gas had a 99 year Lease and had guaranteed the payment of interest and the refunding of the Bonds. There can be no doubt that the investing public was not only induced to buy but was induced to continue to hold the Bonds of Indianapolis Gas as a result of the representations made by Citizens Gas continuously over a period of more than 21 years.

Having sold the Indianapolis Gas Bonds on the representation that Citizens Gas had a 99 year Lease and would pay the interest on the Bonds during that period, and having made the same representation to the investing public through Poor's and Moody's Manuals over a period of more than 20 years, and having insisted, whenever the question arose in litigation, that the Lease was valid for its full term and binding on itself and the beneficiaries of the trust, it is clear that Citizens Gas is estopped from denying that the Lease is a binding obligation over the entire 99 year period of the Lease.

The City asserts (Pet. 12) that plaintiff did not prove that any Bondholders relied on the representations concerning the Lease. However, the rule is well established that where representations have been made in the course of a transaction, it is assumed in the absence of facts showing the contrary that the representations were relied on. In other words, the defendant bears the burden of showing that the representations were not relied upon.

Section 1515 of the recent edition of Williston on Contracts contains the following statement (5 Williston, p. 4229):

> "* * * Where representations have been made in regard to a material matter and action has been taken, in the absence of evidence showing the contrary, it will be presumed that the representations were relied on."

This statement is fully substantiated by the following authorities, among others:

Restatement of the Law of Contracts, Section 479;

Hicks v. Stevens, 121 Ill. 186; 11 N. E. 241, 243 (1887);

Wilson v. Carpenter's Administrator, 91 Va. 183; 21 S. E. 243, 245 (1895);

Anderson v. Donahue, 116 Minn. 380, 133 N. W. 975, 976 (1911);

Batson v. Alexander City Bank, 179 Ala. 490; 60 So. 313, 316 (1912);

Holbrook v. Burt, 22 Pick. 546, 552 (Mass. 1839).

The application of these authorities to the situation here before the Court is clear. Over a period of many years Citizens Gas in selling its Indianapolis Gas Bonds represented that it had a 99 year Lease on the mortgaged property and that it had guaranteed the payment of the interest and the refunding of the principal on the Bonds. It is difficult to imagine any representations which could have been more material in inducing prospective purchasers to buy these Bonds. Under these circumstances it was not incumbent upon plaintiff to produce any Bondholders to state expressly that they had relied on these representations. On the contrary, the burden was upon the City and Citizen Gas to show that these representations were not relied upon. No attempt has been made to sustain this burden.

(b) The City is Estopped by Its Own Conduct From Denying That the Lease is Valid for Its Full Term.

The City is estopped by its own conduct, as well as that of Citizens Gas, from denying that the Lease is valid for its full term. We have already discussed the City's conduct in the proceedings before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, in the Todd and Cotter cases, and in the Williams case (supra, pp. 6-16). We have also shown that from the time of the resolution of March 20, 1929 demanding the transfer of the trust property, until July, 1935, the City openly took the position that the Lease was valid and part of the trust estate and showed by its conduct that it was intending to take over the leasehold as part of the trust property (supra, pp. 101-06).

As stated above (p. 8), all defendants in the case at bar have admitted (I R. 137, 149, 223) the allegations in subdivision 8 of the Bill that (I R. 9-10):

> "In all of the proceedings before the Public Service Commission * * * the defendant, the City of Indianapolis, was duly served with notice to appear and through its duly appointed and authorized counsel did in fact appear and participate therein. No objection by petition to said Commission or otherwise was ever made by said City of Indianapolis either to the execution of said lease or to the orders made by said Commission, * * *."

With reference to the Fishback case plaintiff alleges in subdivision 9 of the Bill (I R. 11):

"Before said cause came on to be heard the defendant, the City of Indianapolis, through the Board of Public Works thereof had formally accepted and recognized said lease by requiring extensions to be made in the lines and mains of The Indianapolis Gas Company, as provided in subsection 6 of section 27½ of said lease, which provision had been inserted in said lease at the instance of the City of Indianapolis, * * *."

Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas admit this allegation in its entirety (I R. 137, 224). The City admits all the facts thus pleaded (I R. 151), but denies the inference that such facts amounted to an acceptance and recognition of the Lease (II R. 320-1). The fact that this admission by the City was deliberate and carefully considered is shown by the fact that this denial was first made by an amendment filed more than 2 years after the answer, at which time the original admission was no doubt closely scrutinized (II R. 320-21).

In its answer in the Cotter case, filed June 4, 1929, the City admitted that the Lease was made "with the full consent and approval of the City" (PX 89, III R. 847, at 859, Offered, II R. 334, III R. 1057). In this answer the City also admitted (III R. 860):

"* * * that since 1913 the Citizens Gas Company with full knowledge and consent of the City has operated the combined properties under the provisions specified by the Commission * * *."

(These admissions are quoted more fully at pages 13-14 above.) In other words, the City admitted that at that time Citizens Gas had operated under the Lease for nearly sixteen years "with full knowledge and consent of the City."

It therefore appears by the City's own admissions that it participated in the proceedings before the Public Service Commission, that the Lease was entered into "with the full consent and approval of the City"; that at least one provision "had been inserted in said lease at the instance of the City"; that the City soon required compliance with this provision; that the City never made any objection to the execution of the Lease; that it has never sought to prevent the order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease from being carried into effect; and that, on the contrary, "since 1913 the Citizens Gas Company with full knowledge and consent of the City has operated the combined properties under the provisions specified by the Commission * * *."

The City asserts that no Bondholder "relied on or was influenced by any acts of the City" (Pet. 29). Our answer to this same contention with respect to the estoppel against Citizens Gas (supra, pp. 123-4) is equally applicable here. Furthermore, the representations concerning the Lease were sufficiently important and widespread and continued over such a long period of time that the City owed the duty to speak if it had any intention to disavow those representations or to repudiate the Lease. The City could not blind its eyes to these representations as though it had no interest in the public charitable trust and the conduct of Citizens Gas in the management of its affairs. As prospective trustee and as the representative of the inhabitants of the City, the beneficiaries of the trust, the City was interested in the conduct of Citizens Gas and the obligations it incurred, particularly since the City might later become subject to those very same obligations. As we have seen, the City on numerous occasions did in fact state its position concerning the Lease and in each case, over a period of more than 22 years, it took the position that the Lease was a valid and binding obligation for its full term.

The only other argument by which the City seeks to avoid the estoppel against it is that the estoppel "cannot be founded upon acts done by municipal officers in excess of their authority" (Pet. 29). The acts of the municipal officers which estop the City to deny the validity of the Lease are in complete accord with the various official acts of the duly authorized representatives of the City by which the City incurred the obligations of the Lease (supra, pp. 98-117). Also, the City has never questioned the authority of any particular officer to do any of the acts upon which plaintiff's claim of estoppel is based, either in the case at bar, or, so far as we are advised, in any other case or at any other time. The City's only contention in this respect has been that the various acts in question were not authorized because they were prohibited by certain statutes. This contention has already been shown to be wholly devoid of any foundation (supra, pp. 93-8).

The case of Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Arkansas City, 76 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 8th, 1896) is of peculiar interest in connection with the City's efforts to avoid an estoppel. The trustee of a mortgage by a water company brought a suit to foreclose, in which it also sought to recover from the city on its liability to pay hydrant rentals. The District Court denied recovery against the city and the trustee appealed. The city had contracted for the erection of the water works, which contract included certain terms as to its payment of hydrant rentals. In 1887 the city council formally approved the water works plant, acknowledging that it had been properly finished and put in operation. Thereafter the money was loaned to the water company and the mortgage deed pledged the company's rights against the city under the contract to pay hydrant rentals. In 1891 the city attempted to repudiate the contract and claimed that the ordinance was invalid because it was to continue in effect for a period of 21 years and because it was not approved by the necessary majority of the council. In denying these arguments and holding that the city was estopped to deny its liability after bonds had been sold to the public in reliance upon the statements and representations of the city, Judge Sanborn, speaking for the court, said (p. 293):

> "There is another and a conclusive reason why this city cannot maintain any of the defenses it has interposed in this suit. It is that it cannot accept the benefits and repudiate the burdens of its contract. It is that it cannot be heard to deny the truth of the representations of the existence and of the execution of this contract, which its records and its conduct have constantly made, and in reliance upon which, the gas company and the water company constructed and extended the waterworks, and the bank and the bondholders loaned their money. No principle is more universal in the jurisprudence of civilized nations, no principle is more equitable in itself, or more salutary in its effects, than that no one may, to the damage of another, deny the truth of statements and representations by which he has purposely or carelessly induced that other to change his situation. * * *
> "In a business transaction like that of procuring the construction of waterworks and the use of water for itself and its inhabitants, a municipality is subject to this principle to the same extent as a private corporation. The same rules govern its business transactions that govern the negotiations of private individuals and corporations."

Language more closely applicable to the facts of the case here before the Court could hardly have been written if Judge Sanborn had had our precise situation before him. Over a period of 22 years both Citizens Gas and the City joined in insisting before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, in the Williams case, and in many other ways, that Citizens Gas had a 99-year Lease of the property of Indianapolis Gas and that the Lease was valid and binding for its full term.

We submit, to use Judge Sanborn's language, that neither the City nor Citizens Gas can "be heard to deny the truth of the representations of the existence and of the execution of this contract, which its records and its conduct have constantly made, and in reliance upon which * * * the bondholders loaned their money."

(c) The City is Precluded by Its Own Laches and the Laches of Citizens Gas From Denying That the Lease is Valid and Binding For Its Full Term.

The laches of Citizens Gas and the City which preclude the City from denying that the Lease is binding on the public charitable trust for its full term are demonstrated by the following facts:

1. Citizens Gas operated under the Lease for substantially 22 years, during all of which time Citizens Gas and the beneficiaries of the trust enjoyed all the benefits from the use of the leased property. These benefits included not only the income derived, but also the unquestioned public benefit flowing from the elimination of competition and the duplication of facilities. Upon the execution of the Lease Indianapolis Gas abandoned its operating personnel and ceased its efforts to expand its system. Citizens Gas has greatly improved its competitive situation as a result of the Lease and it has so unified the plants and systems of the two companies that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for Indianapolis Gas to resume independent operations at this time (II R. 349-50). This increasingly disadvantageous situation of Indianapolis Gas is of vital concern to the Bondholders, to whom Indianapolis Gas now owes more than $8,500,639, and is important to plaintiff as trustee of the security for that indebtedness.

It is impossible to estimate at this time the full extent of the benefits accruing to the public charitable trust from the elimination of competition, for it is impossible to say what extensions Indianapolis Gas might have made if it had been left free to expand and extend its operations. The facts affirmatively appear, however, that the competition of Indianapolis Gas was regarded as "dangerous to the company and the community" (supra, pp. 6-7); that Indianapolis Gas was in the course of building new by-product coke ovens when the Lease was executed (Lease, § 9, I R. 60-1; PX 91, III R. 886, at 894); and that the anticipated profits to Citizens Gas and the community from the proposed Lease were very substantial (PX 91, III R. 886, at 889-93, Offered II R. 342).

2. The loss of available evidence and witnesses is one of the well established grounds for invoking the defense of laches. The facts as they existed in 1913 are necessarily difficult if not impossible to establish at this time. This is borne out by the fact that even the pleadings before the Public Service Commission have disappeared and cannot be found (PX 88, III R. 846, Offered, II R. 331) and most, if not all, of the evidence submitted at that time is no longer available. Mr. Forrest, who acted as General Manager of Citizens Gas during all of this critical period, had died before the trial and was unavailable as a witness. His testimony alone would have been invaluable to the plaintiff. There is no reason to doubt that he would have substantiated on the witness stand the statements which he made to the stockholders of Citizens Gas (PX 91-94, III R. 886-904, Offered, II R. 342), to The Union Trust Company of Indianapolis (PX 90, III R. 879, Offered, II R. 356) and to Blodget & Company (PX Dep. 10, II R. 607, Offered, II R. 420, 564). The significance of these statements clearly appears from the representative excerpts therefrom quoted above (pp. 6-7).

3. The City was a party to proceedings in which the effect of the Lease on the public charitable trust was fully presented and in which it was incumbent on the City to speak if it had any intention of ever repudiating the Lease. This was the situation in the Public Service Commission proceedings and in the Fishback case, before the City demanded the transfer of the trust property. In March, 1929 the City notified Citizens Gas that it was exercising its right to take over the trust assets. From that time on the City had an even more direct and immediate interest in the question whether the Lease was binding on the trust. In March, 1930 Williams sued in behalf of the public charitable trust to remove the Lease as "an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" (II R. 772). In that suit, where the rights of the City itself as successor trustee were directly involved, the City asserted that the Lease was valid and that the question of its validity was foreclosed by the decision of the Public Service Commission and by the failure to raise the question over a period of 17 years (II R. 806-8).

From the time of the initial proceedings before the Public Service Commission, the City had numerous opportunities to speak and assert the supposed rights now set up, and in each instance the City either failed to speak or took the affirmative position that the Lease was valid and binding on the public charitable trust. Plainly, on each of these occasions, every consideration of justice required the City to speak or forever after hold its peace.

In Ryason v. Dunten, 164 Ind. 85; 73 N. E. 74 (1905), the Indiana Supreme Court quoted with approval the following statement of Mr. Justice Brewer* (p. 77):

> "'No doctrine is so wholesome, when wisely administered, as that of laches. It prevents the resurrection of stale titles, and forbids the spying out from the records of ancient and abandoned rights. It requires of every owner that he take care of his property, and of every claimant that he make known his claims. It gives to the actual and longer possessor security, and induces and justifies him in all efforts to improve and make valuable the property he holds. It is a doctrine received with favor, because its proper application works out justice and equity, and often bars the holder of a mere technical right, which he has abandoned for years, from enforcing it when its enforcement will work large injury to many.' "

The attempt of the City to attack the validity of the Lease after the lapse of 22 years during which it not only acquiesced in but insisted upon the Lease being held valid, presents a case in which, in the language of Chief Justice Fuller, "The hour-glass must supply the ravages of the scythe, and those who have slept upon their rights must be remitted to the repose from which they should not have been aroused." *

VII. THE RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY v. TOMPKINS REQUIRED THE DECISION MADE. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS AND THE COURT FULLY COMPLIED WITH THAT RULE.

The rule of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, required the result reached by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Every Indiana decision bearing upon the validity of the Lease compels the conclusion that it is valid for its full term. The City's present contentions as to the validity of the Lease were all conclusively negatived, as a matter of Indiana law, in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212 (see p. 89, supra). Entirely aside from the question of res judicata, that decision conclusively established the law of Indiana which the Court of Appeals was bound to follow.

* Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 224, 274 (1892).

The City's assertion that "The Circuit Court of Appeals wholly disregarded the applicable Indiana law in four important particulars" (Pet. 12) is wholly unfounded. Let us examine briefly the respects in which the Court of Appeals is alleged to have disregarded the applicable Indiana law:

(1) Estoppel against the City (Pet. 12, 15). The Court of Appeals made no holding on the question of estoppel in pais, although it would have been fully warranted in doing so (supra, pp. 120-9). That court cannot have disregarded the Indiana law on a question as to which it made no holding.

(2) Res judicata (Pet. 12, 15). The City admits (Reply Br. 8) that the decisions of the Public Service Commission are "conclusive on the courts in a collateral action" and that the Commission decided that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest." In addition, the Williams case conclusively determined all the issues here presented as to the validity of the Lease. The City's arguments—that the applicable Indiana cases demonstrate that the decision in the Williams case is not res judicata—have been shown to be wholly unfounded (supra, pp. 76-89).

(3) Construction of grants by a municipality (Pet. 13, 15). The decision of the Court of Appeals that Citizens Gas had power to execute the Lease and make it binding on the public charitable trust for its full term is fully supported by the facts and by the law applicable thereto (supra, pp. 56-74). That decision is in complete accord with the decision of the Public Service Commission in 1913, the decision in Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282, 138 N. E. 346 (1923), the decision in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212, 215-16 (1934), and the uniform practical construction of the Franchise and Articles by Citizens Gas and the City over a period of 22 years. None of the cases relied upon by the City have any tendency to indicate that Citizens Gas did not have full authority to make the Lease.

(4) The alleged statutory prohibitions (Pet. 13, 16). The statutes on which the City relies do not apply to its power to receive trusts and "to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same" (supra, pp. 93-5). Beyond that, the validating acts of 1929 remove any possible doubt as to the authority of the City to take over this particular trust, including the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations (supra, pp. 96-7).

It is, therefore, clear that in upholding the validity of the Lease for its full term the Circuit Court of Appeals followed the controlling Indiana decisions and thereby conformed to the rule laid down by this Court in Erie R. R. Co. v. Tompkins.

VIII. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY HELD THAT PLAINTIFF'S JUDGMENT SHOULD INCLUDE INTEREST ON THE COUPONS AFTER THEIR MATURITY AND INTEREST ON THE JUDGMENT ITSELF, BUT IN EACH CASE THE RATE OF INTEREST SHOULD BE SIX PER CENT.

The fact that the Circuit Court of Appeals awarded plaintiff interest on the unpaid coupons from the dates of their respective maturities and interest on the judgment itself was not urged as a ground for allowing a writ of certiorari in this case. Also, the City did not argue these questions in the Court of Appeals, either in its original briefs or in either of its petitions for rehearing (IV R. 1309, 1343). Thus, under the well settled procedure of this Court, plaintiff's right to interest on interest and to interest on the judgment itself is not open to dispute in this Court.

Kessler v. Strecker, 307 U. S. 22, 34 (1939);
General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175, 177-9 (1938);

Connecticut Ry. & L. Co. v. Palmer, 305 U. S. 493, 496 (1939).

Furthermore, plaintiff's right to interest both on the unpaid and overdue coupons and on the judgment itself clearly appears. Each Bond bears a coupon with the blanks appropriately filled in but otherwise reading as follows (I R. 27):

"COUPON.

$25.00.

"THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY will pay to the bearer, at the office of the Trust Company of America in the City of New York, Twenty-five dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, on the first day of ....., being six months' interest on its First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent. Gold Bond No. .....

Treasurer."

It is clear under the law of Indiana, as it is throughout the country, that such coupons bear interest after maturity at the legal rate of interest. In City of Jeffersonville v. Patterson, 26 Ind. 15 (1866), the Supreme Court of Indiana, speaking through Chief Justice Gregory, expressly held that coupons bear interest after maturity at the rate of 6% per annum. Thus the court said (p. 16):

> "We think that the interest warrants in question, according to commercial usage, and under our statute, bear interest from maturity."

Similarly, in Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. (1 Wall.) 175 (1863), this Court said (p. 206):

> "Bonds and coupons, like these, by universal commercial usage and consent, have all the qualities of commercial paper. If the plaintiffs recover in this case, they will be entitled to the amount specified in the coupons, with interest and exchange as claimed."

The Indiana law on this question is clearly stated in Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, § 19-2003, which provides that:

> "On money due on any instrument in writing, * * * interest shall be allowed at the rate of six dollars ($6.00) a year on one hundred dollars ($100.00)."

As to interest on the judgment, Section 966 R. S. (28 U. S. C. § 811) specifically provides that interest shall be allowed on all judgments in civil causes in a district court where, by the law of the state in which the the district court is held, interest may be recovered in a similar action in the state courts. Thus we are remitted to the Indiana law to determine the rate of interest recoverable on the judgment.

The Indiana statutes expressly confer the right to interest "on judgments for money" (Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, § 19-2002, quoted infra, p. 137). Therefore, there can be no doubt that the Court of Appeals was correct in awarding plaintiff interest on the overdue coupons and on the judgment itself.

The rate of interest allowed by the Court of Appeals in each instance was, however, 5% only, whereas it is apparent that the correct rate in each instance is 6%. The difference between these two rates amounted to over $30,000 as of October 1, 1940. The issue as to the proper rate to be applied to the two situations in question was presented by plaintiff's cross-petition for writs of certiorari (Nos. 423 and 424).

Under the provisions of the Indiana law it is clear that the rate of interest on the overdue coupons should be 6%. The controlling statute provides that interest at the rate of 6% shall be allowed "on money due on any instrument in writing" (Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, § 19-2003, quoted more fully above). Each unpaid coupon is an "instrument in writing" and comes within the express provisions of this statute.

See also Gale v. Cory, 112 Ind. 39, 13 N. E. 108 (1887) and the opinion in the same case on petition for rehearing, Gale v. Cory, 112 Ind. 39, 14 N. E. 362, at 363.

The Indiana statutes also clearly provide for interest at the rate of 6% on "judgments for money." Thus, the statute which applies to this situation reads:

> "§ 19-2002. Judgments for money—interest on—Interest on judgments for money, whenever rendered, shall be from the date of the return of the verdict or finding of the court, until the same is satisfied, at the rate per cent agreed upon in the original contract sued upon, not exceeding eight (8) per cent where the obligor in such contract is a person other than a corporation; and if there be no contract by the parties, then at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum." (Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933.)

The overdue interest coupons involved in this case each contain a promise to pay $25 and each coupon constitutes the "original contract sued upon." The coupons, however, are silent as to the rate of interest to be paid on the coupons themselves. There is, therefore, no "rate per cent agreed upon" as to the coupons, thus making the express provisions of the above statute directly applicable to this case.

The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the parties had themselves specified the rate of interest to be paid on the overdue coupons and that the contract of the parties on the subject superseded the provisions of these statutes (IV R. 1305-6). This holding that there are contractual provisions which specify the rate of interest is based on (1) the statement in each coupon that the $25 to be paid thereon is "interest on its First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent. Gold Bond No. ....." (emphasis is the court's), and (2) the statement in each Bond that Indianapolis Gas agrees to pay the face amount of the Bond "with interest * * * at the rate of five per cent. per annum" (IV R. 1305). Obviously, the statement that the $25 to be paid on the coupon is the interest on a 5% Bond has nothing to do with the rate of interest to be paid on the $25 itself, after it has become due and unpaid. Similarly, the fact that the Bond contains an agreement by the mortgagor to pay interest on the Bond at the rate of 5% is far from being an agreement that the rate of interest on the coupons after their maturity shall be 5%.

The fact is that there is no contractual provision as to the rate of interest on the coupons. Therefore, under the express provisions of the Indiana statutes, the rate of interest on the coupons after their maturity is 6% and the rate of interest on the judgment for the overdue and unpaid coupons is also 6%.

CONCLUSION.

There is no reason to doubt the federal jurisdiction of this case. The fact that plaintiff sought and obtained a judgment against Indianapolis Gas which now amounts to more than $1,700,000 is enough without more to prevent the alignment of Indianapolis Gas with Chase as a party plaintiff. The decisions of this Court and the Circuit Courts of Appeals are unanimous in holding that there will be no realignment for jurisdictional purposes when there is a single substantial controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant sought to be realigned.

The City's claim that it has been denied due process of law is without substance. The decision of the Court of Appeals that the City's allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense is clearly right, particularly in view of the decision of the Public Service Commission, the decision of the Indiana Supreme Court in the Williams case, and the conduct of the City and Citizens Gas in accepting the benefits of the Lease for nearly 22 years and declaring during the same period that the Lease was valid and binding on the public charitable trust. No constitutional rights of the City were violated when the Court of Appeals refused to give it an opportunity to prove something which would be wholly immaterial and ineffectual as a defense, even if it were proved.

As to the claim that the Court of Appeals failed to follow the Indiana law, the fact is that its decision is in complete accord with the applicable law of Indiana (except as to the rate of interest on the overdue coupons and on plaintiff's judgment), and in particular, that decision is fully supported by every Indiana decision bearing upon the validity of the very Lease here in question. The City's attempt to have this Court overrule the decision of the Indiana Supreme Court in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212 (1934), holding the Lease to be a binding obligation of the public charitable trust, is contrary to rather than in support of Erie R. R. Co. v. Tompkins.

The plaintiff is in the fortunate position of being legally right and at the same time sustained by overwhelming equities. In direct contrast with plaintiff's situation there is nothing in the conduct of the City to recommend its position to the conscience of the Chancellor. For 22 years it consistently took the position that the Lease here in question was valid and binding and on two occasions it assisted in defending the Lease against suits by beneficiaries of the public charitable trust. Through all this period the City insisted that the Lease was beneficial; that the making of the Lease was within the power of Citizens Gas; that the Lease did not prevent carrying out the contract between the City and Citizens Gas; that the decision of the Public Service Commission as to the validity of the Lease could not be collaterally attacked by Williams, a beneficiary of the public charitable trust; and, that "It appearing that the lease * * * has been in full force and effect for nearly 17 years * * * all persons * * * are estopped to question the validity of the same" (PX Stip. 37, II R. 807, Offered, II R. 328). Finally, as late as June 27, 1935 (less than three months before taking over the property of Citizens Gas), the City sold its Revenue Bonds on the representation that it was about to take over the entire gas system operated by Citizens Gas, including that leased from Indianapolis Gas, and that payment of the bonds would be secured by a charge on the revenues from the entire system to be "owned and/or operated by the City."

In such a situation the decision of this Court in Union Pacific Ry. Co. v. Chicago, etc. Ry. Co., 163 U. S. 564 (1896), should be a guiding light. In that case, which had many points of similarity to the one now before this Court, it was argued that a contract between two railroad companies for a period of 999 years was ultra vires and invalid, particularly as interfering with the ability of one of the railroads to render adequate service to the public. This Court sustained the validity of the contract and in an opinion written by Chief Justice Fuller quoted from the opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer, in deciding the case on circuit, as follows (p. 604):

> "It is to the higher interest of all, corporations and public alike, that it be understood that there is a binding force in all contract obligations; that no change of interest or change of management can disturb their sanctity or break their force; but that the law which gives to corporations their rights, their capacities for large accumulations, and all their faculties, is potent to hold them to all their obligations, and so make right and justice the measure of all corporate as well as individual action."

We submit that the sanctity of contract obligations should be recognized and that parties should not be allowed to accept all the benefits of a contract over a period of 22 years, at the same time affirmatively insisting upon the validity of that contract, and then to repudiate the obligations under that contract because they believe it advantageous for them to do so.

APPENDIX A.

Excerpts From the Public Service Commission Law.

(The Shively-Spencer Act.)

CHAPTER 76—LAWS OF 1913.

(pp. 167-8, 198-202, 214.)

AN ACT concerning public utilities, creating a public service commission, abolishing the railroad commission of Indiana, and conferring the powers of the railroad commission on the public service commission.

[H. 361. Approved March 4, 1913.]

Public Service Commission.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That the term "public utility" as used in this act shall mean and embrace every corporation, company, individual, association of individuals, their lessees, trustees or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, and every city or town, that now or hereafter may own, operate, manage or control any street railway or interurban railway or any plant or equipment within the state for the conveyance of telegraph or telephone messages, or for the production, transmission, delivery or furnishing of heat, light, water or power, or for the furnishing of elevator or warehouse service either directly or indirectly to or for the public.

The term "municipal council" as used in this act shall mean and embrace the common council, the board of trustees or any other governing body of any town, or city wherein the property of the public utility or any part thereof is located.

The term "municipality" as used in this act shall mean any city or town wherein property of a public utility or any part thereof is located.

The term "rate" as used in this act shall mean and include every individual or joint rate, fare, toll, charge, rental or other compensation of any public utility or any two or more such individual or joint rates, fares, tolls, charges, rentals or other compensations of any public utility or any schedule or tariff thereof.

The term "service" is used in this act in its broadest and most inclusive sense and includes not only the use or accommodation afforded consumers or patrons but also any product or commodity furnished by any public utility and the plant, equipment, apparatus, appliances, property and facility employed by any public utility in performing any service or in furnishing any product or commodity and devoted to the purposes in which such public utility is engaged and to the use and accommodation of the public.

The term "commission" used in this act shall mean the public service commission of Indiana hereby created.

The term "indeterminate permit" as used in this act shall mean and include every grant, directly or indirectly, from the state to any corporation, company, individual, association of individuals, their lessees, trustees or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, of power, right or privilege to own, operate, manage or control any plant or equipment, or any part of a plant or equipment, within this state, for the production, transmission, delivery or furnishing of heat, light, water or power, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, or for the transportation by a street railway or interurban of passengers or property between points within this state, or for the furnishing of facilities for the transmission of intelligence by electricity between points within this state, which shall continue in force until such time as the municipality shall exercise its option to purchase, as provided in this act, or until it shall be otherwise terminated according to law. This act shall be commonly known and referred to as the Shively-Spencer Utility Commission Act.

* * * * *

Transfer or Lease of Property.

SEC. 95. No public utility as defined in section one (1) of this act shall transfer or lease its franchise, works or system or any part of such franchise, works or system to any other person, or corporation or contract for the operation of its works or system, without the written consent of the commission after a hearing. The permission and approval of the commission to the assignment, transfer or lease of a franchise under this section shall not be construed to revive or validate any lapsed or invalid franchise or to enlarge or add to the powers and privileges contained in the grant of any franchise or to waive any forfeiture.

No such corporation shall directly or indirectly acquire the stock or bonds of any other corporation incorporated for or engaged in the same or a similar business, or purporting to operate or operating under a franchise from the same or any other municipality unless authorized so to do by the commission. Save where stock shall be transferred or held for the purpose of collateral security, only with the consent of the commission empowered by this act to give such consent, shall a corporation foreign or domestic operating a public utility purchase or acquire, take or hold, more than ten per centum (10%) of the total capital stock issued by a corporation doing the same or a similar business: Provided, That a corporation now lawfully holding a majority of the capital stock of any corporation operating a public utility may, without the consent of the commission, acquire and hold the remainder of the capital stock of such corporation or any portion thereof.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the holding of stock heretofore lawfully acquired or to prevent upon the surrender or exchange of said stock pursuant to a reorganization plan, the purchase, acquisition, taking or holding of a proportionate amount of stock of any new corporation organized to take over at foreclosure or other sale, the property of any corporation whose stock has been thus surrendered or exchanged. Every contract, assignment, transfer or agreement for transfer of stock, by or through any person or corporation to any corporation, in violation of any provision of this section shall be void and of no effect and no such transfer or assignment shall be made upon the books of any such corporation or be recognized effective for any purpose.

Joint Service—Requirements.

SEC. 951½. That with the consent and approval of the commission but not otherwise, any two or more public utilities, furnishing a like service or product and doing business in the same municipality or locality within this state, or any two or more public utilities whose lines intersect or parallel each other within this state may be merged and may enter into contracts with each other that will enable such public utilities to operate their lines or plants in connection with each other; and any public utility may also, with the consent of the holders of three-fourths of the capital stock outstanding, purchase or lease the property, plant or business or any part thereof of any other such public utility at a price and on terms fixed by the commission. Any such public utility may, with the consent of three-fourths of the holders of the outstanding stock, sell or lease its property or business or any part thereof to any other such public utility at a price and on terms fixed by the commission upon paying in cash to non-consenting stockholders the appraised value of their stock as fixed by the commission.

* * * * *

Indeterminate Permit.

SEC. 100. Every license, permit or franchise hereafter granted to any public utility shall have the effect of an indeterminate permit subject to the provisions of this act, and subject to the provision that the license, franchise or permit may be revoked by the commission for cause or that the municipality in which the major part of its property is situated may purchase the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at any time as provided herein, paying therefor the then value of such property as determined by the commission and according to the terms and conditions fixed by said commission, subject to all the provisions as to hearings and appeals set out in section one hundred and five (105) and section one hundred and six (106) hereof. Any such municipality is authorized to purchase such property and every such public utility is required to sell such property at the value and according to the terms and conditions determined by the commission as herein provided. If this act should be repealed or annulled then all such indeterminate franchises, permits or grants shall cease and become inoperative and in place thereof such utility shall be reinstated in the possession and enjoyment of the license, permit or franchise surrendered by such utility at the time of the issue of the indeterminate franchise, permit or grant; but in no event shall such reinstated license, permit or franchise be terminated within a less period than five years from the date of the repeal or annulment of this act.

Existing Franchises—Surrender.

SEC. 101. Any public utility operating under an existing license, permit or franchise shall, upon filing at any time prior to the expiration of such license, permit or franchise and prior to July 1, 1915, with the clerk of the municipality which granted such franchise and with the commission, a written declaration, legally executed, that it surrenders such license, permit or franchise, receive by operation of law, in lieu thereof an indeterminate permit as provided in this act; and such public utility shall hold such permit under all the terms, conditions and limitations of this act.

Effect of Indeterminate Permit.

SEC. 102. Any public utility accepting or operating under any indeterminate license, permit or franchise hereafter granted shall by acceptance of any such indeterminate license, permit or franchise be deemed to have consented to a future purchase of its property by the municipality in which the major part of it is situate at the value and under the terms and conditions determined by the commission as provided in this act, and shall thereby be deemed to have waived the right of requiring the necessity of such taking to be established by the verdict of a jury, and to have waived all other remedies and rights relative to condemnation, except such rights and remedies as are provided in this act and shall have been deemed to have consented to the revocation of its license, permit or franchise by the commission for cause.

* * * * *

SEC. 131. In case any of the provisions of this act shall be held invalid such fact shall not operate to make invalid any other part of this act, and the parts of this act not adjudged to be invalid shall be observed and enforced the same as though the invalid part or parts had not been enacted.

APPENDIX B.

EXCERPTS FROM THE CITIES AND TOWNS ACT OF 1905. (CHAPTER 129—LAWS OF 1905.)

Excerpt From Section 53 of the Cities and Towns Act.

(Laws of 1905, pp. 246-7.)

SEC. 53. The common council of every city shall have power to enact ordinances for the following purposes:

* * * * *

Sixth. To receive gifts, donations, bequests and public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out

Note: Clause 6 of Section 53 of the Cities and Towns Act is now section 48-1407 of Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933. This clause has not been changed since its enactment in 1905.

Section 85 of the Cities and Towns Act.

(Laws of 1905, p. 271.)

Contracts and Agreements—When Void.

SEC. 85. No executive department, officer or employe thereof shall have power to bind such city to any contract or agreement, or in any other way, to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of such department; and all contracts and agreements, express or implied, and all obligations of any and every sort, beyond such existing appropriations, are declared to be absolutely void: Provided, That the board of public works shall have power to contract with any individual or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys and other public places or for supplying the city with gas, water, steam, power, heat, or electricity, and for the collection, removal and disposal of garbage, ashes or refuse, on such terms and for such times, not exceeding the term fixed by section two hundred and fifty-four of this act, as may be agreed upon; but any such contract shall be submitted to the common council of such city and approved by ordinance before the same shall take effect, and if so approved shall immediately become effective: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any such department from issuing any bond or other obligation expressly authorized by this act and provided for by ordinance.

Note: Section 85 of the Cities and Towns Act is now section 48-1507 of Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933. This section has not been changed since its enactment in 1905.

Section 254 of the Cities and Towns Act—As Amended.

CHAPTER 104—LAWS OF 1911.

(pp. 181 et seq.)

Contract for Public Utilities—Limit—Purchase.

SEC. 2. That section 254 of the above entitled act be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows: Section 254. Any city or town may enter into contract with any person, corporation or association to furnish such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat or light, or drainage or sewerage facilities or to build or extend railroads, interurban or street car lines, telegraph or telephone lines, drainage or sewerage systems, or other public conveniences into or through such city or town; and may provide in such contract the terms and conditions on which such water, motive power, heat, light, drainage, sewerage, railroad, interurban, street car, telegraph or telephone services, or other uses and accommodations of such and other public conveniences may be furnished by such person, corporation or association to such city or town, and to its inhabitants: Provided, That no such contract shall be entered into by any such city or town for furnishing such city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, drainage, sewerage, heat or light, upon or along the streets of such city or town for a term longer than twenty-five years: and, Provided further, That before any such contract shall be made by any city of the first, second, third, or fourth class, such contract shall be first agreed to by the board of public works of such city, after which agreement such board, shall cause a proper ordinance approving and confirming such contract to be presented for adoption by the common council of such city,

For the purpose of aiding in the erection or extension of any such public utilities and conveniences, any city or town is authorized to become a part stockholder by subscribing to the capital stock thereof in any such corporation so contracting to furnish the city or town and its inhabitants with water, motive power, heat, drainage, sewerage, light and other accommodations aforesaid. And such city or town shall have the power to borrow money to pay for the stock so subscribed or to pay the purchase price for any such gas, electric light, heat or power plant, sewerage or drainage system or other public convenience, and the common council of such city or board of trustees of such town may issue the bonds of such city or town payable at such time or times as such common council or board of trustees may direct, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding six per centum per annum, payable annually or semi-annually, and may negotiate and sell the same at not less than the face value thereof. The proceeds of such bonds shall be applied only to the payment of the stock so subscribed or to the payment of the purchase price of such gas, electric light, heat or power plant, sewerage or drainage system or other public conveniences: Provided, however, That the denominations, time and place of payment of and interest on said bonds shall be in accordance with the terms and provisions of section two hundred and forty-nine of this act.

Note: Section 254 of the Cities and Towns Act is now section 48-7302 of Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933. This section has not been changed since its amendment in 1911.

First Class Cities, Utilities Department.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, First Class Cities, Utilities Department. In addition to the existing executive departments of cities of the first class, as such cities are defined in an act entitled "An act concerning municipal corporations," approved March 6, 1905, and acts amendatory thereof, there is hereby created in any such city having a population of not less than three hundred thousand (300,000), as shown by the last preceding United States census, a department of public utilities, which shall be under the control of a board of seven (7) members, to be known as the "board of directors for utilities," to be appointed annually by the board herein provided for and designated as the board of trustees for utilities.

* * * * *

Powers and Duties of the Board of Directors.

SEC. 3. Powers and Duties of the Board of Directors. The said board of directors for utilities shall have the exclusive government, management, regulation and control of any water works, gas works, electric light works, heating and power plants, and all property relating thereto, which any such city may heretofore have acquired or may hereafter acquire or construct for the service of the public as consumers, and such board of directors shall be charged with the duty of and shall have all necessary power to make all necessary repairs, renewals, enlargements, extensions or additions to any such plant or property which in the judgment of said board of directors is desirable or necessary for the proper serving of the inhabitants of said city and the adjacent community served with respect to any such utility from any such plant or plants. In connection with the duties devolving upon such board of directors as aforesaid, it shall have power as follows:

* * * * *

(7) To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any such lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom; and in event there be any outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered by any such lease so taken over under the provisions of which bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage, to do and perform all things necessary in order to secure the benefit of such mortgage provisions and to enable the escrow bonds held by the trustee under any such mortgage to be taken down and sold in order to defray the cost of any extensions and betterments to such leased property; and, subject to the approval of the public service commission of Indiana, to sell any such bonds so taken down for the purpose of assisting in defraying the costs of any such extensions or betterments to such leased property.

CHAPTER 78—LAWS OF 1929.

(pp. 268-271.)

AN ACT relating to corporations organized before May 1, 1913, for the purpose of furnishing gas for fuel or illuminating purposes, or electric lights or water, or light, heat and power to any town or city or the citizens or inhabitants thereof, and the articles of incorporation of which provide for the transfer of the property of such corporation to such town or city, legalizing certain provisions in the articles of incorporation thereof and authorizing the conveyance of the property of such corporations to such towns or cities and authorizing such towns or cities to accept such conveyance, repealing all laws in conflict therewith and declaring an emergency.

[H. 133. Approved March 11, 1929.]

Gas Corporations, Certain—Conveyance of Property to Municipality—Retirement of Stock.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Indiana, That if in the original articles of incorporation of any corporation organized under the laws of this state prior to May 1st, 1913 (that being the date of the creation of the public service commission of this state), for the purpose of furnishing natural or artificial gas for fuel or for illuminating purposes, or for furnishing electric lights or water to the citizens of any town or city within this state, or to furnish light, heat and power to any town or city, or the inhabitants thereof, provision is made for the transfer or conveyance of the property of such corporation to such town or city, subject to the outstanding legal obligations of said corporation, whenever the holders or owners of shares of stock, stock certificates, or holders or owners of any beneficial interest in such capital stock shall have received the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest, together with the interest or dividends thereon provided for in such articles of incorporation, such provision in such articles shall be, and is hereby legalized and declared to be valid and binding upon such corporation and upon the holders and owners of any such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest therein or their assigns, and said town or city shall be authorized and entitled to accept a transfer and conveyance of any such property in accordance with the terms and conditions of such articles of incorporation, without the question of the acceptance or acquisition of such property being submitted to a vote of the electors of such town or city and without any election being held therein to determine whether such property shall be acquired by such town or city. It shall not be necessary to obtain the consent or approval of the public service commission of Indiana or any other state board, commission or officer for such transfer and conveyance or of the terms and conditions upon which the same is to be made, but such transfer and conveyance shall be valid without any order or approval of such commission, board or officer, and any provisions in such articles authorizing the board of directors, trustees or other officers of said corporation to issue bonds or to mortgage or otherwise encumber such property before such transfer and conveyance for the purpose of borrowing money with which to pay to such holders or owners of such shares of stock, stock certificates or owners of such beneficial interest thereof the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates, together with the interest or dividends provided for in such articles, and authorizing such directors, trustees or other officers to transfer or convey the property of such corporation to such town or city whenever the holders or owners of the shares of stock, stock certificates or any beneficial interest therein have been paid the par or face value of such shares of stock or stock certificates together with the interest or dividends provided for, are hereby legalized and declared to be valid and binding and such directors, trustees or other officers of such corporation shall have the right and power to carry out and perform any such provisions in accordance with the terms of such articles. This act shall apply to any such corporation if organized before May 1, 1913, and in which the aforesaid provisions are contained in the articles of incorporation and which articles have thereafter been amended and in which such amended articles of incorporation such provisions are contained.

Any provisions in either the original articles of incorporation of any such corporation, or in any amendment thereof, providing for the retirement of the outstanding preferred stock of such corporation before such conveyance is made to any such municipal corporation are hereby legalized and declared valid and binding and said corporation and the officers thereof are authorized to retire such stock in accordance with such provisions and the terms of such preferred stock, and to mortgage such property to secure funds with which to redeem such preferred stock and to pay the holders and owners of the shares of common stock or common stock certificates or of any beneficial interest therein the amounts provided for in such articles, and whenever the outstanding preferred stock in any such corporation shall have been redeemed and the holders and owners of such common stock, common stock certificates or of any beneficial interest therein shall have received the amounts therein provided for in such articles of incorporation, then the property of such corporation shall be conveyed to such municipal corporation in accordance with the provisions of such articles or amended articles of incorporation.

Whenever any instrument of transfer or conveyance shall be executed, transferring or conveying the property, either real or personal, of any such corporation to such town or city the title to such property shall vest in such town or city, subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation: Provided, however, That such town or city shall not be liable for any such obligations and the same shall not constitute a debt of such town or city, but all such obligations shall be a charge upon said property so conveyed, and any mortgage or other lien or encumbrance executed by the board of directors, trustees or other authorized officers of such corporation before such transfer shall continue to be a lien on such property to the same extent as before such transfer or conveyance.

Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, including that located within this state and that located in any other state and any shares of stock or other interest in any other corporation of which said corporation making such transfer shall be the owner, and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property.

Provided, however, That if in any such municipal corporation there is now or is hereafter created or existing a separate taxing unit or district which shall be subject to taxation to raise money with which to either retire or redeem the stock of any such transferring corporation, or to pay obligations incurred for the benefit of such property, then all such property so transferred to such municipal corporation shall be held thereby in trust for the use and benefit of such separate taxing unit or district, and for the general public.

Repeal.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Emergency.

SEC. 3. An emergency existing for the immediate taking effect of this act, the same shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

BRIEF OF CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS, RESPONDENT AND CROSS-RESPONDENT

THE OPINIONS BELOW

The District Court made findings of fact (III R. 1160) and conclusions of law (III R. 1190) and wrote an opinion (III R. 1122). The opinion has not been officially reported.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (IV R. 1281-1306) is reported in 113 F.

(2d) 217. Its opinion on the first appeal (II R. 285-293) is reported in 96 F. (2d) 363; certiorari denied 305 U. S. 600.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925, c. 229 (43 Stat. 938; 23 U. S. C. A. Sec. 347.)

Writs of certiorari were granted in each of the cases by this Court on October 28, 1940.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The facts relevant to the liability of Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis may be summarized as follows:

(1) Citizens Gas was organized as a quasi-public corporation for the purpose of acting as the original Trustee of a Public Charitable Trust created for the benefit of the gas users of the City. (I R. 246, 250.) The Franchise Ordinance and the Articles of Incorporation (I R. 81) constituted the trust instruments and defined the powers and duties of Citizens Gas.

> Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7).

(2) Such trust instruments provided that upon satisfaction of the claims of stockholders, the property of Citizens Gas should be conveyed to the City subject to all the legal obligations of the Company, and that thereafter Citizens Gas should be wound up (I R. 84, 85, 98, 115).

(3) During its trusteeship, Citizens Gas entered into the lease with Indianapolis Gas (I R. 51-80), pursuant to the authority granted by the statutes of the State of Indiana then in force. Upon joint petition of both parties the lease was approved by the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana (I R. 116-122). It has been stipulated that the surrender of the franchise and the acceptance of an indeterminate permit under the Public Service Commission Law of Indiana did not have the effect of modifying or rendering nugatory the terms of the Franchise in so far as they created a Public Charitable Trust and defined the terms and conditions thereof and the rights, duties and liabilities of Citizens Gas as original Trustee, of the City as successor trustee, and of the inhabitants of the City as the beneficiaries of the trust (II R. 622).

(4) Section 29 of the lease limited the liability of Citizens Gas as follows:

> "The Lessor and Lessee mutually covenant that they will each look for the carrying out of the obligations of this lease solely to the corporate assets and franchises of the other, and such assets shall not embrace any claim which might under any circumstances be enforcible in any way whatsoever against a stockholder, director or officer, under any statute or other law now or hereafter in force, or against a stockholder by reason of any insufficiency in the payment of capital stock. Any personal, statutory or other liability of any stockholder, director or officer of either the Lessor or the Lessee, whether such liability now exists or hereafter arise, being a part consideration for this lease is hereby expressly waived." (I R. 78.)

(5) Citizens Gas continued in possession and operated the leased property until September 9, 1935, and fully performed the rental covenants of the lease (II R. 627-628).

(6) Prior to September 9, 1935, the claims of stockholders of Citizens Gas had been completely satisfied (II R. 634), and the authority and duty of Citizens Gas to convey and transfer all of its property to the City had been finally adjudicated (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7)).

(7) Thereupon, on September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas conveyed and transferred to the City all of its property subject to all outstanding obligations of the Company, and otherwise in strict accordance with the terms and conditions of the trust instruments (I R. 122, 127; III R. 833, 835). The City reserved its right to contest the validity of the lease (I R. 202-204, II R. 468). After September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas owned and held no property of any description and engaged in no business activity (II R. 466).

(8) In regard to claim of estoppel, reference may be made to pages 54 to 56, inclusive, of the "Brief of City of Indianapolis, et al., Petitioners and Cross-Respondents," for the facts upon which the District Court based its finding against Respondents upon that issue.

ARGUMENT

Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its assets to the City of Indianapolis on September 9, 1935, in the execution of the public charitable trust. The lease in question provides (Section 29) that the liability of Citizens Gas thereunder shall be limited to the corporate assets and franchises (I R. 78). Since the validity of the Public Charitable Trust is admitted (I R. 233, 242, 246, 250), the primary controversy here is whether the assets now in the hands of the City of Indianapolis are liable under the lease for the remainder of the term of ninety-nine years.

Throughout this litigation Citizens Gas has adopted a completely neutral position with reference to that controversy. It affirms the validity of the Public Charitable Trust and asserts the complete performance of its obligations and duties as the original Trustee. On the other hand, it has never denied its power and authority to make the lease in question but has completely performed the lease covenants to the full extent of its legal capacity and authority (II R. 627-628).

The essential factors which define and determine the position of Citizens Gas are as follows:

(1) No party has questioned the validity of the Public Charitable Trust as created and defined in the Franchise Ordinance and the Charter of Citizens Gas (I R. 233, 242, 246, 250). This had been adjudicated prior to the conveyance to the City (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7); Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Indiana 448, 188 N. E. 212).

(2) The terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust defined the powers and duties of Citizens Gas. As stated by the Court in Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (865) (C. C. A. 7): "Provisions for the protection of the public interests were properly included in its charter, and are binding upon its stockholders and directors, who must act in accordance therewith until they are legally abrogated or altered." It is clear that Citizens Gas was created solely to act as original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust and that all of its corporate assets were trust assets.

(3) Both Indianapolis Gas and the purchasers of its bonds from Citizens Gas had full knowledge of the terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust and the obligation of Citizens Gas to convey all of its property to the City and thereafter wind up its affairs (I R. 62; II R. 583-586). Moreover, Indianapolis Gas was notified of the contemplated transfer and of the City's desire to contest the validity of the lease some time before the conveyance was made (III R. 836).

(4) Since Citizens Gas was a public utility as well as the original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, the lease in question was made pursuant to the authority of the Public Service Commission Law of Indiana and only after approval had been given by the Public Service Commission of Indiana (I R. 116-122). The propriety of this was adjudicated in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212.

(5) Prior to September 9, 1935, it had been adjudicated that neither the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana nor the granting of an indeterminate permit thereunder to Citizens Gas had affected in any way the terms of the Franchise Ordinance in so far as they created the Public Charitable Trust and defined the terms and conditions thereof (Todd v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 46 Federal (2nd) 855 (C. C. A. 7)). Moreover, all the parties hereto have conceded that fact (II R. 622).

(6) On September 9, 1935, after the complete satisfaction of the claims of stockholders of Citizens Gas, it conveyed all of its property of every kind to the City subject to the legal obligations of the Company. The conveyance and transfer was made in strict accordance with the provisions of the Franchise Ordinance and the Charter of Citizens Gas (I R. 122, 127; III R. 833, 835). Thus Citizens Gas completely carried out and performed its duties as Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, and as provided in the Franchise Ordinance and its Charter (I R. 84, 85, 98, 115), Citizens Gas had no further duty or obligation except to wind up its affairs.

Throughout its corporate existence Citizens Gas has acted within its authority and duty both as the original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust and as a public utility. It affirms the validity and binding effect of the lease during the period during which it had the authority and the ability to operate as a public utility in the City of Indianapolis. Citizens Gas also affirms the validity and binding effect of the terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust. Whether or not the liability under the lease continues to be a charge upon the trust assets after their conveyance to the City of Indianapolis, it is clear that Citizens Gas has fully performed its duties and obligations and that its legal capacity and obligation to secure further performance of the lease covenants terminated on September 9, 1935.

D.	Summary of Argument	10
E.	Argument	24
	I The Circuit Court of Appeals did not Impose any Obligation or Burden upon City's Revenues Raised by Taxation, but Merely Impose an Obligation upon the Trust Property and the City as Trustee	24
	II. The Circuit Court of Appeals by its Judgment Correctly Decreed That the Obligation of Indianapolis Gas for Interest on its Bonds was Secondary to the Liability of the Trust Property, the City Trustee and Citizens Gas; the Latter being Principal Obligors. Jurisdiction was not Defeated or Affected by the Order of Liability Adjudged Against all Defendants	27

III. The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, directing Judgments Against all Defendants without Ordering Re-trial of the Alleged Issue of Burdensomeness of the Lease, did not Deprive City of any Constitutional Right of Due Process of Law 29

1. City accepted Assignment of the Lease and took Possession of the Entire Trust Property, including that under Lease, and therefore any Alleged Ground for not accepting such Assignment becomes Moot 32

2. That the Lease was not Burdensome was determined by the Public Service Commission, and that it was not Invalid upon such Ground was Judicially Adjudged by the Courts of Indiana, which said Determination and Judgments are conclusive upon the Trust and the City, its Present Trustee 39

(a) The Order of the Public Service Commission 39

(b) Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al. 45

(c) Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al. 51

3. Both City and Citizens Gas are precluded by Laches from now asserting, after Acceptance for 22 years, that the Lease is Unenforceable or Invalid according to its Terms 56
The Lease, by admitted Facts, is definitely shown to be and to have been of Great Value to the Trust 60

Page

IV. The 99-year Lease was properly held to be Valid and Enforceable according to its terms against the Trust, Citizens Gas former Trustee and City, as present Trustee 62
Citizens Gas and Indemnity Contract 75

V. Decision of Circuit Court of Appeals is in complete harmony with the Statutes and Decided Law of the Courts of Indiana, and the Rule of Erie Ry. Co. v. Tompkins is in no wise violated .. 77

VI. Present Contentions of City would make the Public Charitable Trust Invalid as being one Fraudulent as against Creditors, and thus Violate Decision in Todd v. Citizens Gas 79

VII. Circuit Court of Appeals properly refused to Order Judgment in Behalf of Chase for Interest on Unpaid Bond Coupons at the Rate of Six Per Cent per Annum 82

BRIEF OF

THE INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY, RESPONDENT

A.

THE OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court (III R. 1122 to 1159) is not officially reported. The opinion of the Circuit court of Appeals (IV R. 1281 to 1306) is reported in 113 Fed. (2d) 217.

B.

JURISDICTION

These cases are before this Court upon the granting of the petitions for writs of certiorari of petitioner City and the cross-petition for such writs by Chase National Bank, Trustee under this respondent's mortgage deed of trust. The jurisdiction of the Court was invoked under the provisions of Section 240 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C., Sec. 347).

C.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The statement of the case and the facts thereof as set out in the brief of cross-petitioner and respondent Chase is accurate with the exception of a statement made at page 22 that the agreement of March 2, 1936, between City and Indianapolis Gas was made "in direct violation of the rights of the trustee and of the bondholders". This statement of a legal conclusion is denied here as it was in the District Court and before the Circuit Court of Appeals. Certain corrections are also offered as to statements in City's brief; the facts fully and clearly stated in the briefs of said petitioner and cross-petitioner Chase will not be repeated here but are supplemented as follows:

Certain omitted factual situations surrounding the execution of the 99-year lease by Citizens Gas, original trustee, and Indianapolis Gas, are pertinent for consideration.

Prior to September 30, 1913, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas were competing manufacturers and distributors of gas in the City of Indianapolis. The former company was operating its properties as a public utility and as trustee of a public charitable trust, subject to the rights of the investors, and at that time owned its gas plant and 184 miles of mains and 11,165 meters in use. Indianapolis Gas was operating a competing gas plant in the same city with 383 miles of main and 41,541 meters (III R. 901; offered II R. 342), and in that year was beginning extensive improvements in its equipment and the methods of manufacturing gas, all of which necessarily would adversely affect Citizens Gas as a competitor. The capital stock of Indianapolis Gas was owned entirely by non-residents of Indiana.

The directors and trustees of Citizens Gas had increased its capital stock, issued mortgage bonds and found that the competition with Indianapolis Gas "has not been without dangers in the past, and may be found to be more dangerous in the future" (III R. 887; offered II R. 342). In this situation the managers of Citizens Gas appealed to one Malott and a group of residents of Indianapolis and urged upon them the acquiring of sufficient of the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas to make possible a merger of the two competing companies under control of Citizens Gas.

This picture is clearly presented in the resolutions of the directors of Citizens Gas adopted at their meeting of February 26, 1913 (II R. 644-5; offered II R. 327).

> "Whereas Volney T. Malott for himself and associates at the suggestion of persons connected with the management of this Company has been in negotiation for the purchase of a control of the Indianapolis Gas Company with the sole object of bringing the plants and gas system of said Company under the control of the Citizens Gas Company, and such negotiations have now reached a point where the said Volney T. Malott must close or abandon the same, and he is unwilling to close the same except under proper assurances that if he acquires such control a proper lease will be entered into by the Citizens Gas Company, for the taking over of such property;

"Now therefore be it resolved by the Board of Directors of the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis that the President and Secretary of the Company be and they are hereby authorized to execute on behalf of the Company the contract with V. T. Malott this day read at the meeting of the Board, and in event said V. T. Malott and his associates shall acquire control of the Indianapolis Gas Company so as to authorize the execution of the form of lease accompanying said contract, that then the President and Secretary of this Company be and they are hereby authorized to enter into said contract of lease on behalf of this Company, and in connection therewith to consent to any changes in form in said lease which in their judgment do not vary the material rights acquired and obligations incurred by this Company."

The above action was approved and ratified at a meeting of the Trustees of Citizens Gas held at a subsequent hour on the same day (II R. 646). Pursuant to and in reliance upon this agreement, approved in the above resolution, the local Malott group did purchase sufficient of the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas as might make possible a lease effecting the merger of the two utility properties under the unified control of Citizens Gas for the term of 99 years, and a joint petition was filed by both companies with the Public Service Commission of Indiana seeking approval of the lease. Said petition stated, inter alia (II R. 652, 653; offered II R. 328):

"4. That the interest of the public generally and of the stockholders of the undersigned companies require that said plants shall be put under a single management, the wasteage of further duplicate service and dual operation terminated, if the same can be done on proper terms and conditions.

"5. That as will be seen from the accompanying copy of its charter, by-laws and franchise from the City of Indianapolis under which it operates, the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis is largely a cooperative institution organized for the purpose of affording to the public the benefits of cheap gas with limited dividends to the stockholders, and providing for an ultimate transfer of the property on certain conditions to the City of Indianapolis for the benefit of the entire public; and it is believed that the lease now proposed will promote the realization of the purposes of the organization of said company" (II R. 652, 653; offered II R. 328.)

Following a protracted hearing, at which the City of Indianapolis was represented by its Corporation Counsel (I R. 116; offered II R. 327), the Commission granted the petition and approved the lease with certain modifications which were accepted by the parties and embodied therein.

From October 1, 1913, until September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas, the original trustee of the public charitable trust, operated the leased property as part and parcel of its unified system, and from September 9, 1935, City, as successor Trustee, has continuously operated the same and is now so doing.

The plaintiff below, suing in behalf of bondholders of Indianapolis Gas, sought a judgment declaring the 99-year lease to be valid and also a coercive judgment against all parties defendant for the amount of unpaid bond interest together with interest thereon and also for certain other relief. Before trial an order was entered by the District Court that the cause should go to trial and > "That the evidence shall be heard upon the issues whether the lease * * * is binding upon and enforceable against the City of Indianapolis or any of the property acquired by it from Citizens Gas * * * or against Indianapolis Gas or Citizens Gas * * * and whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the rental under said lease or for interest on the bonds of Indianapolis Gas Company which has accrued since April 1, 1936, against any of said defendants or said property;"

and that evidence should be deferred on one reason assigned by City of Indianapolis upon which it claimed

> "the right as such successor-trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust; reserving the right to make such order or decree as may seem just and appropriate to the court at any stage in the proceeding." (II R. 321, 322.)

As to Statements in City's Brief

In 1905 the contract which became the franchise of Citizens Gas was executed (I R. 81-94, offered II R. 327) and provided that, within 18 months after the sale of the discontinued gas mains of the Consumers Gas Trust Co., it should "secure, acquire or construct" and put in operation a gas plant with not less than 100 miles of mains (I R. 85).

The contract also contained the provision creating the public charitable trust, providing that upon repayment of the investment of settlors with interest at 10% per annum, the entire property should, at the expiration of 25 years at the option of City thus be conveyed to City as successor Trustee, subject to legal obligations (I R. 84, (f), (i); offered II R. 327).

By the provisions of the City franchise and the contract, written into the Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas, any "benefit to gas users" was expressly made subject to the prior use of all "earnings of said Company" to pay "semi-annually dividends of 10% per annum and any unpaid accrued dividends", and other legal obligations incurred by the Company (I R. 84, (f) 98, 9; offered II R. 327).

The trust res was to consist of all rights, property and assets of every kind and character which Citizens Gas might originally or thereafter acquire (I R. 93, 99; offered II R. 327). Citizens Gas was incorporated under the general statutes of Indiana and its sole purpose, as a public utility and as provided by its articles, was to "furnish the inhabitants of Indianapolis with light, heat and power"; this was provided by the franchise to include "all the inhabitants of said City" (I R. 89, 90; offered II R. 327).

The sole purpose of Citizens Gas was to perform such purposes of a public utility, as so provided in its articles, with whatever property it had or might acquire under any characterization of title. By agreement of its stockholders expressed in its articles and stock subscriptions it was the trustee of a public charitable trust. Thus the corporation from its creation was to function as a public utility to supply light, heat and power to all inhabitants of the City of Indianapolis, and subject thereto to function as a trustee.

City, at page 9 of its brief, refers to its letter of July 23, 1935, to Indianapolis Gas and states that Indianapolis Gas agreed on September 30, 1935 "to make an arrangement for temporary use".

This letter (III R. 836; offered II R. 329) is significant in several particulars·

1. In its first paragraph is the unequivocal statement that the City would shortly take over the property "which has been operated by Citizens Gas Company".

2. In its second paragraph it narrates the execution of the ninety-nine year lease and its approval by the Commission. No intimation or charge is made that it was or is invalid.

3. In its third paragraph it states that City in acquiring the property of Citizens Gas does not become liable "for the obligations of that company" by virtue of the Act of March 11, 1929.

It will be noted no distinction is made between the lease obligations and any others which were incurred by Citizens Gas in its operations.

The letter can only mean that City did not become directly obligated as a municipality, which is correct. It necessarily meant, by referring to the statute, "that the obligations of that company" were to be a charge only upon the property so taken over, which is all this respondent has sought in this litigation.

The letters exchanged on September 30, 1935 (III R. 968, 969; offered II R. 385) do not spell out an agreement on the part of Indianapolis Gas to the use and possession of its property by City. The letters simply provide that by receiving payment from City of certain interest on its bonds, Indianapolis Gas waived no rights nor did City concerning their separate contentions as to liability under the lease.

The letter of City stated:

> "We ask you to waive no rights of yours by accepting; and you shall be at full liberty to assert, as we understand you do, that said lease is an obligation binding on the City of Indianapolis * * *"
>
> "We will make these payments without prejudice to our position or rights and you may accept the same without prejudice to your position or rights * * *"

And the letter of Indianapolis Gas in reply stated:

> "You making these or future payments referred to without prejudice to your position or rights and we accepting the same without prejudice to our position or rights under said lease or in relation thereto." (III R. 968, 969; offered II R. 384, 385.)

The agreement of March 2, 1936 (I R. 205-207; offered II R. 327) makes no reference to and was not an "extending" of any previous agreement; it was an agreement providing for the use thereafter of the property of Indianapolis Gas which should continue pending a settlement or final adjudication of the controversy under which payment of the cash rentals under the lease, including interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds and dividends on its stock, was to be made to a bank as escrow agent without waiver by either party of their respective contentions concerning the validity of the lease. Certain characterizations concerning the acceptance of the assignment of the lease and the City's so-called "resolution of rejection" are subsequently discussed in this brief.

D.

I

The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Impose Any Obligation or Burden Upon the City's Revenues Raised By Taxation But Merely Imposed an Obligation Upon the Trust Property and Upon the City as Trustee

(Brief, pp. 24-26.)

No important public question is here involved such as is stated by the City. The sole obligations imposed upon City, by the judgment here for review, are upon it as a successor trustee of a public charitable trust which consists of the present entire gas system in the City of Indianapolis. The decision of the court of appeals, following express Indiana statutes, precludes any obligation of City to satisfy the judgment through exercise of its municipal power to levy and collect taxes.

The principal question presented is whether the lease obligations of a trust, validly created, acquiesced in and defended by all the parties for 22 years, may be destroyed by the mere substitution of trustees; an obligation created by the trust as a public utility under authority both of its own charter and of an express statute of the state controlling such utilities.

II

The Judgment Correctly Decreed That the Obligation of Indianapolis Gas for Payment of Interest on Its Bonds Was Secondary to That of the Trust, City As Trustee and Citizens Gas; the Latter Being Principal Obligors. Jurisdiction Was Not Defeated or Affected by the Order of Liability Adjudged Against All Defendants

(Brief, pp. 27-29.)

On October 1, 1913, Citizens Gas leased for 99 years all property of Indianapolis Gas and by the terms of said lease agreed to pay all interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds as it accrued. From that date Citizens Gas and City, its successor trustee, have been in possession and operation of the entire property of lessor. Citizens Gas on September 9, 1935 conveyed and assigned to City, as its successor, its entire property, both personal and real and including the lease in question, subject to all its legal obligations. Prior to the day of transfer Citizens Gas, in accord with the lease provisions, had paid all interest as it became due on Indianapolis Gas bonds.

City accepted said conveyance and assignment of all said property, took possession thereof, and by its directors for utilities, declared that neither it was bound to the terms of the lease nor was the trust property it had taken over.

Chase, as sole trustee under the Indianapolis Gas mortgage, brought suit for bondholders against City as successor trustee, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas, seeking declaratory judgment that the lease was a valid obligation of the trust and of both Citizens Gas and City as trustees, and seeking coercive judgment against all parties defendant in the amount of the unpaid interest coupons.

The validity or invalidity of the lease determined only whether all defendants were liable for said delinquent interest or whether the liability was solely that of Indianapolis Gas.

The District Court held the lease invalid and entered judgment solely against Indianapolis Gas for $1,032,150, the amount of the unpaid interest coupons, which judgment the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed.

The jurisdiction of the court could not and did not depend upon whether all defendants or only one was liable, or upon the order in which such liability should be borne by the several defendants. The jurisdiction of the District Court was fairly invoked and no realignment of any party defendant could properly have been made.

III

The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals Directing Judgment Against All Parties Defendant Without Retrial of the Alleged Issue of Burdensomeness of the Lease Did Not Deprive City of Any Right of Due Process

(Brief, pp. 29-62.)

City in its answer and counterclaim avers, as a ground of alleged invalidity of the lease, that it was burdensome upon it and the public charitable trust and that it therefore did not constitute a part of the trust res which it took over as successor trustee, and that in taking over the administration of the trust neither it as trustee nor the trust was legally obligated to the fulfillment of the lease undertakings.

The District Court in a pre-trial order provided for trial of the issue whether or not the lease was a valid and enforceable obligation, reserving for future hearing evidence on one reason assigned by City for non-liability, viz: "whether City had the right to refuse and reject an assignment of the lease on the ground that said lease was burdensome."

The failure of Circut Court of Appeals to remand the cause to District Court for further hearings upon this issue did not deprive City of any right of due process for the reasons:

City in Fact Accepted Assignment of the Lease and Took Possession of Entire Trust Property and Therefore Any alleged Grounds for Doing Otherwise Becomes Moot.

(Brief, pp. 32-38.)

Every act and statement of City, from the day it elected to succeed Citizens Gas as Trustee until it took over the property, was an unmistakable expression of intent to take over the trust in its entirety, towit: the gas system operated by Citizens Gas.

On March 20, 1929 City first elected to exercise its rights of succession by resolution of its Board of Public Works. Said resolution demanded of Citizens Gas that all its property of "whatever nature or character" be conveyed to it, subject to all "legal obligations against said company."

City, on May 7, 1935, by its board of directors for utilities, authorized bonds in the amount of $8,000,000 whose principal and interest were to be payable from and a charge only upon the net revenues derived from the operation of the gas system, described as the property "operated by Citizens Gas Company." In connection with the sale of said bonds, City issued a prospectus describing the gas system as one which consisted of 867 miles of mains and which was owned by Citizens Gas partly in fee and partly in leasehold for 99 years. It described the obligations and terms of the lease in detail, and stated that City would continue operation of the "system." The bonds were purchased by bankers in reliance on said statements, and they in turn sold and distributed them to the public upon similar statements contained in circulars.

With the proceeds of said bond sale City retired all capital stock of Citizens Gas, discharged its bond obligation and thereafter, on September 9th, received from said Citizens Gas separate instruments of conveyance and assignment, transferring all of its title and interest in all its property, including the lease in question. In each of said instruments it was provided that the said property was conveyed subject to all obligations of the grantor. City thereupon entered into possession and operation of all the gas property, including that under the lease, though by its board for utilities it passed the so-called "resolution of rejection" of the lease.

City operated said system, including the leased property, until March 2, 1936 under no authority or right other than as assignee of the lease and successor to Citizens Gas. On that date an agreement was made by City and Indianapolis Gas providing that the former might thereafter operate the leased property under certain stipulations without waiver by either party of their claimed positions relative to the lease.

Having accepted assignment of the lease and possession of the leased property, any reason for not so doing is moot.

2.

That the Lease Was Not Burdensome Was Determined by the Public Service Commission and That It Was Not Invalid Upon Such Ground Was Conclusively Adjudged by the Courts of Indiana, All Binding on the Trust and on the City, Present Trustee.

THE ORDER OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

(Brief, pp. 39-45.)

The lease was presented to the Public Service Commission by joint petition of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas and after extended hearing, at which City appeared by counsel, it was ordered approved October 1, 1913 with certain modifications which were accepted. Thereupon Citizens Gas took over the leased property. The Indiana Public Utility Law, then in effect, provided that such leases might be made by utilities "at a price and on terms fixed by the commission." This statute also withdrew from cities the right to grant franchise to utilities and vested such powers in the Commission.

By law of the State the orders of the Commission may not be collaterally attacked in the courts, except on grounds of fraud or lack of jurisdiction in the Commission, neither of which has been charged by City in this cause. The findings and order of the Commission are conclusive on all parties to this cause that the execution of the lease was in the public interest and a proper exercise by Citizens Gas of its power as trustee of a Public Utility.

City may not now collaterally attack the order of the Commission on the ground that "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome." The failure to remand the cause for hearing on this issue does not therefore deprive City of any right of due process of law.

FISHBACK v. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, ET AL., 193 Ind. 282

(Brief, pp. 45-51.)

During the hearing before the Commission one Fishback, as a resident of Indianapolis, intervened and urged denial of the petition for approval of the lease upon certain grounds substantially the same as those here urged by City. After denial of his original objection and also petition for rehearing, Fishback instituted a class suit for himself and all other citizens in the Marion County Superior Court against Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, City and members of the Commission. He alleged that the order approving the lease was invalid and sought judgment vacating the same, cancelling the lease and also an injunction preventing the contracting parties from carrying it out. The complaint alleged as grounds for relief that the rentals of the lease were excessive, that it would prevent the fulfillment of the contract between Citizens Gas and City and that Citizens Gas had no power to execute the lease. City joined issue by general denial, but seven years later plaintiff dismissed as to it on day of judgment.

The judgment of the trial court is in full force and effect.

The judgment in this case is conclusive upon all matters which were or might have been litigated under the issues, and bind not only Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas but also all their successors in title and privies in interest, including City as successor Trustee.

The judgment is conclusive upon all defendants in the present cause that the lease is valid and enforceable against all parties thereto and their "successors and assigns." City is therefore denied no right of due process by failure of the court to order a further hearing upon this issue of burdensomeness already conclusively adjudged.

WILLIAMS v. CITIZENS GAS COMPANY, 206 Ind. 448

(Brief, pp. 51-55.)

Williams brought suit, as a beneficiary of the public charitable trust, against all parties to the present cause and also the Public Service Commission. He urged a judgment cancelling the lease upon grounds that its terms were excessive and burdensome upon the trust and that its execution was ultra vires Citizens Gas. All defendants, including City, contested said action and upon their securing judgment, plaintiff appealed. The opinion of the Supreme Court declared the lease to be valid, one which the contracting parties had power to make and one which the Commission had power to approve. The opinion held that obligations of Citizens Gas as a Trustee to the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust were subordinate to those it had as a public utility under the laws controlling and regulating such utilities.

Evidence of the pleadings, issues and determinations in both the Fishback and Williams cases was before the District Court under the issue as to whether said judgments, or either of them, were res adjudicata of the issues of the present cause.

The judgment in the Williams case conclusively determines every issue presented by City in this cause as to every party thereto, both as a declaration of the law of Indiana and as res adjudicata.

City, bound by the order of the Commission holding the lease provision fair and reasonable and by the judgments of two causes declaring the lease valid, is not now deprived of any right of due process by failure of Circuit Court of Appeals to order a fourth hearing on the alleged issue of burdensomeness of the lease.

Both City and Citizens Gas Are Precluded by Laches From Now Asserting Lease is Invalid Upon Any Presented Issue.

(Brief, pp. 56-61.)

City, as successor trustee, may not now assert that the lease is invalid for any reason after the leasehold has been accepted and utilized by the trust and predecessor trustee for a period of 22 years. Such a delay in the assertion of alleged rights constitutes such laches as precludes the granting of the relief sought.

Neither a city nor an individual may accept all the benefits of a contract for 22 years, during which time it twice defended the same from attacks on its validity, and then, at the expiration of such a period, seek avoidance of its obligations thereunder upon the ground that the consideration either has become or had always been burdensome.

Being precluded by laches from presenting the alleged issue of burdensomeness, City was deprived of no right of due process by the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

IV.

The Ninety-Nine Year Lease Was Properly Held To Be Valid and Enforceable According to Its Terms Against the Trust, Citizens Gas Former Trustee, and City as Present Trustee.

(Brief, pp. 62-77.)

The power of Citizens Gas to execute the lease is granted in its charter by its incorporation as a public utility under the general laws of Indiana. By no other means than by purchase or lease could it have acquired property with which to perform its corporate purpose of supplying gas to all inhabitants of the City of Indianapolis.

The Public Utility Act of 1913 also gave express power to Citizens Gas as a public utility to execute the lease upon order and approval of the Commission, which it had. Such powers, were not in any degree diminished or affected by the fact that it held its property in the capacity of a trustee of a public charitable trust.

The leasehold when created became part and parcel of the trust res.

City had statutory authority to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee of the trust and to take over all its said property "subject to its legal obligations." By the City and Town Act of 1905, power was granted Cities to receive gifts and public trusts and become bound by their conditions and terms. By Chapter 77 and 78 of the Acts of 1929, drafted by the City itself, it was authorized to take over this particular trust and lease and perform all the provisions of the same. It provided that while City should accept said property subject to those obligations, they were only to be a charge upon the property itself and not upon the taxing powers of the municipality.

All acts done by City in succeeding to trusteeship were in compliance with statute, except its attempted refusal to accept the legal obligations of its predecessor trustee under the lease.

In succeeding Citizens Gas, City could not accept the trust in part and reject in part. Its acceptance of the trust was in its entirety, including the leasehold.

That City did not sign the lease in 1913 offers it no support. Citizens Gas was at that time sole trustee and empowered to secure for the trust the leasehold. City had not then elected to exercise its rights of succession and it was not known until 1929 that it would do so.

Sections 85 and 254, Chapter 129 of Acts of 1905 are not relevant to any present issues. These relate solely to contracts executed by a city which create a direct liability on the taxing powers of the municipality. Had they purported to relate to such obligations as are incident to the present lease, which they did not, the subsequent Acts of 1929 would have superseded and repealed them.

CITY'S INDEMNITY AGREEMENT

Upon accepting the property of Citizens Gas, City executed an agreement of indemnity to its grantor covering all liability, resulting from any acts of commission or omission of its grantor, and undertook to save it harmless.

This agreement, in view of admitted liability of Citizens Gas under the lease, renders City bound for those obligations even though it had not, as it contends and respondent denies, accepted the assignment of the lease together with the transfer of the other property of the trust.

City's objections to the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals are, therefore, without substance.

V.

Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals Is in Complete Harmony With the Statutes and Decisions of the Courts of Indiana; and the Rule of Erie Railroad v. Tompkins Is in No Wise Violated.

(Brief, pp. 77-79.)

Had the decision rested solely upon res adjudicata of the presented issue by the decisions of the Fishback and Williams cases, or on grounds of estoppel, no valid objections could have been raised.

By the law of Indiana, estoppel against a City is denied only where the acts on which it is based are those of an officer or agent which are unlawful or without the scope of authority.

Here, all acts of the City upon which estoppel can be predicated were expressly approved by statutes, and the sole conduct of City which is in violation thereof is its refusal to admit acceptance of the entire trust property subject to its legal obligations.

The Court of Appeals did not rest its decision upon res adjudicata or estoppel but upon an independent judgment of liability guided and controlled by the decisions of Indiana and the settled interpretation of its statutes.

The decision is in entire harmony with the law of the State of Indiana.

VI.

Present Contentions of City Would Make the Public Charitable Trust Invalid and Fraudulent as Against Creditors, and Thus Violate Decision in Todd v. Citizens Gas.

(Brief, pp. 79-81.)

Under decision in Todd v. Citizens Gas, City had right as successor trustee to succeed Citizens Gas and accept all its property subject to all legal obligations and so operate the "continuing trust."

City contends that it may take part or all of said trust property, free from any charge for the payment of its liabilities, by itself retiring all capital stock of Citizens Gas by paying directly to stockholders their investment plus interest at 10% for the 25 years, leaving the company wholly without assets. Such a construction of the trust or the rights of a successor trustee, were it possible, would render the trust itself invalid.

It is provided by Indiana statute that all deeds or conveyances made in trust for the use of the grantors shall be void against existing or subsequent creditors. Any trust which would purport to have authority to abrogate its liabilities upon the succession of a trustee would be void.

VII.

Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Refused to Order Judgment in Favor of Chase for Interest on Unpaid Bond Interest at More Than Five Per Cent Per Annum.

(Brief, pp. 82-83.)

The unpaid interest coupons sued upon recite that the bonds bear interest at the rate of 5% per annum. Under the Indiana statute bondholders are entitled to interest on unpaid bond interest only at the contract rate. The statute provides that 6% shall be allowed only in the absence from the contract of a specified rate of interest.

The coupons, showing on their face that they are interest at 5%, preclude merit to the cross-petition of Chase seeking an increase in the amount of the judgment.

E.

ARGUMENT

It being a settled rule of this Court, in the consideration of causes the review of which is accepted by certiorari, that it will confine itself to the grounds upon which the writ was asked or granted, argument will here be made only as to such grounds.

I.

The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Impose Any Obligation or Burden Upon the City's Revenues Raised By Taxation But Merely Imposed an Obligation Upon the Trust Property and Upon the City as Trustee.

In the fourth reason, relied upon by City for allowance of the writ (Petition p. 16) it is erroneously stated that an important public question is involved and that by the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals there is imposed upon City, as a municipal corporation, a continuing obligation for 77 years to pay in the future the total amount of more than 45 million dollars, and that the payment of this obligation is not limited to the revenues arising from the operation of the plant but is also a burden on revenues raised by taxation. The direct contrary is true.

The obligation of the City, resulting from the judgment of the Court of Appeals, is one solely against it as the present trustee of the public charitable trust and operates only as a charge upon the property belonging to the trust which it has taken over. The language of the Court's opinion (IV R. 1306) and the decree (IV R. 1307) demonstrate this fact. Both state that the judgment is enforceable against "The City as successor Trustee and the Trust property."

All actions taken by the City, relative to the gas system, since its succession to Citizens Gas under statutory authority, have been as a trustee and entirely separate and distinct from its governmental functions as a municipal corporation. In the issuance of the City's revenue bonds it was expressly provided that the payment of their principal and interest was solely a charge upon the revenues derived from the operation of the gas system and should not be an indebtedness of the City payable out of taxes (III R. 826; offered II R. 327).

The decision thus follows the express statute (Indiana Acts of 1929, Chap. 78, Appendix C) providing that the City might accept trusteeship of the trust here involved and that in accepting the transfer and conveyance of said property

> "The title to such property shall vest in such town or city subject to all outstanding legal obligations of such corporations: provided, however, that such town or city shall not be liable for any such obligation and the same shall not constitute a debt of such town or city, but all such obligations shall be a charge upon said property so conveyed, and any mortgage or any lien or encumberance executed by the board of directors, trustees, or other authorized officers of such corporation before such transfer shall continue to be a lien on such property to the same extent as before such transfer or conveyance."

The City in its brief uses certain figures as argument to destroy the obligations of the trust. The value of the property of Indianapolis Gas as stated in the circulars, under which the City's revenue bonds were sold to the public, was set at $12,730,490 as the cost of reproduction new and at a depreciated value of $9,181,960 (I R. 196; offered II R. 327). The figure of $45,000,000 used by the City is purely a mathematical computation with the accuracy of which we are not here concerned. That the interest on $10,000,000 at 5% per annum will total $10,000,000 in 20 years has no relevancy either to whether the rate of 5% is a lawful rate of interest or whether the obligation was validly assumed.

The statement of City therefore, that an important public question is here involved, because of a judgment against it as a municipality which might presumably impose a burden on revenues raised by taxation, is wholly without foundation.

The principal question presented to the court in the review of these causes is whether or not the obligations of a trust, created by the original trustee in its corporate capacity as a public utility and acquiesced in by the trustee, the trust, and its beneficiaries for 22 years, may be avoided by a succeeding trustee solely by reason of such succession—said obligations furthermore being incidental to a leasehold estate created under express legislative authority by the public utility corporation acting as instant trustee (I R. 80); a leasehold which both the original trustee and the City had on two different occasions joined in successfully defending against charges of invalidity in representative actions by beneficiaries.

II.

The Circuit Court of Appeals By Its Judgment Correctly Decreed That the Obligation of Indianapolis Gas for Interest on the Bonds Was Secondary to the Liability of the Trust Property, the City and Citizens Gas; the Latter Being Principal Obligors. Jurisdiction Was Not Defeated or Affected By the Order of Liability Adjudged Against All Defendants.

Until October 1, 1913, the obligation of Indianapolis Gas to pay interest on the bonds was solely its own. On that date the 99-year lease was executed under authority of statute (Appendex A) and upon order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana (I R. 116-122; offered II R. 327). Thereupon Citizens Gas took over as lessee the possession and operation of all this respondent's property. By the terms of said lease Citizens Gas as lessee agreed and undertook to pay all interest on said bonds as it should become due (I R. 69, No. 21; offered II R. 327) and from 1913 until April 1, 1936 this obligation was fulfilled by Citizens Gas or its successor trustee the City.

The express agreement of the lessee, made for itself, its successors and assigns, including the City or any successor-trustee, to pay and discharge said interest obligations, was a valid and binding consideration for the leasehold estate thus created. The District Court in the trial of the cause held the lease invalid and entered judgment solely against this respondent in the sum of $1,032,150, the amount of the then unpaid bond interest.

The Circuit Court of Appeals properly reversed the District Court and ordered judgment entered against all defendants in stated order of liability.

The relation of this respondent Company to the obligation sued upon is analogous to that of an original mortgagor who has conveyed property subject to the mortgage, with an assumption by the grantee to pay and discharge the mortgage debt, only here the conveyance was for 99 years instead of in fee. Upon a default in such obligation the mortgagee may sue both the original mortgagor upon the debt and the grantee upon the undertaking in the deed. In such case, in Indiana as it is generally, the grantee is regarded as the principal debtor and the grantor as a surety. This accepted rule is stated in Stanton v. Kenrick, 135 Ind. 382, at 389, as follows:

> "One who, in a deed, assumes and promises to pay an encumbrance upon land as a part of the purchase price, becomes, by that assumption and promise, the principal debtor to the holder of the encumbrance, and liable to be sued himself for the debt in the first instance; and while the grantor remains bound for the obligation, yet, as between grantor and grantee, the former is surety and the latter principal."

It has also long been a rule of equity that courts, having jurisdiction of the parties to controversies brought before them, will decide all matters in dispute and decree complete relief.

Alexander v. Hillman, 296 U. S. 222-242;
Lincoln National Life Ins. Co. v. Pearman, 43 Fed. (2d) 163;
Carter v. Blaine County Inv. Co., 45 Fed. (2d) 643.

This respondent can find no valid ground for, nor reason to support, the contention of the City as to lack of jurisdiction. Interest on its bonds is unpaid and in default in a substantial amount; to deny such indebtedness to its bondholders or their right to enforce such obligation by lawful means would not serve the proper interests of any party to this cause. Indianapolis Gas being liable to its bondholders for more than $1,000,000 as adjudged by both the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals, and it being only through subsequent collateral contracts with the other defendants that its primary liability as debtor became that of a surety for the payment of said obligation, no valid reason can exist for realignment of Indianapolis Gas as a plaintiff to sue itself and the other defendants for a debt which it must pay if said other defendants do not. The jurisdiction of both the District Court and Circuit Court of Appeals was properly invoked in this cause, and the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals in determining the order of liability of the several defendants to the obligation sued upon was therefore proper and unassailable.

III.

The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals Directing Judgment Against All Defendants, Without Ordering Retrial of the Alleged Issue of Burdensomeness of the Lease, Did Not Deprive City of Any Constitutional Right of Due Process of Law.

City contends the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals in ordering judgment against all defendants, without remanding the cause to the District Court for further hearing on the alleged issue of burdensomeness of the lease, denies to it due process of law. City, in its answer and counter-claim below, alleged that the lease was burdensome upon the City and the property of the trust, and one which the initial trustee had no power to make for a period beyond its own trusteeship; and that it was not binding upon the City as successor trustee and did not constitute an asset of the trust which it was bound to accept. (I R. 186, 187.) A motion to strike out the allegations of burdensomeness as being immaterial and constituting no defense was filed by plaintiff and denied by the District Court and assigned as error above.

In its counter-claim against Indianapolis Gas and all other parties to the cause, City alleged that the validity of the lease had not been already adjudicated in the Fishback and Williams cases and that said lease did not constitute an enforceable obligation against either the City as trustee or the trust. (I R. 187.) Issue was joined by Indianapolis Gas upon said allegations. (I R. 215, 220.)

Before trial the District Court made the order (II R. 321-322) heretofore referred to, as set out in full at page 34 of City's brief. In the City's petition for rehearing filed with the Court of Appeals it sought and urged

> "an opportunity to prove the averments of its counterclaim and to have the lower court determine whether when executed the lease was in fact burdensome." (IV R. 1310.)

The above language of the petition for rehearing is also quoted at page 6 of the City's petition to this court for certiorari.

This reserved issue, as determined by the order and interpreted by the City in its petitions for rehearing and for certiorari, was therefore simply whether the City had the right to "refuse and reject an assignment of the lease" in 1935 upon the alleged ground that in 1913 "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome."

That the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals was proper and did not deny to the City any rights of due process of law, through failure to remand to the District Court the cause for further hearing on that issue, is supported by each of the following reasons:

(1) City did not refuse and reject an assignment of the lease, but in fact received, recorded and retained said assignment and simultaneously took possession of the leased property and operated it for six months (until March 2, 1936) solely under authority thereof, and by ordinance expressly accepted the public trust of which the lease is part (III R. 1018, 1019). The reserved issue thus becomes moot.

(2) The fact that the lease was not invalid because of any burdensomeness upon the public charitable trust had been judicially determined by the Supreme Court of Indiana and by the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, and by the order of the Public Service Commission, in representative proceedings by beneficiaries on behalf of the trust itself, with the trustees in court, which order and adjudications are binding and conclusive upon both the original and successor trustees and the trust.

(3) Under decisions of Fishback and Williams cases any charge of burdensomeness would be wholly irrelevant as a matter of Indiana law.

(4) City and Citizens Gas having operated for 22 years under the lease, thereby greatly increasing the value of the trust, are now precluded by laches from any defense against an action on the lease by asserting the same is unenforceable on account of any alleged burdensomeness.

City Accepted Assignment of the Lease and Took Possession of the Entire Trust Property, Including That Under Lease, and therefore Any Alleged Ground for Not Accepting Such Assignment Becomes Moot.

The acts of the City on September 9, 1935, in succeeding to the trusteeship of the gas system, were only the culmination of an expressed and definite program and election which had been made and followed consistently for over six years. In defining the action of that date by Citizens Gas and City, it is therefore necessary to examine the City's expressed policy during the previous years. In every action and step, taken by the City preparatory to its succeeding Citizens Gas as trustee, is found a clearly expressed intention to take over the entire trust; the property which Citizens Gas had operated and in which it had an interest.

On March 20, 1929 the City, by resolution of its Board of Public Works (II R. 670 to 672, offered R. 327) first declared by formal action its election and purpose to exercise its right to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee of the public charitable trust. It there demanded of Citizens Gas "all rights, title, interest and ownership of whatever nature or character in and to the gas plant, mains and property" which it had. Demand was made that the latter company secure by mortgage, if possible, sufficient sums to retire and redeem its common stock and preferred stock and then convey said gas system to the City "subject to such mortgage and other legal obligations against said company" (II R. 671). The property, so demanded, included the leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas which had been an integral part of the system operated since 1913. Said demand was made a few days after two statutes prepared by City authorizing the transfer went into effect. (Appendix C and D.)

The above resolution of March 20 was served upon Citizens Gas, whose directors by resolution of April 3, 1929 (II R. 672-673, offered II R. 327) acknowledged said demand and "the right of the City to take over the property and assets of said Company," and authorized its officers to comply therewith.

Following said resolution of March 20, the next step taken by City to succeed as trustee was action by its Board of Directors for Utilities on May 7, 1935. By resolution of that date (III R. 822-830, offered II R. 327), it authorized the City's gas system revenue bonds which should be issued and sold by the City in the amount of $8,000,000, principal and interest on said bonds to be payable from, and be a charge only upon the net revenues derived from operation of the gas system to be "owned and/or operated by" the City. At the beginning of the resolution it was stated the purpose of the bond issue was to obtain funds "for the taking over of certain property held by Citizens Gas Company and/or in which it has an interest." (III R. 822, offered II R. 327.) It also provided that the City agreed to take all steps necessary to acquire the property of Citizens Gas and that when the City had accepted "the possession of the property operated by Citizens Gas Company, it will cause the same to be continuously operated as a gas system'' (III R. 828, offered II R. 327.) The form and tenor of the bonds so authorized was also set out in the resolution (III R. 825); and in the bond itself the purpose was stated in the exact language of the resolution quoted above.

Prior to the adoption of this resolution the Supreme Court of Indiana, by Judge Treanor, had decided the case of Williams v. Citizens Gas Company et al., 206 Ind. 338 (Dec. 1933). In the light of that decision, holding that the lease was valid and a part of the trust estate, the description of the property as that "operated by" Citizens Gas "and/or in which it has an interest" was obviously intended to include the leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas.

In connection with the sale of its said revenue bonds, the City issued a prospectus to invited bidders in May, 1935 (II R. 533-536, offered R. 518). It was there stated that the City was to take over and operate the property of Citizens Gas "subject to outstanding obligations." It also included the following statement in describing the gas system:

> "For over twenty-one years, gas has been supplied to the inhabitants of Indianapolis and neighboring communities solely through the system operated by Citizens Gas Company; a system having 867 miles of mains and 75,949 meters in use as of May, 1935."

Referring to the fact that the leased property included 531 miles of gas mains (I R. 196, offered II R. 387), the prospectus continued:

> "The system is in part owned by Citizens Gas Company and in part leased by it from Indianapolis Gas Company, which is not an operating Company. * * * The Citizens Gas Company owns approximately 40 per cent of the mains of the system", and that Indianapolis Gas owned approximately 60 per cent of the mains. (II R. 535, offered R. 518.)

The prospectus then continued with a statement descriptive of the details of the ninety-nine-year lease and of its terms and provisions (II R. 533-536, at 535; offered II R. 518).

Thereafter in July, 1935, in reliance upon statements in the prospectus, said City's revenue bonds were purchased by Halsey, Stuart & Company and Otis & Company, by whom they were later sold and distributed to the public. (II R. 486-488; offered II R. 420.)

By September 9, 1935, the City with the proceeds from the sale of its gas revenue bonds, had retired the common stock, preferred stock and bonds of Citizens Gas (II R. 634, 635; offered R. 326), and had performed other conditions precedent to its succession as trustee of the trust. No money was paid to Citizens Gas, the entire consideration being paid to stockholders and bondholders in the retirement of their stock and bonds, the stockholders receiving a sum completing full dividends of 10 per cent per annum for 25 years.

On this date of September 9, 1935, Citizens Gas executed and delivered to the City instruments transferring and conveying all the property of every kind and character owned by Citizens Gas, including the lease in question.

The four separate instruments then delivered to the City were:

(1) a deed covering all real estate owned by Citizens Gas (III R. 833; offered II R. 327);

(2) an instrument of transfer and assignment of its personal property (I R. 122-7; offered II R. 327);

(3) an assignment of the lease of property of Indianapolis Gas (I R. 127-9; offered II R. 327); and

(4) an assignment of the lease for space in an office building (III R. 835; offered II R. 327).

These instruments of conveyance, including the assignment of the 99-year lease, all expressly provided that they were made subject to all legal obligations of Citizens Gas. They were all received, recorded and retained by the City (II R. 330, 467-8). The City took immediate possession of all the property which had been operated by Citizens Gas, including that of Indianapolis Gas, and has thereafter continued the operation of the leased property as a unified part of the entire gas system.

Upon receiving said instruments of conveyance and assignment, the City, through its Directors for Utilities, passed its resolution for so-called "temporary use" of Indianapolis Gas property and its so-called "rejection of the lease." (I R. 202; offered II R. 432.) By these ex parte resolutions, City has since sought to nullify the express provisions of the instruments of conveyance and assignment it accepted, which provide that the property is transferred subject to the legal obligations of grantor; to annul all its acts during the six previous years, as well as the statutory provisions (Appendix C and D) authorizing and controlling its succession to the trusteeship and the trust, including this lease.

The City's right to the possession and operation of the property of Indianapolis Gas, which it assumed upon receiving the instrument assigning said lease, was solely by right of said assignment and as a successor-lessee under the lease. No consent was given by Indianapolis Gas to the City's so taking possession and assuming operation of the leased property. Three weeks later, on September 30, 1935, the City forwarded to Indianapolis Gas its check in the amount of interest falling due October 1 on its outstanding bonds, and stated that by so doing it waived no rights to claim that the lease was not enforceable against it nor did Indianapolis Gas, in accepting said check, waive its right to claim enforceability (III R. 968, 969; offered II R. 384-5). This money was accepted by Indianapolis Gas under these provisions of non-waiver and the bond interest was therewith paid.

It was not until March 2, 1936, that an agreement was entered into by the City and Indianapolis Gas under which it was provided that the City might continue to operate the property of Indianapolis Gas without prejudice to the position or rights of either party. It provided that during the life of the agreement the City should make deposits in escrow in a local bank of amounts equal to certain lease rentals, including the amount of interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds as it should become due (I R. 205 to 207; offered II R. 386). It also provided that said agreement should not constitute a waiver of any alleged rights of the parties under the lease (II R. 637; offered I R. 386).

Therefore, from September 9, 1935, until March 2, 1936, the City was in possession and operated the property of Indianapolis Gas under no authority or right other than as successor to Citizens Gas and assignee of the lease.

City, having thus taken possession and assumed operation of the entire gas plant, including the parts thereof which Citizens Gas had acquired both by purchase and by this lease (in compliance with statute, Appendix B), by its Common Council expressly enacted by ordinance:

> "That the public charitable trust in all such plant and property so delivered to and as accepted by said Board of Directors for Utilities be and is hereby received and accepted, and the City of Indianapolis hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out." (III R. 1018, 1019; offered II R. 429, 430.)

Under the above narrative of uncontradicted evidence, admitted by stipulation of all parties, it is conclusive that the City, in fact and in law, did accept and retain the assignment of the 99-year lease and, as such assignee, did enter into the possession and operation of said leasehold estate as a part and parcel of the trust res, the unified gas system, it was taking over. It must follow that any alleged grounds which the City might have had for refusing to accept the lease can not be an issue which is pertinent to the cause, or one which is here other than purely moot.

That the Lease Was Not Burdensome Was Determined by the Public Service Commission, and That It Was Not Invalid Upon Such Ground Was Judicially Adjudged by the Courts of Indiana, Which Said Determination and Judgments Are Conclusive Upon the Trust and the City Its Present Trustee

A.

The Order of the Public Service Commission

When the ninety-nine-year lease was executed (I R. 80; offered II R. 327), the Public Utilities Commission Act, Chapter 76, Indiana Acts 1913, known as the Shively-Spencer Utility Act, was in force. This act placed upon public utilities certain obligations as to furnishing service and providing proper facilities, and it also granted them certain rights of purchase and lease of property of other utilities giving similar service in the same community; such rights to be exercised solely under the control and direction and with the approval of the Public Service Commission.

Six sections of this act are set out under Appendices A, G, H, I, and L in this brief. Section 95½ of said act (Appendix A) provided that:

> "any public utility may also, with the consent of the holders of three-fourths of the capital stock, purchase or lease the property, plant and business or any part thereof of any other public utility at a price and on terms fixed by the commission."

It was under the authority and provisions of this statute that the joint petition of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas, seeking approval of the proposed lease and merger, was filed with the Public Service Commission. The City of Indianapolis, by its corporation counsel, participated (I R. 116; offered II R. 327) in the extended hearing had upon the petition. The lease was thus approved and ordered "at a price and on terms fixed by the commission."

In the course of the proceedings one Fishback, as a resident freeholder of Indianapolis and certificate holder of Citizens Gas and for the protection of the rights of all similarly interested (II R. 654, 656, 657; offered II R. 327), filed his intervening petition urging that the petition for approval of the lease be denied upon, among others, the following grounds:

> "First. The physical valuation and the earning capacity of the Indianapolis Gas Company are not such as to warrant the payment to it of the rental proposed to be charged the Citizens Company. (II R. 654.)
>
> "Fourth. The Citizens Gas Company has no power to make a lease covering a period longer than the term of its existence. It not before, by dividends and interests, then at the end of 25 years the certificates of stock are to be cancelled and the corporation wound up. (II R. 656.) * * *
>
> "I contend that the Citizens Gas Company is without power to make lease binding on the City of Indianapolis for a period of 74 years after the company goes out of existence." (II R. 657; offered II R. 327.)

After a protracted hearing, the Commission on October 1, 1913, made its finding and order approving the lease with certain modifications, among which was the reduction of rent paid to common stockholders of Indianapolis Gas by way of dividends, from 7% to 6%. In the course of its finding and order the Commission stated:

> "The two plants are so constructed and laid out as to adapt the two to a single working plant of great efficiency, and under one management they can be operated at a great saving as compared with the cost of operating them as separate and competitive plants.
>
> "The valuation of the Plant of the Indianapolis Gas Company is, in the opinion of the Commission, sufficient to justify, under the circumstances, a rental such as is proposed in the subjoined lease." (I R. 117-118; offered II R. 327.)

Following the order of October 1, Fishback filed his petition for rehearing, contending among other things:

> (3) "The rental ordered and permitted to be paid by the terms of the order and lease, is unreasonable and unlawful, and will result in a waste and misapplication of the funds, earnings, and property of the Citizens Gas Company, and an irreparable injury to its stockholders and certificate holders." * * *
>
> (5b) "The trustees and directors and officers of the Citizens Gas Company are not authorized by law or otherwise to enter into such a lease for a period of ninety-nine years." * * *
> (6) "The fulfillment of the terms and conditions of the lease and order will render impossible the fulfillment of its contract with the City of Indianapolis, and such order and lease impairs the obligation of the contract between the company and said City as it relates to the taking over and ownership of the property and plant of the Citizens Gas Company by the City."

(7) Consent to the lease had not been given by the City.

(9) The order of the Commission was contrary to law. (II R. 659-660; offered II R. 327.)

On November 28, the Commission denied said petition for rehearing (II R. 660-663), and thereupon Citizens Gas took possession of the plant and property of Indianapolis Gas, which it continuously operated thereafter under said lease until September 9, 1935, when it conveyed and assigned to the City all and singular of its property, including the leasehold, subject to its legal obligations (I R. 122-127; III R. 833; offered II R. 327).

The decision of the Commission, under the settled law of Indiana, is conclusive in this collateral action upon the questions of fact as to whether the lease or merger was in the public interest and a proper and reasonable exercise by Citizens Gas of its powers as trustee of a public charitable trust, which was at the same time a public utility amenable to the laws of the state controlling such utilities. It is also conclusive as to the fairness and reasonableness of the rental and length of term provided in said lease, both of which were expressly committed by the statute to determination by the Commission.

Citizens Gas, in a memorandum on admissibility of certain evidence filed with the District Court in the trial of these causes, stated in discussing the order of the Public Service Commission:

> "The order expressly found that the execution of the lease and the merger did create greater efficiency and procure the operation at a great saving. Moreover, the order of the Commission must necessarily have been based upon the conclusion that the making of the lease and merger were in the public interest; and, furthermore, was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas Company as a public utility."

The order of the Commission is, furthermore, not subject to collateral attack in the courts except upon the ground of fraud, and it is to be noted that no attack has been made by the City, either in the trial of these causes or in any prior litigation, upon the motives or the judgment of either the Directors and Trustees of Citizens Gas in making the lease, or of the Public Service Commission in ordering the same. No suspicion of fraud has ever been alleged or intimated by the City in connection with these proceedings.

The rule announced by the Supreme Court of Indiana in Public Service Commission v. City of Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 43, has never been qualified and is now the settled law of Indiana. It is stated in the opinion at page 43:

> "If the Commission had jurisdiction and kept within it, and its action was not vitiated by fraud, its decisions of all questions of fact as to the value of the properties, the sufficiency of the income to pay interest and dividends on the bonds and stock authorized, the petitioner's qualification as a purchaser, and all other questions which it was required to decide as preliminary to taking action in the matter, is conclusive on the courts in a collateral action."

City at pages 70 and 71 of its brief accepted the above announced rule as to the conclusiveness of the Commission's order upon the reasonableness of the lease terms and that it was made in the public interest. The order applied to a public utility. How it could be in the public interest and at the same time not in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust (the public) is not explained.

As a defendant in the Williams case, City filed in the trial court a joint motion with Citizens Gas to strike out parts of the complaint and there urged as reasons therefor:

> "First. These subdivisions of the plaintiffs' complaint challenge a lease executed by Citizens Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company and approved by the Public Service Commission of Indiana. The Public Service Commission of Indiana has express authority to approve leases between two operating public utilities and it appearing from the averments of the complaint that such lease did have the approval of the Public Service Commission, the action of that Commission can not be collaterally attacked." * * * (II R. 806; offered II R. 328.)
> "Third. It appearing that the lease so approved by the Public Service Commission has been in full force and effect for nearly 17 years and that many millions of dollars have been expended in reliance upon its validity, all persons including plaintiffs (if they have any standing under any circumstances) are estopped to question the validity of the same." (II R. 807; offered II R. 328.)

The jurisdiction of the Commission to authorize execution of the lease is clearly established, and in view of the above and controlling law of Indiana defining the force and effect of orders of the Commission, it follows that the City may not collaterally attack the order and findings of the Commission in this cause by now alleging and seeking to prove that "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome."

Being deprived by law of the right to now present the issue of burdensomeness, the refusal of the Court of Appeals to remand the cause for further hearing on this issue did not deprive petitioner of any rights of due process of law.

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282

Immediately upon denial by the Public Service Commission of his petition for rehearing and its order approving the lease, Fishback instituted suit in the Marion Superior Court of Indiana as a resident freeholder of the City and certificate holder of Citizens Gas in behalf of himself and all others so interested.

The purpose of the action as defined by the Supreme Court was:

> "to vacate and set aside an order of the Public Service Commission authorizing the Citizens Gas Company to lease the plant and property of the Indianapolis Gas Company for a period of ninety-nine years, and to operate it with its own plant and property as part of a consolidated system. The action also sought the cancellation of the lease made by authority of the order, and an injunction against appellees, the two gas companies, to prevent them from carrying out the provisions of the order." (193 Ind. 282, at 283-4.)

Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas, City of Indianapolis, and the Public Service Commission were defendants (II R. 648; offered II R. 328). The complaint set out the articles of incorporation of Citizens Gas (650), its franchise contract with the City (651), and the form of its trustee certificates (649). Thus before the court were all the instruments which spelled out the Public Charitable Trust, and as a resident freeholder of Indianapolis suing for all others, the plaintiff was necessarily suing as a beneficiary of that trust and for all other beneficiaries.

The complaint alleged, among others, the following grounds to support the relief prayed for (II R. 648-668; offered II R. 328):

a. "The rental and fixed charges ordered and required to be paid by the terms of the lease and order as hereinbefore set forth are unreasonable and unlawful and their payment will result in a waste and misapplication of the funds, earnings and property of the Citizens Gas Company and an irreparable injury to its stock and certificate holders, including plaintiff." (II R. 665)

b. "The trustees, directors and officers of Citizens Gas were not and are not by law or otherwise authorized to enter into such a lease as hereinabove referred to for a period of 99 years." (II R. 668)

c. That City did not consent or join in the execution of the lease (II R. 665).

d. "The obligations taken on by Citizens Gas Company under said order and lease, to pay the interest on the bonds and dividends on the stock of Indianapolis Gas Company for a period of ninety-nine years, impairs the obligation of the contract existing between the Citizens Gas Company and this plaintiff and other stockholders, and between the company and the City of Indianapolis, in the following particulars:

"1. It constitutes such a lien and incumbrance upon the property and earnings of said company, that the company at the end of twenty-five years from the date of its franchise, can not > mortgage such property for the purpose of raising funds from which to pay the stockholders of said company, including this plaintiff, the par value of the stock held by them and the balance of the unpaid accumulated ten per cent annual dividends." (II R. 665-666) (Offered II R. 328)

Defendants, including the City, filed motions to strike out parts of the complaint (II R. 624; offered II R. 327), which motions were in part granted and in part denied. Thereafter demurrers to the complaint were filed by Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas and Members of the Public Service Commission, while an answer in general denial was filed by the defendant City. (II R. 625)

The demurrers were sustained and, the plaintiff refusing to plead further, final judgment was rendered (after suit had pended for seven years, II R. 625) in favor of all defendants except City (II R. 625), as to which plaintiff dismissed on the day of judgment (II R. 624-627; offered II R. 326). The attempted appeal by plaintiff was dismissed by the Supreme Court of Indiana and it has been stipulated by all the parties to this cause that the judgment of the Marion Superior Court is now in full force and effect. (II R. 626; offered II R. 327).

It is the settled rule of Indiana, as it is generally, that the final determination of a matter by a court having jurisdiction forever sets at rest the questions determined and also every other matter which might have been litigated under the issues in the case, as between the parties and those in privity with them.

For a judgment is binding not only upon the actual parties to the judgment but upon all who succeed them and are their privies in interest.

Vinson v. Graham (C. C. A. 10), 44 Fed. (2d) 772, 775-776.

The suit, being a class suit and brought by plaintiff as a resident of Indianapolis and for all others so situated, they being beneficiaries of the trust, the judgment entered therein must necessarily be binding upon not only the then trustees but all succeeding ones, and the trust itself.

Burns' Rev. Ind. Statutes 1933, ss. 2-213, 2-220.

Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas were both parties to the judgment and as to them, and those in privity, the judgment must be conclusive of the decided issues, viz., that

(a) The lease was not made invalid because of the alleged burdensomeness.

(b) Citizens Gas had power and authority to enter into the lease, and the trust with all beneficiaries are bound by it.

(c) The lease was not invalid because of the findings and order of the Commission not being sustained by sufficient evidence or binding at law.

City contends that, by reason of dismissal as to it just prior to judgment, it is not now bound by the judgment. This contention overlooks the admitted facts that the trust itself was a party to the judgment in the person of the then beneficiaries and the then trustee, Citizens Gas, and that thereby the trust and its beneficiaries and trustees, then and in the future, are bound; and that the City was a party to the proceedings until the day of judgment and had joined issue by filing its denial of the allegations of the complaint averring that the rentals of the lease were excessive and in substance burdensome upon the trust. The opportunity was given it to join the plaintiff in claiming the lease invalid on the ground set out in the complaint. Had it joined issue with Indianapolis Gas, its then co-defendant, by a counter-claim alleging the invalidity of the lease for any reason, it could readily have precluded its dismissal on the day of judgment. It had been in court for seven years and the issues were presented to it which it accepted by its answer of denial. It may not now contend that the issues, which it has itself raised by its counter-claim in the cause now at bar, were not in their entirety presented to and accepted by it there.

However, had the City not been a party at any stage in the proceedings of the Fishback case, it would be as equally bound by the judgment therein as is Citizens Gas. It is axiomatic that an adjudication of title is binding, not only upon the owners at a particular time who were parties to the judgment, but also upon all those who subsequently acquire title under and through them.

Grantham Realty Corp. v. Bowers, 215 Ind. 672.

Were the rule otherwise, titles either of fee or leasehold estate might never be quieted by judgment for a period longer than the life of the particular owner, lessor or lessee who might be party to the judgment. Not only was Citizens Gas bound by this judgment, by which it sought to quiet its title in the leasehold estate, but also the City or any other successor trustee who might have become its grantee and assignee is bound, especially when taking "subject to all legal obligations" of the grantor.

City also contends that the binding effect of that judgment is not conclusive upon the parties to this cause by reason of the fact that Chase, the present trustee and representative of the bondholders of Indianapolis Gas, was not a party to that proceeding. It is true that neither the Chase bank nor its predecessor trustee nor any other creditor of Indianapolis Gas was a party to the Fishback suit. However, their presence or absence from that cause could in no wise diminish the conclusive effect of the judgment that, as between the trustee of the public charitable trust, the trust itself and this respondent Indianapolis Gas as well as their successors and assigns, the lease was a valid and enforceable obligation for its term and according to its tenor.

Issue in the instant cause was definitely joined in the District Court as to whether or not the matters presented and decided in the Fishback case were or were not controlling as between Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas and City in the present determination concerning the validity of the lease (I R. 10, 11, 14, Sec. 9, 14; I. R. 151-153, 159-161, Sec. 14; I R. 220).

It is submitted that the City may not now assert, as against this respondent, that the lease is invalid and unenforceable for any reason or on any ground which it has alleged in its counterclaim. It may not now collaterally attack either the judgment in the Fishback case or the order of the Commission by relitigating the question whether the lease is burdensome.

This decision of the Superior Court in Fishback v. Public Service Commission is conclusive in determining what is the law of Indiana.

West v. American Tel. & T. Co., 85 L. Ed. (adv.) 146;

Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Field, 85 L. Ed. (adv.) 176.

It clearly determined that none of the objections urged by Fishback as a beneficiary on behalf of the trust estate were well taken under the law of Indiana and that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease in question "at a price and on terms fixed by the Commission" was valid and binding.

City is, therefore, deprived of no right of due process by the failure of the Circuit Court of Appeals to order this cause remanded to the District Court for further hearing upon an alleged burdensomeness of the lease.

C.

William v. Citizens Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448.

Allen G. Williams and another were suing in this action as beneficiaries of the public charitable trust, in behalf of all beneficiaries, and seeking to have the lease declared invalid on the ground that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease was invalid, that the lease itself was burdensome upon the trust, and in effect upon allegation of every ground which has been alleged by the City in this present cause, either in answer to the complaint or in its counterclaim against this respondent and others (II R. 761 to 803; cf. R. 141 to 187; offered II R. 328).

All of the parties to the cause now at bar were parties to that litigation, and every issue presented here was in issue there and was put at rest by the final judgment in that cause. In statement of facts already before the Court is a full and detailed discussion of the pleadings, issues and matters determined in Williams v. Citizens Gas (II R. 630-633; offered R. 326; also R. 761-822; offered II R. 329). To re-state them here is unnecessary. With what is said in the Chase brief as to the effect of the Williams judgment, this respondent is in accord. It is submitted that the judgment in the Williams case is conclusive of all matters here presented, both as a declaration of the law of Indiana and as res adjudicata.

City contends in substance that it is not bound by that judgment for the reason that it had not become trustee of the public charitable trust at the time the judgment was entered, and also that it is not bound because of a change of conditions which has occured since said judgment. These contentions are purely fatuous. The City in fact had adopted the resolution and given notice that it was exercising its right to take over the trust on March 20, 1929 (II R. 628 (12), 670; offered II R. 327) before Allen G. Williams, et al., commenced their suit as beneficiaries under the trust on March 12, 1930 (II R. 630 (14), offered II R. 327). The only subsequent change which occurred in the administration of the public charitable trust was simply the substitution of the City for Citizens Gas as trustee of such trust and the transfer of the legal title. An obligation of a trust, validly created by its then trustee, is in no wise affected by a change of trustees which may occur either through death, resignation, removal or assignment. The statement in the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is obviously correct:

> "If the lease is valid, the rental obligation binds the trust and it matters little that a new trustee succeeds the old one. Otherwise any obligation incurred by a particular trustee would cease with the death, resignation or removal of that trustee: such a rule would lead inevitably to ridiculous results."

The rule as stated is a basic one underlying the successful functioning of all trusts and no authority has been cited by City, nor can any be found, holding otherwise.

In bringing the representative suit, Williams, et al., were acting for all beneficiaries of the charitable trust, as was expressly provided by the Indiana Statute:

> Burns Ann. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1933, sec. 2-213, 2-220;

See also:

> Gaiser v. Buck, 203 Ind. 9, 11, 13;
> Siegel v. Archer, 212 Ind. 599;
> Englehart Estate v. Larimer, 211 Ind. 218.

In Siegal v. Archer, 212 Ind. 599, it is stated at page 626:

> "One or more beneficiaries of a trust could sue on behalf of all to test the binding and valid force of a contract entered into by the trustee affecting the entire trust and making the trustees parties defendant; and where the trustees (as here) actively > joined in the defense of such suit on the merits and procurred the court to sustain a demurrer to the complaint on which final judgment was rendered against such plaintiff beneficiaries by which the contract was adjudged valid, such judgment against the beneficiaries is binding upon the trustees who were thus made parties to the action."

Had any doubts remained after the judgment in Fishback v. Public Service Commission as to the validity of the lease, such doubts were forever put at rest by the decision in this Williams case. All clouds upon the title of the trust to this leasehold estate were removed and it was, and should be, conclusive for all time that the lease is valid and enforceable against all parties to the lease, their successors and assigns, and against the res of the public charitable trust. This final decision in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448, of the Supreme Court of Indiana became and is the law of Indiana upon the subject and is binding upon all parties and, under the rule of this court as announced in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, also upon courts of the United States.

Therefore, by reason of the order of the Public Service Commission finding that the terms of the lease were in all respects reasonable and beneficial to the trust and approving its execution; by reason of the judgments in both Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., and Williams v. Citizens Gas Co., et al., it necessarily results that the City is precluded in this action from defending against the lease obligations upon the ground that "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome."

City would seem to argue at page 39 of its brief that it was denied the right to present proof in support of allegations in its counterclaim that the order of the commission and the judgments in the Fishback and Williams cases were not res judicata. This is denied by the record. Not only were these issues not reserved in the pre-trial order of the District Court, but as the trial progressed, evidence was introduced by stipulation of the parties (Exhibit 1, II R. 613-639; II R. 648-668; offered II R. 326-7-8) describing the pleadings in the Fishback case and what issues were joined and what the judgment was (II R. 624-627; offered R. 327). By a like stipulation evidence to the extent of 61 pages (II R. 761-822; offered R. 328) was heard descriptive of the pleadings in the Williams case and 3 pages more (II R. 630-633; R. 327) describing the issues, decision and judgment were all introduced in evidence. Furthermore, City requested of the District Court the adoption of special findings of fact and a conclusion of law that it was not bound by the adjudications in the above cases (III R. 1089-1092; 1102) which requests were acted upon and adopted by the trial court and written into paragraph two of the decree appealed from. (III R. 1175-1179, 1190-1192).

The City was therefore fully heard in the District Court as to whether or not the several judgments pleaded were res judicata of the enforceability against it of the lease.

City has had its day in court on three separate former occasions, and again in the case at bar by cross-complaint, answer, scores of pages of evidence, special findings and conclusions of law relative to such order and former adjudications. Its present contention that due process has been denied to it in this cause is wholly without substance.

Both City and Citizens Gas are precluded by laches from now asserting, after acceptance for 22 years, that the lease is unenforceable or invalid according to its terms and provisions.

Had the litigation of the Fishback and Williams suits never been instituted or carried to judgment; aside from the representations made since 1913 by Citizens Gas in the sale of Indianapolis Gas bonds in the principal amount of approximately $2,000,000, that the interest of said bonds was guaranteed by Citizens Gas; aside from the statements of the City made in its election to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee of the trust; aside from the express provisions in the instruments of conveyance and assignments under which City accepted the property subject to all liabilities of its predecessor trustee; and aside from the statements made to the purchasers of its revenue bonds, upon which they relied, that the trust property included a leasehold estate forming a substantial part of the gas system they are to operate; — ASIDE from and ignoring all of these former proceedings, statements and actions, the question is presented whether City, succeeding trustee, could now for the first time after this period of the trust's acquiescence in the lease and use of the leased property, assert that the trust is no longer obligated to the undertakings there set out on the ground that the lease was or is burdensome, and seek the aid of equity to that end. This respondent contends that the answer must be in the negative.

No principal of equity has been longer or more firmly established than the one of laches which denies relief to a party when the seeking of that relief has been unreasonably delayed and where, after a period of acquiescence in the alleged wrongs, such changes have occurred which render the granting of such relief inequitable and contrary to the public policy.

We have seen that City in this cause is before the court solely as trustee of the trust and that it stands in the shoes of Citizens Gas, its predecessor. As such trustee it holds such rights and is subject to such liabilities as were those of its predecessor. The change in administrators of the trust has neither added to nor detracted from the rights or liabilities of the trust, and in the discussion of laches, as precluding the relief here sought by the present trustee, no distinction can properly be made between Citizens Gas and City.

In the twenty-two years during which the trustee has operated the leased property and acquiesced in the lease, it has extended the mains of the leased property in such manner and in such directions as it itself alone determined subject only to a limited control exercised by the City as a municipality. Since 1913 Indianapolis Gas has been a non-operating company with no control over its property or power to maintain it in the relative competitive position with that of the property owned in fee by the trust such as existed at that time (II R. 622, 3; offered R. 326).

It can not be supposed that the local group of Indianapolis citizens would have seriously entertained the request of Citizens Gas that it purchase the capital stock of Indianapolis Gas to enable a lease to be executed if the lease were to mean a unified operation for only twenty-two years. No utility would surrender its property to the complete control of its competitor to be operated as its competitor saw fit for only twenty-two years and then to be returned, and no business man would invest in property about to undergo such a future. No surer way of self annihilation could be conceived. Certainly no such arrangement was in the contemplation of the Commission when it ordered and approved the lease in this case.

After accepting all the benefits incidental to a unified operation of the gas system without competition, the trust now seeks discharge from the obligations incidental to said lease upon the ground that "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome."

In Indiana, as it is generally, a party who has entered into a contract without fraud can not defend against the obligations thereby created by reason of the fact that in subsequent course of events the consideration moving from one party may, either in the opinion of that party or in fact, have become burdensome. No party to a contract may be relieved of obligations created thereby simply because he subsequently believes that his bargain was not so advantageous as he had supposed when entering into the agreement.

In Mullins v. Hawkins, 141 Ind. 363, at 366, the court states the rule:

> "Where a party voluntarily and without fraud or deception enters into a contract and receives all he contracted for, he can not be relieved on the ground of inadequacy or want of consideration."

Neither law nor equity will inquire into the adequacy of bona fide consideration after it has been accepted and utilized for over twenty-two years.

In Hoyt v. Latham, 143 U. S. 553, at 567, this court spoke as follows:

> "In cases of actual fraud or of want of knowledge of the facts, the law is very tolerant of delay; but where the circumstances of the case negative this idea, and the transaction is sought to be impeached only by reason of the confidential relations between the parties, and the cestuis que trust have ample notice of the facts, they ought not to wait and make their action in setting aside the sale dependent upon the question whether it is likely to prove a profitable speculation. As the question whether the sale should be vacated or not depends upon the facts as they existed at the time of the sale, so in taking proceedings to avoid such sale, the plaintiff should act upon his information as to such facts, and not delay for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is likely to be benefitted by a raise in the property, since that would practically amount to throwing upon the purchaser any losses he might sustain by a fall, and denying him the benfit of a possible rise."

City, when previously defending the lease before the Supreme Court of Indiana, in the Williams case, stated:

> "19. The lapse of seventeen years without action by the inhabitants and tax payers of Indianapolis to challenge the validity of the lease is such laches as to preclude the granting of the relief here prayed for." (III R. 954; offered II R. 420).

and also

> "But appellant ignores the transactions of seventeen years during which the Citizens Gas Company has openly held possession of the leased property and seeks to wipe out the very existence of the lease without any regard to the equities of the interested parties, yet that lapse of time constitutes such laches as to preclude equitable relief." (III R. 961; offered II R. 420).

Therefore, aside from all other considerations, City is now precluded by laches from seeking avoidance of the obligations of the lease upon alleged grounds that it is burdensome. For this additional reason no merit supports City's contention that it has been denied due process of law by failure of the Court of Appeals to remand the cause for further hearing upon that alleged issue.

Apart from all the above considerations of the issue of alleged burdensomeness of the lease, that it should be raised at all in this cause is amazing.

It will be noted that from a plant represented in 1913 by $1,250,000 of stock and $1,247,000 of bonds (II R. 609, ll. 15-34; offered II R. 420, 564) Citizens Gas had grown in the 22 years of joint operation of the combined property to own in fee property of which the reproduction cost was appraised at $17,607,310 and the "depreciated physical value" at $13,431,230 (I R. 196; offered II R. 327).

Under its operation of the entire system by virtue of the lease and being relieved of burdensome competition, the City was enabled as trustee to issue and sell to the public bonds in the amount of $8,000,000 (II R. 486; offered II R. 420) all without the security of any mortgage on the gas property, without being a charge in any way upon the taxing powers of the City as a municipality, and dependent for the payment of both principal and interest solely upon the net revenues of the gas system. This in itself is high tribute by public opinion to the earning capacity of the gas system, 62% of whose mains were operated under the lease. (I R. 195, 196; II R. 535; offered II R. 359).

When it is further recalled that this public appraisal of these bonds was founded upon and they were sold in reliance on the statements of City in its prospectus for bids (II R. 533 to 536): as to the rentals required under the lease to be paid and what had actually been paid the year before (1934), and upon representation that the leased property was a part of and would continue to be a part of the gas system for the duration of the lease, whose terms and provisions were in detail described, — the allegations in City's pleadings of burdensomeness, made only a few months after the sale of its bonds as above narrated, are truly startling.

Surely by no art of legerdemain may a contract 22 years old become suddenly burdensome within only a few months after it was so clearly demonstrated and admitted to be a thing of great value.

It may not be denied that the facts here narrated, all uncontradicted, conclusively confirm the judgment of the trustees in 1913 that the execution of the lease would be to the advantage and best interests of the public the settlors of the trust and the trust itself. It should be noted that Citizens Gas, original trustee has not in this cause either alleged or intimated that the provisions of the lease were unreasonable or burdensome in any particular, or that the 22 years' operation under it had not fullfilled all the hopes and expectations of its then trustee as to the benefits and advantages to be derived by the public charitable trust from its execution.

IV.

The Ninety-nine Year Lease Was Properly Held to Be Valid and Enforceable According to Its Terms Against the Trust, Citizens Gas, Former Trustee, and City as Present Trustee.

This respondent is in entire accord with the contentions made for its bondholders at pages 56 to 74 of Chase's brief, and we shall seek to avoid repetition so far as possible of matters there stated.

The grounds alleged by City (Br. pp. 43-52) do, however, present distinct challenge to certain admitted facts and the accepted rules of law determining the validity and enforceability of the lease against it, as trustee, and the trust. The discussion here will be directed to the numbered points set out at pages 44 and 45 in City's Brief.

1, 7 and 14.

City here contends that the leasehold estate and property of Indianapolis Gas never became part of the trust res and that it did not accept a part of the res and refuse to accept another part. The contention that the trust res did not include the leasehold estate in Indianapolis Gas property is contradicted by the actual operation of the leased property by the trust as an integral part of the gas system from 1913 to the present time. No distinction has existed during all such period in the use of the properties held in fee by Citizens Gas and that held in leasehold estate. The entire system has been operated and used by the trustee in performing the functions of the public utility and in carrying out the purposes of the trust as defined in franchise and Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas.

Not only is this contention of City denied by these overt acts but it is also denied by every statement made by either Citizens Gas or City during this entire period. Both City and Citizens Gas stipulated with all parties in the Todd case that:

> "Defendant Company (Citizens Gas) also is the owner of a certain leasehold estate in and to the property of the Indianapolis Gas Company as created by a certain contract of lease for ninety-nine years dated September 30, 1913 and recorded in Miscellaneous Record 78, page 257 to 278 inclusive, of the records in the Recorder's Office, Marion County, State of Indiana." (III R. 943; offered II R. 333, par. 2.)

During the trial of the Williams case the City also stated in a motion to strike out certain parts of the complaint:

> "If the lease is valid, the leasehold interest created thereby constitutes a part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as the property owned by Citizens Gas Company in its own right. If for any reason the lease is invalid, it will fall outside the scope of the trust." (II R. 808)

Had the court in the Fishback or in the Williams cases held the lease invalid then, as the City properly stated, it would be "outside the scope of the trust." But they having adjudged the lease to be a valid and enforceable one, then clearly it became part of the public charitable trust and is subject to be administered in the same way as the property owned outright by Citizens Gas. When the statements of the City made in 1935 in its prospectus describing the gas plant revenue bonds, as well as statements previously made in the pleadings and to the courts in each the Fishback, Williams, Todd and Cotter cases are recalled, as well as the operation of the property as a unified system since 1913, the present contention of the City must appear only an afterthought as a ground for its unsupportable position.

The statement in City's point 14 at page 45 of its brief, that it has accepted the entire trust res but has at the same time rejected the lease, is thus wholly denied by the facts. It is also shown to be erroneous by the settled rule of law that a designated trustee, while having no obligations to accept the trust, may not accept it in part and reject it in part. An acceptance in part is an acceptance in whole, and in the instant case it has already been shown that City has accepted the trust in its entirety, including the lease.

No fixed date existed for the expiration of the term of trusteeship of Citizens Gas, the initial trustee. Under the provisions of the trust it had no fixed period of tenure. It was not to transfer the property to a succeeding trustee until its stockholders had been paid in full their investment with interest at 10% and it was only provided that the City might within 25 years succeed as trustee upon the stockholders being so paid either from earnings of the company or at the end of 25 years through financing to be effected by the City. No obligation rested upon City to succeed to such trusteeship, and had it not done so the trusteeship of Citizens Gas would not have ended. It is well established that equity will not permit a public charitable trust to fail by failure of any particular prospective successor trustee to accept the trust. The trust continues in perpetuity and neither the length of the term of any trustee nor the identity of its successor can have any effect upon the obligations of the trust validly created. The exercise by the City of its option and its acceptance of conveyance of the trust, subject to all legal obligation, was merely to substitute a new Trustee.

The Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas and its franchise, as well as its charter (I R. 81, 95; offered II R. 327), deny City's statement that the original trustee was without power to make the 99 year lease. No rule is more firmly settled, or necessary for the proper administration of trusts, than that which holds that a trustee shall have such powers as are necessary and reasonable to the carrying out and performing of the general objects of the trust. Had the public utility act of 1913 not been passed giving the express power, Citizens Gas would yet have been vested with such power by its Articles, Charter and Franchise.

The City at page 52 of its brief admits that "Citizens Gas, in its franchise contract, bound itself to extend its lines and mains so that 'all inhabitants of said City may be supplied with gas for fuel and lighting purposes when they may reasonably require the same'." By no other means than by purchase of additional property or by leasing it could Citizens Gas have fulfilled this obligation.

The Public Utility Act, and particularly Section 95½ (Appendix A) thereof, has already been sufficiently presented to the court and were it conceivable that no power had existed in Citizens Gas to make this lease before the enactment of that law, no doubt could remain thereafter that such power was given to Citizens Gas as a public utility.

That the power and authority of Citizens Gas to function as a public utility was not affected by the fact that it held its property as a Trustee of a public trust is conclusively decided by the following language of Judge Treanor at page 457 of the opinion in the Williams case, 206 Ind. 448:

> "It is necessary to recognize that Citizens Gas is a public utility and as such is amendable to the law to the same extent as any other public utility * * * nor can any beneficial interest of appellant and members of his class in the property or business of Citizens Gas preclude the State from exercising all control over the affairs of Citizens Gas which the State has power to exercise by reason that Citizens Gas is a public utility."

The power of Citizens Gas, the initial trustee, to execute this 99 year lease may not now be seriously or successfully challenged.

Only General Statutes and What They Provide As to Everybody Constitute Any Part of the Charter of Citizens Gas

The Constitution of Indiana provides that "Corporations other than banking shall not be created by special act, but may be formed under general laws," and Citizens Gas could not be an exception.

> Const. Ind., Art. 11, sec. 13;
> Marion Trust Co. v. Bennett, 169 Ind. 346, 350.

The Statute of Indiana under which Citizens Gas was organized (Appendix F; Acts 1905, pp. 434, 435) authorized the formation of a corporation "to carry on any of the following named purposes," six in number, if the persons organizing it would "make, sign, and acknowledge * * * a certificate * * * which shall state (1) the corporate name * * * (2) the object or objects of its promotion, which shall include any or all of the purposes included in any one of the above subdivisions of this section, (3) the amount of capital stock, (4) the term of its existence (not to exceed 50 years), (5) number of directors and the names * * * for the first year, and (6) the name of the city or town in which its principal place of business is to be located, and file the same * * *"

Citizens Gas provided in its articles that "the term of existence shall be 50 years" (I R. 99, XIII; offered II R. 327), and that its "object" should "be to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power" (I R. 95, III; offered II R. 327), which was the second, numbered "(b)" of the six purposes for any one of which incorporation was authorized.

There was no statutory authority whatever (and never has been) for assumption by this public utility corporation, as such, of any trust relation or duties. And under the law of Indiana all that was written into the Articles of Incorporation not expressly directed by the statute to be therein was and is void as to the corporation itself, except only as constituting a private contract between the promoters and stockholders subscribing thereto.

Shaw v. Bankers N. L. I., 61 Ind. App. 346, 354, 355;
Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 490, 495.

And under said law the "Charter" of the corporation, and all that determines its powers and duties as a corporation consists of the general law of the State and what that general law has directly authorized to be in its articles.

Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 495.

But in addition to 12 lines of the Articles of Citizens Gas which stated the facts authorized by the statute, the promoters also wrote into its Articles other provisions extending to more than twelve times as much additional (1500 words in 9 long sections) of a private agreement concerning the disposition of the company's earnings, first to pay all investors 10% per annum so long as they should hold stock; second, to repay all stockholders by the end of 25 years the full amounts invested; third, to give the City an option at the end of 25 years to pay any balance due the stockholders; and fourth, on the stockholders receiving back the amounts invested, with 10% per annum thereon, at the end of 25 years to convey the "gas plant and property to said City subject to" obligations incurred in obtaining money paid to the stockholders, "and other legal obligations against said company" (I R. 98, 99, X, XII; offered II R. 327). Similar contract stipulations had been written into the Franchise Contract between the City and the assignors of Citizens Gas (I R. 81 to 95; offered II R. 327), and were written into the stock subscriptions (II R. 766, 767) and into the certificates issued for shares of stock (II R. 767, 768; offered II R. 328). And in an action by stockholders asserting their absolute ownership of the property accumulated by Citizens Gas it was decided that a Public Charitable Trust had been created in whatever interest they had as stockholders in excess of cumulative dividends of 10% per annum, plus the return of all they invested, but subject to legal obligations and bona fide indebtedness.

That the City did not sign the lease in 1913 or was not named as a party is true, but no support is given City's present contention thereby.

Obviously the City did not sign the lease in 1913 because it had no connection with the administration of the trust at that time. Citizens Gas was then operating as a public utility and sole trustee and it alone could by the lease create the leasehold estate. Furthermore, at the time of the execution no certainty existed that the City would ever succeed to the trusteeship. It had no obligation to do so and no expression or election to exercise its right of succession was made until the resolution of the City's Board of Public Works of March 20, 1929.

The lease, however, did bind Citizens Gas, the original trustee "itself, its successors and assigns"; and as such successor and assignee City as trustee is equally bound with Citizens Gas to the performance of its obligations.

This respondent has already discussed in this brief the acceptance of the assignment of the lease by the City and its taking possession and assuming operation of the leased property. The City may not contend that it could voluntarily receive property under conditions expressly set out in the instruments of conveyance and then immediately thereafter deny the same by ex parte action and have such action clothed with validity by law. One may not purchase property and immediately upon its acceptance, resolve not to pay the purchase price. If the conditions attached to the instruments of conveyance, or the price of the property purchased, is not satisfactory, the grantee or the purchaser should accept neither the conveyance nor the property. Once accepted, the liabilities incidental thereto may not be destroyed by wishful thinking, however formal may be its ex parte expression.

From pages 45 to 48 City argues in its brief that support is given its present position by Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129, of the Indiana Acts of 1905, the Cities and Towns Act.

These sections of this act have no application whatever to any question presented in this appeal. They are a limitation only upon contracts under which direct obligations of a City, as a municipal corporation, are created and which become a charge upon the taxing powers of the municipality. They pertain to agreements such as for lighting streets or furnishing heat to municipal institutions.

Fox v. City of Bicknell, 193 Ind. 537.

Were this act any inhibition upon the activities of the City as a trustee in administering this trust, a serious cloud would fall upon the validity of the gas plant revenue bonds issued by the City itself which do not mature for many years beyond the period set out in this statute. (II R. 539; offered II R. 404)

The cases cited by City: Gas Light, Etc. Co. v. City of New Albany, 156 Ind. 406, and City of Indianapolis v. Wann, 144 Ind. 175, offer no support to its contention. In the former case, the City of New Albany made a contract for 23 years for the lighting of its streets and granted a franchise to carry out said contract. It exceeded the then statutory period for which the City might contract for lighting and was therefore held invalid. In the second case, a contract was held void by a statute which prohibited city agreements that undertook payments "beyond existing appropriations". The undertakings to pay for the lights was in each case a direct obligation of the city and therefore amenable to the particular statute. It will be noted that when these early cases were decided, the State had not yet taken away power of cities to grant franchises to utilities and conferred it upon the Public Service Commission, as was done in the Acts 1913, Chapter 76. (Appendix E, G, H, I)

City of Vincennes v. Vincennes Traction Co., 187 Ind. 498, 503; Public Service Com. v. City of Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 47.

City, before both District Court and Circuit Court of Appeals, urged this statute as a defense to its present position and in each instance it was denied. The District Court in its opinion characterized this ground of defense as follows:

> "The lease was not an agreement by the Indianapolis Gas Company to furnish gas to the citizens of Indianapolis * * *. It was simply a contract by it with another corporation to permit such other corporation to use its property for a definite time upon payment to it of a definite and fixed consideration. Furthermore, no appropriation under this statute is necessary, because it was admitted by plaintiff, on oral argument, that it does not contend the payment of the rental, or any part thereof, can be enforced from the general fund of the City or from any other fund than the income derived from the operation of the trust and from such trust property. It is, therefore, apparent that neither of these sections of the statute has any application to the facts in this case." (III R. 1152, 1153)

Other sections and acts of the legislature also definitely preclude this particular act of 1905 from supporting City's contentions. Said Cities and Towns Act of 1905 also provided:

> "Sec. 53. The common council of every city shall have power to enact ordinances for the following purposes:
>
> "Sixth. To receive gifts, donations, bequests and public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out." Acts of 1905, Chapter 129; Burns' Ind. Rev. Stat., 1933, Section 48-1407.

The Indiana Acts of 1929, Chapter 77, page 252, provides for the creation of the Department of Utilities for the City of Indianapolis and in defining its powers provides in paragraph 7 of Section 3 that it may > "take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom." (Appendix D)

It continues to provide the board with power to secure the benefits incident to taking down bonds under an open mortgage and to authorize their sale under direction of the Public Service Commission.

Paragraph 7, Section 3, grants power to the board

> "to take over all contracts and rights of any kind or character, and to fulfill and perform all obligations relating to the property and business of any utility company whose property may be taken over by any such city."

In Chapter 78, Sec. 1 of said act of 1929 (Appendix C), the right of City to accept this particular trust property was expressly granted. The act provided that, as to any corporation organized to furnish light, heat and power to any city (Citizens Gas), the property of such corporation might be conveyed to the city

> "subject to the outstanding legal obligations of said corporation, whenever the holders or owners of shares of stock, stock certificates or holders or owners of any beneficial interest in such capital stock shall have received the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest, together with the interest or dividends thereon provided for in such articles of incorporation * * *"
> "Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such > corporation so transferred to it, including that located within this state and that located in any other state and any shares of stock or other interest in any other corporation of which said corporation making such transfer shall be the owner, and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property * * " (Appendix C.)

Both last above acts of the legislature were prepared by and passed at the instance and request of the City of Indianapolis (II R. 729; III R. 855; offered II R. 328, 334) and since their passage no doubt can exist as to the power of the City to accept this trust, with both the benefits and obligations attached to the 99-year lease.

Eight years after the lease was made, Citizens Gas did surrender to the Public Service Commission its 25-year City franchise and accept an indeterminate permit, without limit as to term of existence (II R. 722; offered II R. 328), all in full compliance with the law (Appendix E, G).

> Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448, 458.

The 25-year City franchise under which Citizens Gas commenced business was surrendered under statutory authority in 1921 (III R. 822; offered II R. 327) and was thereby entirely abrogated.

> Central Union T. Co. v. Indianapolis T. Co., 189 Ind. 219, 230-231;
>
> Farmers etc. T. Co. v. Boswell Tel. Co., 187 Ind. 371, 381-382;
>
> Greensburg W. Co. v. Lewis, 189 Ind. 439, 453-454.

At page 48 of its brief the City apparently seeks to characterize itself as a "remainderman" and to argue therefrom that the lease is invalid as against it in such capacity. Obviously no rights of a remainderman are involved in this case. The City is not the remainderman but solely the succeeding trustee of a public charitable trust which continues in perpetuity. The trust property could only vest in it by conveyance and assignment. Discussion has heretofore been had of the rule that the power of a trustee to execute a lease and its reasonableness is determined by the duration of the trust and not by the length of tenure of any particular trustee.

Citizens Gas and Indemnity Agreement.

Further support of the decision now before this court for review is found in the position of Citizens Gas and in the indemnifying agreement of September 9, 1935, given by City to Citizens Gas (II R. 306-307; offered II R. 327)

After the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, ordering judgment against all defendants in certain order of liability, Citizens Gas sought no rehearing of that decision by petition, nor has it sought the review of that decision by this court by a petition for certiorari. It has, in fact, at all times since 1913 properly insisted that it was fully empowered to create for the trust the leasehold estate in the property of Indianapolis Gas. In its answer and counterclaim in this cause it alleged:

> "Its directors, officers and trustees had complete power and authority to execute and enter into the said lease in the manner and form as aforesaid, and admits that the said lease was valid and binding upon this defendant and its property from the date of the execution thereof to the time this defendant conveyed, transferred and assigned all of its said property to the City of Indianapolis as aforesaid." (I R. 237).

It also alleged that it was at all times a trustee of the public charitable trust > "and all rights, property and assets then or thereafter acquired were held by it as such trustee" (I R. 233).

See also Magie v. German Evangelical Church, 13 N. J. Eq. 77, 89, 90, Aff'd 15 N. J. Eq. 500;
Mills v. Davison, 54 N. J. Eq. 659.

By its own averments the primary obligations of Citizens Gas under the lease ended only when it "conveyed, transferred and assigned all of its property to the City." Obviously its liability, as a principal for the payment of the rental under the lease, changed to that of a surety only upon the acceptance of all its property by City.

On September 9, 1935, City gave to Citizens Gas an indemnity agreement which provided in part as follows:

> "The City of Indianapolis further agrees that it will hereafter well and sufficiently save, defend, keep harmless and indemnify the said Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, its officers, directors and trustees, from any and all loss, damage, costs, charges, liability or expense on account of any pending actions or suits which may have heretofore been instituted against said company and on account of any actions or suits which may hereafter be brought against said company, arising from any and all acts or omissions to act on the part of said company of any nature whatsoever" (II R. 306, 307; offered II R. 327).

In the light of this indemnity and of the admitted liability of Citizens Gas under the lease it would seem entirely immaterial whether or not the City did in fact reject the lease. If the lease were rejected, then by accepting the property held solely in fee by Citizens Gas, City became bound by its indemnity agreement to discharge the admitted liability of Citizens Gas under the lease. For this additional reason, therefore, it is submitted that City's objections to the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals are without support.

V.

Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals Is in Complete Harmony with the Statutes and Decided Law of the Courts of Indiana, and the Rule of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins Is in No Wise Violated.

Indianapolis Gas contended, before both the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals, that the questions presented in this cause were all to be determined by the decisions and laws of the State of Indiana under the rule of this court as announced in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins. The decision of the Court of Appeals itself indicates that it is based upon the statutes and settled decisions of Indiana.

The decision is apparently based neither on estoppel nor res adjudicata but is the independent judgment of the court, based upon the controlling laws of Indiana. The matter of estoppel discussed in the brief of City has heretofore been sufficiently argued in this brief. The contention of City (Br. p. 64) that an Indiana municipal corporation may not be estopped by any acts done by its municipal officers in excess of their authority has no relevancy to any question here presented. In the instant case all acts done by the City, from its appearance before the Public Service Commission in 1913 through its corporation counsel to its succession as trustee of the public charitable trust and the acceptance of the trust property, including the leasehold estate, were done lawfully and under express authorization by the different statutes. No officer of the City has done other than as expressly provided by the laws of the State controlling its succession to the trusteeship, except its attempted refusal to comply with the instruments of conveyance providing that they were made all subject to the obligations of Citizens Gas, including the obligations under the lease.

Discussion has heretofore been had in this brief as to the effect of the order of the Public Service Commission approving the lease and upon all matters argued by City at pages 67 to 71 of its brief. Had the Court of Appeals placed its decision solely upon the prior decisions of Indiana courts in Fishback v. Public Service Commission and Williams v. Citizens Gas as being res adjudicata of the validity and enforceability of the lease against the City, no valid objection to the decision upon that ground could have been raised. We have, heretofore, discussed these decisions at length, not necessarily as res adjudicata but as determinations of law binding upon the courts of the United States. So far as the Fishback and Williams cases are concerned, this respondent's prior discussion will not be here repeated.

The cases of Todd and Cotter v. Citizens Gas (46 Fed. (2) 855) have never been urged by this respondent as directly determining the validity or invalidity of the lease. They did decide, however, that Citizens Gas was the trustee of a public charitable trust and that if and when City took over, it would take such property as a succeeding trustee of a continuing trust. These cases did determine that the trust was one continuing in perpetuity, and defeat the argument of City that it is a remainderman or that the term of the lease was unreasonable as extending beyond the life of the trust. In the trial of those causes certain statements were made by City which are pertinent to the present questions. These statements, made by stipulation or answer, that the lease was entered into "pursuant to order of the Public Service Commission of Indiana and with full consent and approval of the City of Indianapolis", and that the res of the public charitable trust did include the leasehold estate, are all statements and admissions which were properly before the court in the determination of the present cause.

City presents no authority which denies that the decisions in the Fishback and Williams cases did clearly and conclusively decide that the lease was one which Citizens Gas had full power and authority to make and which, being valid, constituted since its execution part and parcel of the public charitable trust to which City has succeeded as trustee.

VI

Present Contentions of City Would Make the Public Charitable Trust Invalid and Fraudulent as Against Creditors, and Thus Nullify Decision in Todd v. Citizens Gas.

It was decided in Todd v. Citizens Gas that a public charitable trust existed in the property of Citizens Gas in which it was the initial trustee. The trust might after a certain period and upon the payment of a certain charge upon the trust be conveyed to the City, which would operate the same as successor trustee. The condition precedent to such succession was the repayment to the stockholders of Citizens Gas, the settlors of the trust, of the face value of their stock, with cumulative interest thereon, at the rate of ten per cent per annum. Upon discharge of this condition precedent, the trust property might then be conveyed to the City, "subject to all outstanding legal obligations." The decision was based by the Court upon the franchise contract entered into in 1905, and upon the statutes of the State of Indiana in force.

The contentions of the City in this cause directly violate that decision. They, in effect, urge that City, as successor trustee, may directly retire all stock and bonds of Citizens Gas and then receive and take over its entire property and assets, free from any charge for the payment of its existing obligations, and itself incurring no liability therefor. By so doing, it leaves Citizens Gas with no assets of any character whatever, save an indemnity agreement, to discharge its obligations incurred during its years of operation of the utility.

Had such a construction of the trust been reasonable, or the existence of such rights in the settlors or a successor Trustee been contemplated by or suggested to the Court, it could only have declared the trust void as being in violation of an express statute of Indiana and fraudulent as to creditors. Under such a construction, as is now urged by the City, the trust would virtually have been one in favor of its settlors, allowing them to retrieve from the trust, after thirty years of operation, its entire assets free from any charge to pay the obligations incurred during that period. Such a trust would have been held void in any jurisdiction under settled, universal rules.

There was before 1905, and has been ever since, a statute in force in Indiana declaring that > "all deeds of gift, conveyances, transfers or assignments, verbal or written, of goods or things in action, made in trust for the use of the person making the same, shall be void as against creditors, existing or subsequent, of such person."

>
> Burns' Ind. Rev. Stat. 1933, Sec. 33-409 (Appendix K).

This statute has properly been construed to embrace property both real and personal in which the trust assets may be invested.

> Plunkett v. Plunkett, 114 Ind. 484, 489;
> Carter v. American Trust Co., 82 Ind. App. 587, 590.

While the Todd case did not itself directly decide upon the validity of the ninety-nine (99) year lease, it did decide, definitely and surely, that if and when Citizens Gas transferred and assigned all its assets and property to City as successor trustee, such assets and property would be so conveyed, subject to all legal obligations of the grantor trustee.

Respondent submits that the decision in the Todd case conclusively precludes such a construction and interpretation of the instruments creating the public charitable trust as is urged by City and it denies such rights to settlors or City, successor trustee, as the City seeks in this litigation.

VII

Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Refused to Order Judgment in Behalf of Chase for Interest on Unpaid Bond Coupons at the Rate of Six Per Cent Per Annum

The answer to the question presented by the cross-petition for a writ of certiorari in causes Nos. 423 and 424, filed by Chase, depends upon the construction of the bonds on which they pay the interest, and of the mortgage by which the payment of both bonds and coupons is secured.

Each bond recites that it is a "five per cent gold bond" and that it is payable with interest "at the rate of five per cent per annum" (I R. 25; offered II R. 327); each coupon recites that it is for "six months interest on its first consolidated five per cent gold bond No. ———" (I R. 27; offered II R. 327); and the mortgage deed of trust, besides setting out the form of the bonds and coupons, refers to them as "five per cent gold bonds" (I R. 27, 29; offered II R. 327), thus fully establishing what was the "rate per cent agreed upon in the original contract sued on."

The sections of the statute recited on pages 136, 137, of Chase's brief, filed December 7, 1940, require a judgment to bear interest "at the rate agreed upon in the original contract sued upon" if there was an agreed rate, "and if there be no contract by the parties, then at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum."

Burns' Indiana Statutes 1933, Sec. 19-2002.

They further provide generally that "in the absence of agreement," "On money due on any instrument in writing * * * interest shall be allowed at the rate of six dollars per year on one hundred dollars."

Ibid., Sec. 19-2003.

The argument of counsel for the cross-petitioner, in effect, is that as to the coupons themselves "no rate per cent is agreed upon," because they "are silent as to the rate of interest to be paid on the coupons." An argument to the effect that said fact, together with the provisions in the mortgage itself that money collected by the mortgage trustee shall be distributed ratably to the persons holding coupons, "but without interest on interest" (I R. 40; offered II R. 327), is cause for refusing to allow any interest at all on the coupons until reduced to judgment, had prevailed in the District Court. But we do not know of any stronger argument to the effect that no more than five per cent per annum can be recovered on these overdue coupons, both before judgment and after judgment, than the very apparent fact that by "contract of the parties" there was "an agreed rate" of interest at 5% per annum, stated "in the original contract sued on."

Therefore, five per cent is the maximum per cent to which bondholders are entitled and Chase may not justly contend that the Circuit Court of Appeals erred in the rate of interest allowed upon unpaid coupons.

CONCLUSION

Indianapolis Gas respectfully submits that the unanimous decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, now before this Court for review, was properly made in an exercise of certain jurisdiction of all the parties, and that it is in complete accord and harmony with the settled law of Indiana and should therefore be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX C

Indiana Acts 1929, Chapter 78, Section 1, pages 268, 271:

"That if in the original articles of incorporation of any corporation organized under the laws of this state prior to May 1st, 1913 (that being the date of the creation of the public service commission of this state), for the purpose of furnishing natural or artificial gas for fuel or for illuminating purposes, or for furnishing electric lights or water to the citizens of any town or city within this state, or to furnish light, heat and power to any town or city, or the inhabitants thereof, provision is made for the transfer or conveyance of the property of such corporation to such town or city, subject to the outstanding legal obligations of said corporation (our emphasis), whenever the holders or owners of shares of stock, stock certificates or holders or owners of any beneficial interest in such capital stock shall have received the face or par value of such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest, together with the interest or dividends thereon provided for in such articles of incorporation, such provision in such articles shall be, and is hereby legalized and declared to be valid and binding upon such corporation and upon the holders and owners of any such shares of stock, stock certificates or beneficial interest therein or their assigns, and said town or city shall be authorized and entitled to accept a transfer and conveyance of any such property (our emphasis) in accordance with the terms and conditions of such articles of incorporation, without the question of the acceptance or acquisition of such property being submitted to a vote of the electors of such town or city * * *"

"Whenever any instrument of transfer or conveyance shall be executed, transferring or conveying the property, either real or personal, of any such corporation to such town or city, the title to such property shall vest in such town or city, subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation * * *"

"Said municipal corporation shall be authorized to accept, hold and own all the property of such corporation so transferred to it, including that located within this state and that located in any other state and any shares of stock or other interest in any other corporation of which said corporation making such transfer shall be the owner, and any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon other property * * *"

APPENDIX D

"The said board of directors for utilities shall have the exclusive government, management, regulation and control of any water works, gas works, electric light works, heating and power plants, and all property relating thereto, which any such city may heretofore have acquired or may hereafter acquire or construct for the service of the public as consumers, and such board of directors shall be charged with the duty of and shall have all necessary power to make all necessary repairs, renewals, enlargements, extensions or additions to any such plant or property which in the judgment of said board of directors is desirable or necessary for the proper serving of the inhabitants of said city and the adjacent community served with respect to any such utility from any such plant or plants. In connection with the duties devolving upon such board of directors as aforesaid, it shall have power as follows:

(1) To condemn, appropriate, lease, rent (our emphasis throughout), purchase and hold any real estate, rights of way, materials or personal property within such city or within five (5) miles of the corporate limits thereof, needed for the proper giving of service by any such utility to the inhabitants of said city and the community contiguous thereto and served from any such utility plant * * *"

"(7) To take over, adopt and assume the performance of the provisions of any lease under which any utility property may be held at the time of the acquisition of any utility by any such city, and to take any and all steps necessary to perform and fulfill the terms of any such lease, and to obtain and preserve the benefits therefrom; and in event there be any outstanding open mortgage upon the property covered by any such lease so taken over under the provisions of which bonds may be withdrawn from the trustee under such mortgage for the purpose of paying all or part of the cost of additions to the property covered by such mortgage, to do and perform all things necessary in order to secure the benefit of such mortgage provisions and to enable the escrow bonds held by the trustee under any such mortgage to be taken down and sold in order to defray the cost of any extensions and betterments of such leased property and, subject to the approval of the public service commission of Indiana, to sell any such bonds so taken down for the purpose of assisting in defraying the costs of any such extensions or betterments to such leased property * * *"

APPENDIX E

Indiana Acts 1921, Chapter 93, pages 197, 198:

"Any public utility operating under an existing license, permit, or franchise, from any county, city or town, within the State of Indiana, shall upon filing at any time prior to July 1, 1923, with the auditor or clerk of any such county, city or town which granted such license, permit or franchise, and with the public service commission of Indiana, a written declaration, legally executed that it surrenders such license, permit or franchise, receive by operation of law in lieu thereof an indeterminate permit as provided in the act creating the public service commission of Indiana, entitled "An act concerning public utilities, creating a public service commission, abolishing the railroad commission of Indiana, and conferring the powers of the railroad commission on the public service commission," approved March 4, 1913, and such public utility shall hold such permit under all the terms, conditions and limitations of said act as fully and completely as if the same had been done prior to July 1, 1915."

APPENDIX F

Indiana Acts 1905, Chapter 139, Section 1, pages 434, 435:

"Whenever three (3) or more persons may desire to form a company to carry on any of the following named purposes, to wit:

(a) Any kind of manufacturing, mining, mechanical or chemical business or to furnish motive power to conduct such business;

(b) To supply any city, town, village or community with water, light, heat or power;

(c) To own, construct, operate and maintain stockyards and transit companies and conduct and transact the business incident thereto;

(d) To own, construct, maintain and operate grain elevators or flour mills or both and transact the business incident thereto, including the manufacture of flour, meal and all grain and cereal products, and the buying and selling of grain and cereals of all kinds, and the manufactured products thereof, and also including the right to own and maintain motive power to conduct such business;

(e) To buy and sell any kind or kinds of merchandise in connection with the manufacture of such merchandise, and for the sale of such merchandise when manufactured. They shall make, sign and acknowledge before some officer capable of taking acknowledgements of deeds, a certificate in writing, which shall state the corporate name adopted by the company, the object or objects of its promotion, which may include any or all of the purposes included in any one of the above named subdivisions of this section, the amount of the capital stock, the term of its existence (not, however, to exceed fifty (50) years), the number of directors and the names of those who shall manage the affairs of such company for the first year, and the name of the city or town in which its principal place of business is to be located, and file the same in the office of the recorder of such county, where it shall be recorded, and a duplicate thereof in the office of the secretary of state;

(f) To buy, sell and lease lands and buildings and other structures thereon, and to erect dwellings and other buildings and structures on lands leased or purchased."

APPENDIX G

Indiana Acts 1913, Chapter 76, Sections 100, 101, pages 201, 202:

"Sec. 100. Every license, permit or franchise hereafter granted to any public utility shall have the effect of an indeterminate permit subject to the provisions of this act, and subject to the provision that the license, franchise or permit may be revoked by the commission for cause or that the municipality in which the major part of its property is situated may purchase the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at any time as provided herein, paying therefor the then value of such property as determined by the commission and according to the terms and conditions fixed by said commission, subject to all the provisions as to hearings and appeals set out in section one hundred and five (105) and section one hundred and six (106) hereof. Any such municipality is authorized to purchase such property and every such public utility is required to sell such property at the value and according to the terms and conditions determined by the commission as herein provided. If this act should be repealed or annulled then all such indeterminate franchises, permits or grants shall cease and become inoperative and in place thereof such utility shall be reinstated in the possession and enjoyment of the license, permit or franchise surrendered by such utility at the time of the issue of the indeterminate franchise, permit or grant; but in no event shall such reinstated license, permit or franchise be terminated within a less period than five years from the date of the repeal or annulment of this act."

"Sec. 101. Any public utility operating under an existing license, permit or franchise shall, upon filing at any time prior to the expiration of such license, permit or franchise and prior to July 1, 1915, with the clerk of the municipality which granted such franchise and with the commission, a written declaration, legally executed, that it surrenders such license, permit or franchise, receive by operation of law, in lieu thereof an indeterminate permit as provided in this act: and such public utility shall hold such permit under all the terms, conditions and limitations of this act."

APPENDIX H

"No license, permit or franchise shall be granted to any person, copartnership or corporation to own, operate, manage or control any plant or equipment of any public utility in any municipality where there is in operation a public utility engaged in similar service under a license, franchise or permit without first securing from the commission a declaration after a public hearing of all parties interested, that public convenience and necessity require such second public utility. Any existing permit, license of franchise which shall contain any term whatsoever interfering with the existence of a second public utility is hereby declared to be against public policy and is hereby amended in such manner as to permit a municipality to grant a license, franchise or permit for the operation of such second public utility pursuant to the provisions of this act."

APPENDIX I

"Every municipal council shall have power, (a) to determine by contract, ordinance or otherwise the quality and character of each kind of product or service to be furnished or rendered by any public utility furnishing any product of service within said municipality and all other terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act upon which such public utility may be permitted to occupy the streets, highways, or other public property within such municipality, and such contract, ordinance or other determination of such municipality shall be in force and prima facie reasonable. Upon complaint made by such public utility or by any qualified complainant as provided in sections 57 to 71 the Commission shall set a hearing as provided in sections 57 to 71, and if it shall find such contract, ordinance or other determination to be unreasonable, such contract, ordinance or other determination shall be void. (b) To require of any public utility by ordinance or otherwise such additions and extensions to its physical plant within said municipality as shall be reasonable and necessary in the interest of the public, and to designate the location and nature of all such additions and extensions, the time within which they must be completed and all conditions under which they must be constructed subject to review by the commission as provided in subdivision (a) of this section. (c) To provide for a penalty for noncompliance with the provisions of any ordinance or resolution adopted pursuant to the provisions hereof. (d) The power and authority granted in this section shall exist and be vested in said municipalities anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, Whenever after a request by petition in writing of any public utility, the city or other political subdivision or other body, having jurisdiction of the matter, shall refuse or fail for a period of thirty (30) days, to give or grant to such public utility permission and authority to construct, maintain and operate any additional construction, equipment, or facility reasonably necessary for the transaction of the business of such public utility, and for the public convenience or interest, then such public utility may file a petition with said commission for such right and permission, which petition shall state with particularity the construction, equipment or other facility desired to be constructed and operated, and show a reasonable public necessity therefor, and also the failure or refusal of such city, political subdivision or other body to give or grant such right or permission; and the commission shall thereupon give notice of the pendency of such petition, together with a copy thereof, to such city or other political subdivision or body of the time and place of hearing of the matter set forth in such petition; and such commission shall have power to hear and determine such matters and to give or grant such right and permission and to impose such conditions in relation thereto as the necessity of such public utility and the public convenience and interest may reasonably require."

APPENDIX K

Burns' Indiana Statutes 1933, Section 33-409.

"Deeds in trust for grantor. All deeds of gift, conveyances, transfers or assignments, verbal or written, of goods or things in action, made in trust for the use of the person making the same, shall be void as against creditors, existing or subsequent, of such persons."

APPENDIX L

Indiana Acts 1913, Chapter 76, Sections 105, 130, pages 203, 214.

"Sec. 105. The commission shall thereupon proceed to set a time and place for a public hearing upon the matters of the just compensation to be paid for the taking of the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public, and of all other terms and conditions of the purchase and sale and shall give to the municipality and the public utility interested, not less than thirty (30) days' notice of the time and place when and where such hearing will be held, and such matters considered and determined, and shall give like notice to all bondholders, mortgagees, lienors and all other persons having or claiming to have any interest in such public utility by publication of such notice, once a week for not less than three (3) successive weeks, in at least one (1) newspaper of general circulation printed in the English language and published in the county in which such public utility is located, which publication shall be caused to be made by the municipality. Within a reasonable time, not exceeding one (1) year after the time fixed for such hearing in such notice, the commission shall, by order, fix and determine and certify to the municipal council, to the public utility and to any bondholder, mortgagee, lienor or other creditor appearing upon such hearing, just compensation to be paid for the taking of the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public and all other terms and all conditions of sale and purchase which it shall ascertain to be reasonable, allowing not exceeding one hundred twenty days (120) for the payment of such compensation. The compensation and other terms and conditions of sale and purchase thus certified by the commission shall constitute the compensation and terms and conditions to be paid, followed and observed in the purchase of such plant from such public utility. Upon the filing of such certificate with the clerk of such municipality and payment of the compensation fixed the exclusive use of the property taken shall vest in such municipality."

INTRODUCTION 1

Correction of Inaccuracies and Omissions in City's Brief 2

ARGUMENT 9

I. The Circuit Court of Appeals Properly Refused to Realign Indianapolis Gas With Chase as a Party Plaintiff 9

II. The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard on the Question Whether the Alleged Burdensomeness of the Lease Was a Valid Defense and the Court of Appeals' Direction to Enter Final Judgment Without a Retrial of That Issue Was in Full Accord With Due Process of Law..... 14

(a) The City's Contention that it was Necessary for the District Court to Pass on the Question Whether Burdensomeness was a Valid Defense Before the Circuit Court of Appeals Could Constitutionally Pass Upon it is Unsound, and Contrary to the Decisions of This Court 17

The City's authorities distinguished..... 21

(b) There is no Factual Basis for the City's Supposed Constitutional Question, Because the District Court Did in Fact Rule on the Defense of Burdensomeness and Its Ruling was Preserved for Review by Plaintiff's Exception to the Overruling of Its Motion to Strike 23

(c) The City's Contention that the Circuit Court of Appeals Should Not Have Based its Decision as to Burdensomeness on Res Judicata is Unsound, Because There is no Indication that the Court Based Its Decision on that Ground 26

(d) To the Extent, if at all, that the Circuit Court of Appeals Based Its Decision upon the Prior Adjudication in the Williams Case, it was Fully Justified in Doing so Since the Parties had been Fully Heard in the District Court as to the Effect of that Adjudication..... 28

III. Citizens Gas Had Ample Authority to Execute the Lease and the Lease Is Enforceable Against the City as Successor Trustee..... 32

(a) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease..... 33

(b) The Express Statutory Power of Citizens Gas to Enter Into the Lease for 99 Years Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising From the Public Charitable Trust..... 37

(c) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease..... 39

(d) The Statutory Prohibitions on Which the City Relies Have No Application to the Case at Bar 40

IV. The Rule of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins Required the Decision That the Lease is Valid and Binding and In Sustaining the Validity of the Lease the Circuit Court of Appeals Fully Complied With That Rule..... 42

(a) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Depart From the Indiana Law in Dealing With the Question of Estoppel of a Municipal Corporation 43

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission is a Conclusive Determination That the Lease is in the Interest of the Public Charitable Trust and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility and the Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Deviate from the Law of Indiana in Determining the Significance of that Order..... 46

(c) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Depart From the Indiana Law in Dealing With the Doctrine of Res Judicata 49

1. Under the Indiana law, it is immaterial whether the City presents new issues as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust, and in fact it presents no such new issues 50

2. The City's theory that the transfer of the trust property affected the conclusiveness of the decision in the Williams case is unsound and has no support in the law of Indiana 51

3. Under the law of Indiana, the judgment in the Williams case binds the trust and any trustee thereof, although defendants therein presented no issues to the trustee and prospective successor trustee, their co-defendants 54

V. The Interest Rate on the Coupons After Maturity and On the Judgment Should Be Six Per Cent 55

REPLY BRIEF OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK, TRUSTEE, RESPONDENT AND CROSS-PETITIONER.

INTRODUCTION.

We shall confine ourselves in this Reply Brief to a consideration of the "assigned errors intended to be urged" by the City (City Br. 13-14), and to the argument advanced by Indianapolis Gas to the effect that the unpaid and overdue coupons should bear interest at 5% rather than 6% (Ind Gas Br. 82-3).

The brief of Citizens Gas requires no comment. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the Lease is "valid and enforceable against" Citizens Gas and that plaintiff is entitled to "a coercive judgment for the unpaid and overdue interest coupons" against Citizens Gas (IV R. 1307-8). Citizens Gas has not sought a review of that decision and it is conclusive upon it in all respects. It apparently does not contend otherwise.

Counsel for the various defendants have by their silence accepted as accurate the statement of the case set forth in our original brief (Pl. Br. 2-24). It will be necessary, however, for us to point out certain inaccuracies appearing in the City's brief before proceeding to the argument.

Correction of Inaccuracies and Omissions in City's Brief.

1. The statement that the sole purpose of Citizens Gas "was to act as trustee of a public charitable trust" and that it "had no power or authority to act otherwise" (City Br. 5) is inaccurate and misleading. Citizens Gas was primarily a public utility incorporated "to supply the city of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power" (1 R. 95), although it also had certain duties and responsibilities as trustee of the public charitable trust. This situation is correctly summarized in the brief of Citizens Gas (p. 6):

> "(4) Since Citizens Gas was a public utility as well as the original Trustee of the Public Charitable Trust, the lease in question was made pursuant to the authority of the Public Service Commission Law of Indiana and only after approval had been given by the Public Service Commission of Indiana (1 R. 116-122). The propriety of this was adjudicated in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212."

Under the law of Indiana, the state's power over Citizens Gas as a public utility transcended the rights of the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust. Citizens Gas, therefore, had power to make the Lease when the state specifically conferred that power by the adoption of the Shively-Spencer Act (Pl. Br. 57, 67, 144), and when the Public Service Commission approved the making of the Lease. It is immaterial whether Citizens Gas had previously enjoyed such power (Pl. Br. 66-9; infra, pp. 37-9).

2. The statement that "On September 30, 1935 Indianapolis Gas agreed to make an arrangement for temporary use," of its property (City Br. 9), is wholly unsupported by the record and contrary to the facts. The letters exchanged between the City and Indianapolis Gas on September 30th (DX Stip. 64 and 65, III R. 968-9; Offered, II R. 384-5) merely agreed that the payments which the City was then making and was expecting to make in the future would be without prejudice to the rights of either of the parties. In accepting the payments, Indianapolis Gas said (DX Stip. 65, III R. 969):

> "* * * you making these or future payments referred to without prejudice to your position or rights and we accepting the same without prejudice to our position or rights under said lease or in any relation thereto."

Thus, the only agreement made was that the payments were to be made and accepted without prejudice to the rights of either of the parties. This agreement was in no sense "an arrangement for temporary use."

As a matter of fact, these letters were not exchanged until three weeks after the City had accepted the assignment of the Lease, recorded it, and taken possession of the leased property, so that the reservation contained in both letters preserved to Indianapolis Gas the rights which it had secured by the City's previous action in accepting the assignment of the Lease.

3. The agreement of March 2, 1936, referred to by the City, is the first agreement of any sort between Indianapolis Gas and the City with respect to the temporary use or continued operation of the property. In referring to this agreement (City Br. 11), counsel for the City have carefully quoted the paragraph which provided that continued operation should be without prejudice to the City's rights, but have omitted the similar paragraph with respect to the rights of Indianapolis Gas. The latter paragraph reads (I R. 207):

> "It is further understood that your acceptance of this agreement and of such payment and your agreement that such sums may be deposited in escrow and that we may operate the plant referred to *shall not prejudice your position or rights and that you are at full liberty to assert, notwithstanding this agreement and the payment made in pursuance thereof, that said lease is a valid and binding lease upon the City of Indianapolis and said Department of Utilities of said City or against any property of either in accordance with its terms."

Since this agreement specifically provided that it was without prejudice to the rights of the parties, it cannot be tortured into any waiver of the rights accruing to Indianapolis Gas through the City's accepting and recording the assignment of the Lease and taking possession of the leased property, almost six months before.

4. The statement that "The action of the Board of Directors rejecting the lease was ratified by an ordinance of the common council of the City" (City Br. 10) is only a half truth. The fact is that the City Council ratified and confirmed all that the Board of Directors for Utilities did in taking over and accepting the public charitable trust (DX 8, III R. 1018-19; Offered, II R. 429). Thus the City Council "ratified, approved, adopted and confirmed" the action of the Board of Directors for Utilities:

(1) In offering the City's Revenue Bonds for sale upon the express representation that the City was taking over the "property owned by Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis and/or in which it has an interest, * * *" (Pl. Br. 17).

(2) In representing, in connection with the sale of the City's Revenue Bonds, that the system which it was taking over was "* * * in part owned by Citizens Gas Company and in part is leased by it from Indianapolis Gas Company, * * *" (Pl. Br. 18).

* Emphasis appearing in quotations throughout this brief is ours unless otherwise indicated.

(3) In executing the Indemnity Agreement in which it agreed to save Citizens Gas harmless against all its liabilities (Pl. Br. 21).

(4) In accepting and recording the assignment of the Lease and taking possession of the leased property (Pl. Br. 107-111).

(5) In accepting and recording the instruments of conveyance transferring all property of Citizens Gas, which conveyances were expressly made subject to "all other legal obligations of the Citizens Gas Company" (Pl. Br. 112-14).

The City Council was in no better position to "keep its cake and eat it" than was the Board of Directors for Utilities and in ratifying and confirming all the acts done in taking over the property of the public charitable trust it necessarily approved the acts of the Board of Directors and the legal consequences flowing therefrom.

5. Counsel for the City say (City Br. 12) "The bill does not allege that the lease is valid, * * *" and then go on to state that the plaintiff is predicating its rights merely upon laches, estoppel, and res judicata. This statement as to the allegations of plaintiff's Bill, even if true, would be wholly without significance. There was no occasion for plaintiff to allege in haec verba that the Lease was valid. Such an allegation would have been merely a conclusion of law and wholly devoid of significance.

The fact is, however, that from the time of the filing of the original Bill, continuously to the present time, plaintiff has been contending that the Lease is valid and binding on the original parties thereto, upon the City of Indianapolis as successor trustee, upon the trust property, and upon Citizens Gas. Thus in paragraph 19 of the Bill (I R. 17-18) it is alleged that "upon the execution and delivery of said 99-year lease" the Mortgage Trustee became vested with certain distinct and independent rights against "the lessee, its successors and assigns." Obviously, the mortgagee acquired rights growing out of the acceptance of this 99 year Lease only because it was a valid and binding obligation of the parties thereto.

The second prayer of the Bill asked expressly that the Lease be found a valid and binding obligation upon all of the defendants (Bill, I R. 20-21). The City has continuously recognized that plaintiff was asserting that the Lease was valid and binding. Thus the City's counter-claim states (I R. 183, 3rd paragraph):

> "That the plaintiff, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York as Trustee under said Mortgage and Deed of Trust securing bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company * * * is asserting that said lease is valid and binding, * * *."

In answer to the City's counter-claim plaintiff stated (I R. 214): "* * * but plaintiff denies that the aforesaid lease was void when executed or is now void in any respect whatever, * * *."

These statements show that there has never been any real doubt as to the plaintiff's contention.

6. The statement that "* * * there was a definitely fixed date for the termination of its [Citizens Gas's] trusteeship" (City Br. 16, 44) is unsupported by the record and contrary to fact. As pointed out in our original brief (Pl. Br. 63-4) there were five possible contingencies which would result in the City's succeeding Citizens Gas as trustee, none of which was certain to occur. All of those contingencies except one depended upon the City's exercise of its rights, and that was an uncertain matter, since it involved the raising of funds and the assumption of obligations. The City admitted in its brief filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals that "At the time this lease was executed, it was not known and could not have been known that the City would exercise its right to take over the trust."*

7. In specifying the assigned errors the City (City Br. 14) complains of the supposed error of the Circuit

* City's Brief in Cause 7143 in Circuit Court of Appeals, p. 52.

Court of Appeals "In holding a municipal corporation liable for 77 years for future payments of more than $45,000,000 * * *." In so far as this statement indicates that a liability is imposed upon the City of Indianapolis payable out of revenues raised by taxation, it is contrary to fact and wholly unsupported by the record. Both the opinion and the orders of the Circuit Court of Appeals make it clear that the primary liability is imposed upon "(1) The City as successor Trustee and the Trust Property;" (IV R. 1306; 1307, 1308). Indeed, the Court of Appeals amended its opinion after the filing of the City's first Petition for Rehearing by inserting the words "as Successor Trustee" after the words "the City" to make the limitation of liability entirely clear (cf. IV R. 1335 and 1306, line 34). The City does not attempt to support its suggestion that any liability is imposed upon the City payable out of revenues raised by taxation, as distinguished from liability imposed on the trust property and the City as successor trustee.

In so far as the City's statement includes the suggestion that it will be necessary to pay $45,000,000 in rent over a period of 77 years for the use of the Indianapolis Gas property, it is wholly immaterial to any issue before the Court. The fact that interest on $10,000,000 at 5% for 20 years will total $10,000,000 or in 80 years will total $40,000,000, has no relevance in determining whether the rate of 5% is either lawful or reasonable or whether the obligation was validly assumed.

As pointed out in our original brief (pp. 65-66), the leasing of the Indianapolis Gas property was vastly more economical for Citizens Gas than selling its own stock to purchase the same property. That a substantial amount of rent is paid for the Indianapolis Gas property is more than offset by the fact that the lessee receives tremendous revenues from the Indianapolis Gas property which constituted in 1913, when the Lease was made, and still constitutes a very large part of the combined system resulting from the leasing of the Indianapolis Gas property. In this connection the following facts are significant:

(1) The City admits (City Br. 46) that the Indianapolis Gas property "was twice the size of that of Citizens Gas" when the Lease was made in 1913.

(2) In 1913, when the Lease was made, Indianapolis Gas had 41,541 meters in use, as compared with 11,165 for Citizens Gas (PX 93, III R. 901, Offered II R. 342; Stip. 5 (b), II R. 621).

(3) At the end of 1913 Indianapolis Gas had 387.34 miles of mains, as contrasted with 184.52 miles of mains for Citizens Gas (PX 93, III R. 901).

(4) On June 30, 1913, the total assets and the property of Citizens Gas were worth $2,781,480 and $2,521,170, respectively (PX 92, p. 4, physical exhibit, not printed; Offered, II R. 342). In 1913 the Public Service Commission of Indiana determined that the Indianapolis Gas Bondholders and stockholders were entitled to a 5% return on $4,833,000 of Bonds and a 6% return on $2,000,000 of stock, so that the value of the Indianapolis Gas property was obviously more than twice that of Citizens Gas.

Thus it is apparent that the City's talk about paying an aggregate of $45,000,000 for interest, dividends, and taxes in connection with the Indianapolis Gas property over a period of 77 years has no real bearing upon the merits of the controversy.

We shall have occasion to correct other inaccuracies in the City's statements during the course of the following argument.

ARGUMENT.

I. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY REFUSED TO REALIGN INDIANAPOLIS GAS WITH CHASE AS A PARTY PLAINTIFF.

(Pl. Br. 38-45.) (Ind. Gas Br. 27-29.)
(City Br. 22-32.)

As we have seen (Pl. Br. 40-43), any one of the numerous controversies between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas would preclude a realignment of Indianapolis Gas. A mere statement of these controversies is sufficient in and of itself to remove all possible doubt as to federal jurisdiction of this case. In addition to plaintiff's prayer for a decree declaring the Lease to be binding on all the defendants, the relief sought which creates a definite adversity of interest between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas includes the following:*

1. A declaration that the rights of Indianapolis Gas under the Lease are part of the security for the Bonds (Prayer 3, I R. 21).

Here is a clash of interests as to what assets of Indianapolis Gas are covered by its Mortgage.

2. An order, pending final judgment, restraining Indianapolis Gas from interfering with the Lease in any way (Prayer 4, I R. 21).

The danger of such interference is shown by some of the correspondence between the City and Indianapolis Gas (PX Stip. 66, III R. 838, Offered, II R. 329; DX Stip. 68, III R. 970, Offered, II R. 433-4). The agreement of March 2, 1936 (Exhibit E, I R. 205, Offered, II R. 386) shows that before this suit was filed Indianapolis Gas did

---

* An order of the District Court (II R. 321-2) reserved some of the issues in this case for trial at a later date. Among the issues so reserved are Nos. 1, 3, 6, 7 and 8 hereinafter enumerated, and the issue as to plaintiff's right to recover its expenses and attorney's fees (see No. 5, p. 10. infra).

not hesitate to attempt to make modifications in the Lease in complete disregard of the rights of the Bondholders.

The City asserts that plaintiff does not fear any adverse action by Indianapolis Gas, since plaintiff has taken no steps to procure the temporary injunction for which it prays (City Br. 26). While it is true that the actual issuance of an injunction was not sought, any adverse action by Indianapolis Gas was forestalled and plaintiff's rights were adequately protected by the filing of the Bill and the prayer for injunction.

> Merrimack River Savings Bank v. City of Clay Center, 219 U. S. 527, 536 (1911).

3. A declaration that the contract of March 2, 1936 has no effect on the rights of the Bondholders under the Lease (I R. 259, Par. (4)).

The Lease requires the lessee to pay the bond interest to the Bondholders (I R. 69, Par. 21; I R. 72, Par. 22), but this contract makes all the rent payable to Indianapolis Gas (I R. 206, Par. (b)).

4. A decree ordering the City to pay to plaintiff all the interest payments becoming due thereafter (Prayer 7, I R. 21).

The agreement of March 2, 1936 reveals the necessity for establishing and enforcing plaintiff's right to receive part of the rent paid under the Lease, as against any claim of Indianapolis Gas thereto.

5. A judgment for the unpaid interest, with interest on the unpaid interest, and for plaintiff's expenses and attorney's fees (Prayer 8, I R. 21; Prayer 10, II R. 301).

6. A judgment for all losses caused by the failure of Indianapolis Gas to make, or cause to be made, the repairs and renewals necessary to properly maintain the mortgaged premises (Prayer 10, II R. 301).

7. An order compelling Indianapolis Gas to apply to the satisfaction of all judgments against it in this case all of its assets, of whatever nature, including $120,000 of Bonds, its interest in the escrow fund being accumulated under the contract of March 2, 1936, and its right to recover from the City for the use of its property, whether under the Lease or otherwise (Prayer 12, II R. 302).

8. A declaration that any of the assets of Indianapolis Gas remaining after the satisfaction of the judgments against it are part of the security for the Bonds, and also an order sequestering any such surplus assets until Indianapolis Gas shall have given adequate security for the ultimate discharge of its obligations under the Mortgage (Prayer 12, II R. 303-4).

The City is obviously wrong when it says (City Br. 23): "The real and controlling controversy in this case is whether the pleaded lease has become enforceable against the City." Issues 5, 6, 7 and 8 just enumerated have nothing to do with the validity of the Lease and they are much too important to be ignored in determining the question of federal jurisdiction.

Since plaintiff has these numerous controversies with Indianapolis Gas, Indianapolis Gas could not be realigned as a plaintiff, even if it were in accord with plaintiff in some of the other controversies. We have pointed out that (Pl. Br. 40): "The City has never cited a single case in which the plaintiff had even one substantial controversy with a defendant and such defendant was realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes," and that statement still stands.

The City relies entirely on Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199 (1918), claiming that (City Br. 30): "the attitude of the parties toward what this Court characterized as the actual and substantial controversy determined whether there should be realignment" in that case. This "actual and substantial controversy" was the only controversy between plaintiffs and the defendant sought to be realigned (see Pl. Br. 41-2). The fact that their clash of interest in this one controversy prevented a realignment does not support the City's argument that a similarity of interest in a single controversy requires a realignment. On the contrary, since a clash of interest in one controversy prevents realignment, where such clash of interest appears there can be no realignment because of any similarity of interest in any other controversies in the same case. As a matter of fact, there was a similarity of interest in three of the four controversies in Sutton v. English, and this Court nevertheless ruled that no realignment was required.

The fact that plaintiff sought and obtained a judgment against Indianapolis Gas which will now amount to more than $1,700,000 is sufficient in and of itself to prevent a realignment of Indianapolis Gas, and there are numerous other controversies between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas. The City argues (City Br. 26) that ample funds to pay the judgment can be obtained from the escrow fund and the operation of the utility property, and that Indianapolis Gas is therefore "wholly insulated from any liability." This argument presupposes that federal jurisdiction is dependent in some way upon the ultimate collectability of the various defendants. Obviously, both the principal and surety on an obligation are properly sued as defendants, without regard to the solvency or collectability of either.

The City argues further that since the liability of Indianapolis Gas is secondary to that of the City as trustee, the trust property, and Citizens Gas, the judgment of the Court of Appeals "amounts in substance not to a judgment against Indianapolis Gas, but one in its favor" (City Br. 26, italics are the City's). This assertion suggests another method of testing the soundness of the City's argument. Even if Indianapolis Gas had secured a judgment holding that it was not liable for the overdue and unpaid interest, the fact of such a judgment would have no effect on the question of jurisdiction. Federal jurisdiction is determined with reference to the controversies presented by the pleadings and not with respect to the ultimate decision of those controversies. For example, the amount in controversy necessary to sustain federal jurisdiction is determined by the amount claimed, and the amount actually recovered is wholly immaterial.

> Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 89 (1897);
> St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Co. v. Red Cab Co., 303 U. S. 283, 288 (1938).

Similarly, the presence of a federal question essential to federal jurisdiction depends upon the issues presented by the pleadings, and it makes no difference that the federal question is determined adversely to plaintiff or is not even determined at all.

> Siler v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 191 (1909);
> Levering & Garrigues Co. v. Morrin, 289 U. S. 103, 105 (1933).

As shown by these well established rules, the presence of a controversy which sustains federal jurisdiction is not negatived by the ultimate decision of such controversy adversely to the plaintiff.* Just as a decision that Indianapolis Gas is not liable for the unpaid interest would have no effect on federal jurisdiction of this case, so the decision that the liability of Indianapolis Gas is only secondary has no effect on federal jurisdiction.

The fallacy of the City's argument that jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the ultimate decision of the merits is readily apparent. If the City had prevailed in its contention that the Lease is invalid (as it did in the District Court), plaintiff's recovery would have been confined to Indianapolis Gas alone and the City would apparently concede the existence of jurisdiction. On the other hand, since the City's contentions were denied and the Lease was held valid, so that Citizens Gas, the trust property, and the City as trustee were also held liable for the unpaid interest, the City insists that Indianapolis Gas is no longer a proper party defendant, although a judgment is still rendered against it. Thus it should be noted that while the City was asserting that Indianapolis Gas should be aligned as a plaintiff, it was at the same time contending that Indianapolis Gas was the only party liable for the indebtedness which plaintiff sought to recover. If the City had prevailed in its contentions both as to jurisdiction and the merits, it would have been necessary to realign as a party plaintiff the only party liable to Chase. The absurdity of the position thus taken by the City clearly reveals the fallacy of its arguments on this question.

* This is well illustrated by a case in which jurisdiction of a single defendant is based on diversity of citizenship. In such a case federal jurisdiction is not destroyed merely because the defendant is successful on the merits.

There can be no real doubt concerning federal jurisdiction of this case. Plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication of the rights which it asserts against Indianapolis Gas, and the adverse relationship created by the assertion of those rights precludes any realignment of Indianapolis Gas as a party plaintiff.

(Pl. Br. 45-56) (Ind. Gas Br. 29-61)
(City Br. 32-43).

It may be helpful in analyzing the City's so-called constitutional question to determine just what the City is contending and what it is not contending. It is clear from the City's brief, its assignment of errors, and the grounds relied upon in its petitions for certiorari that:

The City contends:

(1) That the Circuit Court of Appeals had no right to decide as a matter of law that the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease was not a valid defense and direct a final judgment, because

(a) It was necessary for the District Court to pass on this question of law before it could constitutionally be passed on by the Court of Appeals (City Br. 40);

(b) The District Court did not pass on the question of law (City Br. 41).

(2) That in so far as the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals was based on the prior adjudication in the Williams case, such decision was unwarranted because

(a) "The question of res adjudicata is a question of fact" (City Br. 39);

(b) The City had no opportunity to be heard on the question of res judicata in the District Court (City Br. 17, 39).

The City does not contend and has made no assignments of error entitling it to contend:

That the decision of the Court of Appeals that the alleged burdensomeness is not a valid defense was in itself an erroneous decision.

Let us consider for a moment the significance which attaches to the City's failure to make this contention.

The City concedes "that the issue of burdensomeness * * * was decided against the City by the Circuit Court of Appeals." (City Br. 17). This means that the Court decided that the alleged burdensomeness was not a valid defense as a matter of law, since there is no claim that the question of fact was passed upon. The City does not contend that this question of law was erroneously decided, nor does the City attempt to answer the argument in our original brief (Pl. Br. 50-54) showing that the allegations of burdensomeness presented no valid defense. It is perhaps a fair inference that the City has no answer.

Even if the Circuit Court of Appeals had erroneously decided the question of burdensomeness or had erroneously failed to consider it at all, no constitutional question as to due process would be involved, but only an erroneous decision in the course of a judicial proceeding. Thus, in Collins v. Johnston, 237 U. S. 502 (1915), this Court was reviewing an order of the District Court denying appellant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The appellant contended that he had been "deprived of due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, in that the trial court arbitrarily denied and refused to consider a valid and legally conclusive defense offered by him upon the trial of the second indictment" (p. 506). In answer to this contention this Court said (p. 507):

> "Nor are we able to see that the refusal of the proffered defense, even were such refusal erroneous, could at all affect the jurisdiction of the court, or amount to more than an error committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. The averment that the defense was 'arbitrarily refused' merely states a conclusion of law, and is of no effect in the absence of facts sufficient to show that the ruling was in truth arbitrary; and no such facts are alleged."

In the case at bar the City does not even claim that the Circuit Court of Appeals decided the question of burdensomeness erroneously. Its sole contention is that the Court of Appeals had no right to decide the question. Reduced to its simplest elements, the City's contention is that the Circuit Court of Appeals had no right to pass upon the question whether the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease constituted a valid defense no matter how trivial or absurd that alleged defense might be, and that the Court was required to remand the case to the trial court to take evidence on a question which the Court believed to be wholly immaterial as a matter of law.

With this background we shall proceed to examine the City's contentions under the following headings:

(a) The City's contention that it was necessary for the District Court to pass on the question whether burdensomeness was a valid defense before the Court of Appeals could constitutionally pass upon it is unsound and contrary to the decisions of this Court.

(b) There is no factual basis for the City's supposed constitutional question, because the District Court did in fact rule on the defense of burdensomeness and its ruling was preserved for review by plaintiff's exception to the overruling of its motion to strike.

(c) The City's contention that the Circuit Court of Appeals should not have based its decision as to burdensomeness on res judicata is unsound, because there is no indication that the Court based its decision on that ground.

(d) To the extent, if at all, that the Circuit Court of Appeals based its decision upon the prior adjudication in the Williams case, it was fully justified in doing so since the parties had been fully heard in the District Court as to the effect of that adjudication.

(a) The City's Contention that it was Necessary for the District Court to Pass on the Question Whether Burdensomeness was a Valid Defense Before the Circuit Court of Appeals Could Constitutionally Pass Upon it is Unsound, and Contrary to the Decisions of This Court.

As pointed out in our original brief (Pl. Br. 48-49), the decision of this Court in American Surety Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U. S. 156, 168, establishes beyond question that a defense may properly be considered for the first time in an appellate court. This case alone disposes of the City's argument and yet the City's brief makes no attempt to explain or distinguish this case or the rule announced therein.

There can be no doubt concerning the applicability of the rule of American Surety Co. v. Baldwin to a federal equity case. It has always been held that an appeal in an equity case invokes a hearing de novo and that the Court of Appeals is not limited to a mere review of the rulings of the trial court.

Thus, in Alexander v. Redmond, 180 Fed. 92 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1910), a trustee in bankruptcy brought a bill in equity to set aside an assignment as a preference. A jury was impaneled to try the issues and at the end of plaintiff's case defendants "rested subject to request for permission to reopen the case" and moved for a directed verdict, which was granted. On appeal the Court of Appeals reversed the trial court and ordered final judgment for the plaintiff. To the defendants' objection that they had had no opportunity to prove their defense, the court made this answer (p. 93):

> "This being an appeal in equity, the facts as well as the law are open for our consideration, as they would be even if the jury had rendered a verdict without direction, and the issues must be disposed of upon the record brought here from the circuit court. No reservation of a motion to reopen the case extends to this court. The circumstance that a jury was impaneled is immaterial. Appeal in equity brings the cause here for final disposition."

Many other cases could be cited to the same effect, but we call the Court's attention to one. In Lyon v. Union Gas & Oil Co., 281 Fed. 674 (C. C. A. 6th, 1922), the plaintiffs brought suit to quiet their title to certain premises and to enjoin defendants from setting up any claim by virtue of a certain oil and gas lease. The District Court dismissed the case and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs had notified the defendants that they must either proceed to develop the leased property or forfeit the lease. The Court of Appeals held that one of the material issues was whether a sufficient time had elapsed between the notice given by plaintiffs and the time when suit was brought. The Circuit Court of Appeals expressly held that although the trial court did not pass upon this issue, the court was free to determine that question. Thus the court said (p. 678):

> "While the trial court did not determine the question of the sufficiency of the time intervening between the notice and the commencement of this action, nevertheless this action is here upon appeal, and therefore all issues presented by the pleadings and the evidence are before this court for adjudication."

Defendants had made no effort to prove in the lower court an excuse for failure to develop the property and "rested their case upon the testimony introduced by the plaintiffs." In the Court of Appeals defendants suggested in argument a number of causes for their delay but that Court held that the forfeiture of the lease was justified. Thus the lessees' defenses that they had not been allowed sufficient time and that they had some excuse for failure to develop the property were decided adversely to them by the Court of Appeals, although these questions had not been passed upon by the District Court.

There are many recent cases recognizing that a Court of Appeals may direct final judgment in an equity case or in a law case where the facts are not in dispute. See, for example:

Thornton v. Carter, 109 F. (2d) 316 (C. C. A. 8th, 1940);

Union Central Life Insurance Co. v. Imsland, 91 F. (2d) 365, 368 (C. C. A. 8th, 1937).

Under some circumstances, even when there is a constitutional right to a trial by jury, an appellate court may direct the entry of final judgment on questions of law, although they were not considered by the lower court.

Forged Steel Wheel Co. v. Lewellyn, 251 U. S. 511, 516 (1920);

Baltimore & Carolina Line v. Redman, 295 U. S. 654 (1935).

Under the new rules of civil procedure the right of the Circuit Court of Appeals to direct the entry of final judgment, even in a jury case, has been enlarged, or at least has been somewhat simplified from a procedural point of view.

Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Duncan, 85 L. ed. 132, 138 (December 9, 1940).

It is a fundamental concept of our procedure that no one has a right to prove facts—even in a jury case—which will be unavailing if proved. The entry of judgments on demurrer, the granting of motions to strike immaterial claims or defenses, the rejection of evidence on the trial because of immateriality, and the entry of judgments on motions for judgment on the pleadings are all examples of this practice. The reports of this Court and of every common law court are replete with illustrations.

In Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. United States, 187 U. S. 315 (1902), this Court was reviewing a judgment for plaintiff entered by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia because the defendant's affidavit of defense, required by rule of court, was inadequate. Defendant claimed that the rule was invalid because it deprived it of due process of law and the right of trial by jury. This Court denied those contentions and said (p. 320):

"* * * If it were true that the rule deprived the plaintiff in error of the right of trial by jury, we should pronounce it void without reference to cases. But it does not do so. It prescribes the means of making an issue. The issue made as prescribed, the right of trial by jury accrues. The purpose of the rule is to preserve the court from frivolous defences and to defeat attempts to use formal pleading as means to delay the recovery of just demands.

"Certainly a salutary purpose and hardly less essential to justice than the ultimate means of trial." (Emphasis is the Court's.)

Souffront v. Compagnie des Sucreries, 217 U. S. 475 (1910).

The City's authorities distinguished.

None of the cases cited by the City has any tendency to support the City's contention that a hearing in the trial court on the question of law—whether burdensomeness was a valid defense—was an essential element of due process.

Harvey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409 (1896) (City Br. 37), involved the entry of a summary judgment as a punishment for contempt and the judgment was held void for want of due process.

In Ohio Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292 (1937) (City Br. 37), this Court held that the Commission had erred in entering a finding based on facts which did not appear in the record and in acting on "information secretly collected and never yet disclosed." The failure of the Ohio law to provide a review for such a determination was held to be a violation of due process.

In Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287 (1920) (City Br. 37-8), the Public Service Commission had prescribed a complete schedule of maximum rates which was legislative in character, based on a valuation of the utilities property. This Court held that "the State must provide a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal," and that was the extent of the decision.

In Bluefield Water Works and Improvement Co. v. Public Service Commission, 262 U. S. 679 (1923) (City Br. 39), this Court held that a utility was entitled to a judicial review of both the law and the facts in determining whether the rates fixed by the Public Service Commission were confiscatory in character.

In Montgomery Ward & Company v. Duncan, 85 L. ed. 132 (December 9, 1940) (City Br. 42) the case was remanded to the District Court to rule on the motion for a new trial because that motion was addressed to certain questions which lay entirely within the discretion of the District Court (see p. 137).

In Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317 (1917) (City Br. 37), this Court reversed a judgment of the Louisiana Supreme Court. The Louisiana Supreme Court had rendered judgment absolute against the party who succeeded in the trial court and this ruling was placed on "a proposition of fact which was ruled to be immaterial at the trial" and concerning which there had been no proper opportunity to introduce evidence. If the Circuit Court of Appeals had ruled on the issue of burdensomeness as a matter of fact, this case might have some pertinence, but the issue of burdensomeness was held to be immaterial as a matter of law.

In so far as this case is cited by the City to support its position that it seasonably raised the constitutional question, it lends no support to such contention. As we shall see later (infra, pp. 24-5), the issue as to the motion to strike was fully argued in the Circuit Court of Appeals without any suggestion from the City that that Court could not properly or constitutionally pass upon it. The City never contended that a ruling on the question of burdensomeness would violate the Fifth Amendment until it filed its Second Petition for Rehearing in the Circuit Court of Appeals (compare IV R. 1310, Par. 1 and IV R. 1346, Par.

3) and made its first claim of any constitutional right (under the Fourteenth Amendment) in its first Petition for Rehearing (IV R. 1310).

Cobbledick v. United States, 309 U. S. 323 (1940) (City Br. 40), is an authority against rather than in support of the City's position. This Court did not say, as the City indicates, that "an appeal is a matter of grace," but that "the right to a judgment from more than one court is a matter of grace and not a necessary ingredient of justice." (p. 325). It necessarily follows that the requirements of due process can be as completely satisfied by a hearing on a question of law in an appellate court as in a trial court. This is precisely what this Court held in American Surety Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U. S. 156 (supra, p. 17).

(b) There is no Factual Basis for the City's Supposed Constitutional Question, Because the District Court Did in Fact Rule on the Defense of Burdensomeness and Its Ruling was Preserved for Review by Plaintiff's Exception to the Overruling of I[illegible] Motion to Strike.

The City's supposed constitutional que[illegible] is based upon the assumption that the District Court did not rule upon the question of law whether the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease was a valid defense. The fact is, however, that the District Court did rule upon that question in denying plaintiff's motion to strike these allegations from the City's answer and counterclaim.

As pointed out in our original brief (pp. 47-48), plaintiff filed a motion to strike from the City's answer and counterclaim all the allegations asserting that the Lease was burdensome, and thereby squarely raised the issue whether the alleged burdensomeness would be a valid defense if proved (II R. 317). This motion was overruled by the District Court, to which action plaintiff excepted (II R. 320), and on its appeal plaintiff assigned this action of the District Court as error (Points 1 and 2, III R. 1196).

The City seeks to raise the inference that plaintiff abandoned its motion to strike because it entered no formal exceptions to the order of January 18, 1939, on which the City bases its entire claim. This order did not reserve any issues of law previously decided on the motion to strike, but only deferred the taking of evidence. There is no basis for claiming that plaintiff's failure to take an exception* to this reservation can be construed as an abandonment of the exception previously taken to the important decision made by the District Court on the question of law involved in the motion to strike.

Certainly it was not so construed by the plaintiff or by the City in the course of the proceedings.

The propriety of the action of the District Court in overruling plaintiff's motion to strike was fully argued in the Circuit Court of Appeals. The City argued (Appendix A, infra, p. 67) that the ruling of the District Court was not reversible error, but there was no suggestion that the question could not properly or constitutionally be considered by the Court of Appeals. In support of the foregoing statement we have printed as Appendix A to this brief all of the discussion on this subject in any of the briefs filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals before the decision of that Court. These excerpts from the briefs filed in the Court of Appeals show how fully the question as to the motion to strike was argued in that court. There was no suggestion from anyone that the plaintiff had abandoned its motion to strike or that the question of law raised by the District Court's refusal to strike the allegations of burdensomeness was not properly before the Court of Appeals.

*Of course, under Rule 46 of the new Rules of Civil Procedure no exception was necessary.

The City now claims (City Br. 36) "The City was not bound to contemplate a decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the reserved issue of burdensomeness before its evidence was heard."

The City was put on notice by the motion to strike, the exception to the overruling of that motion, the terms of the order of January 18, 1939, the assignment of errors in the District Court, and by the briefs in the Circuit Court of Appeals that plaintiff was still insisting on its motion to strike and that the Court of Appeals was requested to direct a final judgment. Thus, in the Circuit Court of Appeals, plaintiff concluded its argument on the motion to strike as follows (Appendix A, infra, p. 64):

> "We submit that the District Court erred in refusing to strike the City's allegations as to the burdensomeness of the Lease from its Answer and Counterclaim; and we submit that this Court should correct this error of the District Court to the end that there may be a speedy and final determination of this already too protracted litigation."

Notwithstanding the notice which the City thus received that plaintiff was insisting on its motion to strike and the right to have a final judgment directed, it was not until after the Court of Appeals had announced its decision that the City's counsel even suggested that the Court of Appeals did not have the right to pass on the question of law whether the allegations of burdensomeness constituted any defense.

The City had a hearing in the District Court on plaintiff's motion to strike, which presented the question of law whether the allegations of burdensomeness furnished any valid defense. Thus there is no factual basis for the City's contention that the Court of Appeals passed on this question of law before the District Court had done so.

(c) The City's Contention that the Circuit Court of Appeals Should Not Have Based its Decision as to Burdensomeness on Res Judicata is Unsound, Because There is no Indication that the Court Based Its Decision on that Ground.

The Circuit Court of Appeals would have been fully justified in deciding every issue as to the validity of the Lease, including the issue of burdensomeness, on the basis of the prior adjudication in the Williams case. There is, however, no justification for claiming that the Court based any part of its decision on the principle of res judicata.

The rule in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, announced in 1938, required that federal courts follow the state law as pronounced by the highest court of the state. That decision of this Court was urged upon the Court of Appeals by plaintiff and the defendants. We submit that the Court was applying that rule, rather than any doctrine of res judicata, when it cited the Williams and the Fishback cases. We call attention to the language of the Court itself (IV R. 1299-1300):

> "However, another point arises where as here the trustee has the power to make leases. In making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances, he thereby commits a breach of trust. For this a trustee incurs liability to the beneficiaries who in addition may have such a lease set aside. This record discloses that the trustee was justified in selecting the mode of acquisition which it did. When the prudence point was urged before the Indiana Supreme Court, that court did not find the lease in question unreasonable as to time or as to its other terms. Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448, 458, 460.
> "We therefore conclude that the trustee had the power to make the long-term lease in question and that this particular leasehold interest in the Indianapolis Gas property is part of the trust res. In passing it might be said that the few cases discussed in the opinion above are determinative of the immediate issue here, i.e., as to the validity of the 99 years lease. See in particular Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al., 193 Ind. 282; Williams v. Citizens Gas, et al., 206 Ind. 448; Todd v. Citizens Gas, et al., 46 F. (2) 855; Chase Nat. Bank v. Citizens Gas, et al., 96 F. (2d) 363, 365. No amount of verbal magic resorted to by counsel for the City will avail to brush aside the barrier these cases present to him. Nor have we overlooked the various admissions and apparent inconsistencies of the City during the history of this gas utility controversy in the courts and before the administrative bodies, but these points we find unnecessary to the decision herein reached."

Obviously, in citing the Fishback and the Williams cases, the Circuit Court of Appeals was merely applying the Indiana law as laid down by the courts of Indiana. In both of those cases, brought by beneficiaries of the public charitable trust, the Indiana courts decided that allegations as to the burdensomeness of the Lease were no basis for setting the Lease aside or declaring it invalid.

There is much talk throughout the City's brief concerning the failure of the Circuit Court of Appeals to follow the Indiana law. The fact is, however, that the established law of Indiana compelled the conclusion which the Circuit Court of Appeals reached and this is particularly true as to the alleged defense of burdensomeness.

As pointed out in our original brief (Pl. Br. 51-52, 90-92), the order of the Indiana Public Service Commission determining that the Lease was in the public interest is conclusive under the law of Indiana and cannot be attacked in a collateral action. Public Service Commission v. Indianapolis, 193 Ind. 37, 43; 137 N. E. 705, 707. The City itself admits this (City Br. 70-71).

In both the Fishback and the Williams cases the Lease was attacked by beneficiaries of the public charitable trust on the ground, among others, that it was burdensome. In both cases the courts of Indiana refused to hear evidence in support of such ground of attack. These decisions were undoubtedly based, among other things, on the settled law of Indiana that there could be no collateral attack upon the determination of the Public Service Commission.

Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282; 138 N. E. 346, 139 N. E. 449;

Williams v. Citizens' Gas Company, 206 Ind. 448; 188 N. E. 212.

There can be no doubt that the Williams case was decided upon that ground, among others, since the Supreme Court of Indiana there said (188 N. E. 216):

"* * * Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it."

We submit that in disposing of the issue of burdensomeness the Circuit Court of Appeals was deciding that as a matter of Indiana law, as established by the courts of Indiana, the Lease was valid and the defense based upon alleged burdensomeness was wholly inconsequential.

(d) To the Extent, if at all, that the Circuit Court of Appeals Based Its Decision upon the Prior Adjudication in the Williams Case, it was Fully Justified in Doing so Since the Parties had been Fully Heard in the District Court as to the Effect of that Adjudication.

Even if we suppose, for the purpose of argument, that the Circuit Court of Appeals rested its decision as to burdensomeness solely on the question of res judicata, such action would be fully justified. The fact that the decision in the Williams case is res judicata of the issues presented in the case at bar has been discussed elsewhere (Pl. Br. 75-89, infra, pp. 50-55). We shall confine ourselves here to considering the City's contentions that "The question of res adjudicata is a question of fact" (City Br. 39) and that "The scope and effect of the issues in the Williams case could not be passed on initially by the appellate court" (City Br. 42).

The fact is that the question of the effect of the Williams case was fully presented in the District Court and there is no factual basis for the City's contention that it was denied an opportunity to present the facts. Thus, whether, as the City contends, "The question of res adjudicata is a question of fact" becomes wholly immaterial, since the City had a full opportunity to try that fact in the trial court. The fact that the Williams case was res judicata was expressly pleaded by the plaintiff (I R. 18, Par. 20) and denied by the City (I R. 159-161), and the facts as to the parties and pleadings in the Williams case were established by a Stipulation signed by all the parties in the case at bar (Stip. 14, II R. 630-633). The Stipulation shows in detail the parties to the cause (Par. 14 (a) and (b)), sets out or incorporates all of the pleadings in the cause, states the facts as to the decisions of the Superior Court and the Supreme Court of Indiana, and states that the final judgment of the Superior Court, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court, "has never been modified, reversed or set aside, but is now in full force and effect" (Par. 14 (j), II R. 633).

The City objected to the admission of the evidence contained in subdivision 14 of the Stipulation and all of the exhibits incorporated therein on the ground that the facts thus proved did not warrant a decision that the Williams case was "res adjudicata on the questions here involved" (DX 29, III R. 1052-3, Par. 4). Thus there can be no doubt that the City knew the purpose for which this evidence was offered, and had full opportunity to offer any countervailing evidence which it could produce. The Stipulation of facts (PX 1, II R. 616, Offered II R. 326) was dated February 15, 1939 (II R. 639) and had, of course, been in preparation long before that time, and the trial did not commence until March 2, 1939 (II R. 323). Hence the City had ample opportunity to prepare any evidence which it wished to offer in opposition to the stipulated facts relating to the Williams case.

Entirely aside from the question of the evidence presented to the District Court, it affirmatively appears that the City submitted to the District Court the question whether the Williams case was res judicata and requested the Court to make findings and conclusions on that question. Thus City's requested Finding 33 (III R. 1091-2) contained elaborate findings in regard to the Williams case, including a finding that (p. 1092):

> "* * * None of the questions involved in this case were actually litigated in the Williams case nor could such questions have been litigated under the issues in that case."

Finding 33 as requested by the City was adopted almost verbatim by the District Court, with some additions thereto, and the part quoted above was adopted in haec verba (Finding 40, III R. 1178-9).

The City also specifically requested the District Court for a conclusion of law that the Williams case was not res judicata "of the validity and binding effect of the lease upon the City" (No. 1, III R. 1102). The District Court adopted this requested conclusion, merely expanding it to include Citizens Gas as well as the City (No. 2, III R. 1190).

Thus the City expressly tendered to the District Court the issue whether the Williams case was res judicata of the issues here presented and obtained a decision from the District Court to the effect that the case was not res judicata. There is, therefore, no basis for the City's contention that "The scope and effect of the issues in the Williams case" were passed upon for the first time by the appellate court (City Br. 42).

In concluding this branch of the discussion it is important to observe that the City has made no attempt to meet the argument presented in our original brief (Pl. Br. 46-47, 50-51) that the reserved issue has become moot and is wholly immaterial. The only question reserved by the order of the District Court was whether the City "had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome." As pointed out in our original brief (p. 51), the City did not "refuse and reject an assignment of such lease." On the contrary, the City accepted the assignment of the Lease, had it recorded, and went into possession of the leased property and has been operating it ever since. Beyond that, as held by the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1300-1301), the City, in electing to take the trust property, necessarily elected to take the Lease which was an integral part of the trust estate.

The City's contention that it should be released from the obligations of the Lease because they are inconvenient or burdensome can best be answered in the language of this Court in Rees v. City of Watertown, 19 Wall. 107 (1873), in which a municipal corporation was attempting to escape from its obligations on the ground that the payment of them would be inconvenient or burdensome. In disposing of that question this Court said (p. 116):

> "Upon a class of the defences interposed in the answer and in the argument it is not necessary to spend much time. The theories upon which they proceed are vicious. They are based upon the idea that a refusal to pay an honest debt is justifiable because it would distress the debtor to pay it. A voluntary refusal to pay an honest debt is a high offence in a commercial community and is just cause of war between nations. So far as the defence rests upon these principles we find no difficulty in overruling it."

We submit that there is no basis in fact for the City's contention that the question of law—whether burdensome-ness was a defense—was not passed upon by the District Court, and there is no basis in law for the City's contention that the Circuit Court of Appeals was not free to pass on that question of law if the District Court had not ruled upon it.

(Pl. Br. 56-74, 93-8.) (Ind. Gas Br. 62-75.)
(City Br. 43-52.)

The significance of the City's argument as to the powers of Citizens Gas and the enforceability of the Lease against the City lies in the City's failure even to attempt to deal with several facts of vital importance to the determination of these questions. For example, the City concedes, as we have shown (Pl. Br. 56, 63), that the Lease was valid during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas, and we have pointed out that a trustee's contract, valid when made, does not become a nullity merely because of a change in trustees. The City has made no attempt to show how this Lease, admittedly valid during the 22 years of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas, could suddenly become invalid when the City succeeded Citizens Gas as trustee.

Likewise, we called attention to the importance of the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City during a period of 22 years as showing their practical construction of the powers of Citizens Gas (Pl. Br. 79). We also pointed out that the City has consistently ignored the fact of this practical construction (Pl. Br. 118). Although the City presents an extensive argument on the question of estoppel (City Br. 53-66), it still pays no attention to the fact that both Citizens Gas and the City have construed the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas as giving Citizens Gas the power to execute the Lease and make it binding on the trust for its full term. Under the law of Indiana, "it is the duty of a court, where the language of a contract is indefinite or ambiguous, to adopt the construction and practical interpretation which the parties themselves have put upon the contract."* Thus, this practical construction of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas and the City's failure to make any reference thereto are of vital importance.

(a) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 58-66.) (City Br. 43-52.)

The basis of the City's argument on this question is its assertion that a grant by a municipality is strictly construed against the grantee (City Br. 49). The alleged refusal of the Court of Appeals to apply the Indiana law on this subject is listed as one of the "assigned errors intended to be urged" by the City (City Br. 14). The City presents this argument once more, in complete disregard of City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573, a case reviewed in our original brief (Pl. Br. 58). In that case the Supreme Court of Indiana expressly held that where, as in the case at bar, a franchise contains a contract with the municipality as well as a grant to occupy the streets, such contract is "construed and interpreted like any other written contract." The City's failure even to mention this case indicates that it cannot deny that the law of Indiana is in fact directly contrary to its contention.

The City does not hesitate to go to the absurd extremes necessarily involved in its theory that Citizens Gas

---

* City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573, 576 (Pl. Br. 58, 72). In this case, as in the case at bar, the contract in question was one between a private corporation and a municipality in the State of Indiana.

had no powers other than those specifically enumerated in its Articles. Thus, the City says (City Br. 51):

> "Thus, if the terms of the trust remain silent on a trustee's powers, as the Circuit Court of Appeals said, and which is the fact, the power to make the lease cannot be implied."

In other words, since the terms of the trust are silent as to the trustee's powers and no powers can be implied, the trustee was without any powers whatever. The absurd situation which the adoption of the City's theory would have created reveals the fallacy of that theory.

The fact that the Franchise contained detailed provisions as to the use of the streets and the company's transactions with its customers (City Br. 51) sheds no light on the question whether Citizens Gas had the power to enter into a lease. The City's assertion (City Br. 51) that the Articles contained detailed provisions as to the order in which the earnings of Citizens Gas should be used and the duties of its officers is wholly unfounded. The Articles merely state the order in which certain general classes of expenditures and disbursements shall be made, the first in order being "the payment of matured debts and operating expenses" (I R. 98, Par. IX). Clearly, the rent coming due under the Lease is one of the "matured debts and operating expenses" thus given priority in the disbursement of the earnings of Citizens Gas. As for the duties of the officers, the City's reference (City Br. 51) to the record in support of its assertion is to Article IV of the By-Laws (I R. 103), which are not part of the Articles and are therefore not included in the contract between Citizens Gas and the City. There were no such provisions in the Articles themselves (I R. 95-100).

The City's contention that Citizens Gas was intended to continue indefinitely as a competitor of Indianapolis Gas (City Br. 44) is wholly unfounded. The fact of the desire to deprive Indianapolis Gas of its monopoly does not show an intention to preclude the citizens' own gas company from taking over Indianapolis Gas and thus placing the public charitable trust in complete control. If the City sincerely believed that the trust instruments required competition between the public charitable trust and Indianapolis Gas, it would never have made its covenant with the holders of its Revenue Bonds to "use all reasonable efforts to resist competition and maintain the exclusive right to serve gas in the City of Indianapolis" (PX Stip. 47, III R. 828; offered, II R. 327). In short, the City has searched the Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas in vain in its endeavor to find some implication that Citizens Gas had no power to execute the 99-year Lease.

The City's assertion that there was a fixed date for the expiration of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas (City Br. 44, Par. (5)) has already been shown to be wholly unfounded (Pl. Br. 63, supra, p. 8). Unable to find a case in which a lease was held improper because extending beyond the term of the trustee who made it, the City now contends that the Lease violates the rights of remaindermen (City Br. 48). No rights of remaindermen are here involved. The City is correct when it says that it is the successor trustee of this trust (City Br. 44, Par. (6)). The trust is a perpetual, charitable trust, and there is no provision for the City or anyone else to turn the trust estate over to any remainderman at any time. On the other hand, the case of In re Hubbell, 135 Iowa 637, 113 N. W. 512,* on which the City relies (City Br. 48-9), involved a private trust and the trust itself would have ended before the termination of the lease there involved. The Hubbell case itself points out the distinction between that case and the case at bar (p. 522):

> "* * * As hereinbefore noted, the decisions with reference to charitable trusts afford no aid, for the trust period in these is indeterminable, and the length of the lease is considered only as bearing upon the reasonableness of its provisions and of the rentals stipulated. Such leases have been approved where otherwise reasonable with terms varying from 80 to 1,000 years. See Atty. Gen. v. South Sea Co., 4 Beav. 453; City of Richmond v. Davis, 103 Ind. 449, 3 N. E. 130."

The "Additional Authorities of City of Indianapolis,"* just received, have no bearing upon the power of Citizens Gas to make the Lease or upon the question whether it is enforceable against the City. The authorities cited relate wholly to private trusts and the power of a trustee as lessor to make a long term lease of the trust estate. In general, these authorities deal with the question whether a trustee may make a lease extending beyond the life of the trust. They have no bearing upon and no tendency to support the City's contention that a trustee as lessee may not make a lease which will extend beyond the term of his trusteeship, though not beyond the duration of the trust.

When a trustee of a private trust makes a lease of the trust property extending beyond the life of the trust, questions are involved as to the respective rights of the beneficiaries entitled to the income and those ultimately entitled to the principal. No such question is involved in the case at bar which involves a charitable trust continuing indefinitely. The authorities cited are clearly within the distinction pointed out by the Circuit Court of Appeals in dealing with In re Hubbell, 135 Iowa 637; 113 N. W. 512, upon which the City relies. In discussing that case, the Court of Appeals said (IV R. 1299):

* These authorities, cited in support of the proposition that the Lease is unenforceable against the City, are:

Scott—The Law of Trusts (1939) Vol. II, Section 192, page 1010; Restatement of the Law—Trusts—Vol. I, Section 189 (c), page 499.

"* * * The Hubbell Trust case does not stand for the proposition that a trustee has no power to lease for a term of years. At the most it stands for the rule that a trustee has no power to lease trust property for a term of years exceeding the period of the trust. It does not take much comparison to see that such a rule does not support the proposition here urged, namely, that the trustee lacked the power to lease beyond its period of trusteeship.

"Moreover in the instant case the trustee's power to acquire a long-term leasehold interest is in issue, not the trustee's power to lease trust property for a long term of years."

It is clear under the authorities that a trustee has power to make a lease which may extend beyond his term of office, and the City has never cited any authority which casts any doubt on the power of Citizens Gas to make the Lease here in question.

(b) The Express Statutory Power of Citizens Gas to Enter Into the Lease for 99 Years Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising From the Public Charitable Trust.

(Pl. Br. 66-69.) (City Br. 49-50.)

The City contends that the charter of Citizens Gas was not altered by the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law and cites Todd v. Citizens' Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855, in support of this contention (City Br. 49). The Todd case merely held that the public charitable trust and the rights vested in the beneficiaries thereof were not destroyed when Citizens Gas surrendered its Franchise. That holding is wholly immaterial to the question at issue in this case. Also, as we have seen (Pl. Br. 68), the court in that case was careful to point out (p. 868):

"We are not dealing with the question of the power which the state might have exercised with respect to vested property rights created in the public interest as an inducement to the grant, if it had seen fit to do so.

The supreme authority of the state over both proprietary and governmental functions of its agency, the municipality, is not to be gainsaid."

Moreover, the City's contention is directly opposed to well established Indiana law. In Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212, the Supreme Court of Indiana held that Williams, a beneficiary of the trust here in question, and the beneficiaries for whom he spoke, held whatever interest they might have in Citizens Gas subject to the state's power to control that company as a public utility. Thus the court said (p. 215):

> "* * * the class of beneficiaries of which appellant is a member hold whatever interest they may have in the Citizens' Gas Company subject to the power of the state to control the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility."

It is significant that the City makes no reference to this holding by the Supreme Court of Indiana.

In this connection, it should be noted that the power of the State of Indiana to control public utilities extends to those owned or operated by municipalities. Thus, under the provisions of the Public Service Commission Law (Sec. 1, Pl. Br. 142), the public utilities subject to that Law include those municipally owned or operated. Examples of the application of this Law to municipal public utilities are to be found in the recent cases of City of Huntington v. Northern Indiana Power Co., 211 Ind. 502, 5 N. E. (2d) 889 (1937) and Public Service Co. v. New Castle, 212 Ind. 229, 8 N. E. (2d) 821 (1937). This means that the public charitable trust, being a public utility enterprise, is subject to the state's paramount power of control and that both Citizens Gas and the City have been at all times subject to control by the state in their conduct of that enterprise.

In addition, as a matter of Indiana law, the statute conferring express power to make the Lease (Sec. 95½, Pl. Br.

144) became part of the charter of Citizens Gas as soon as it was enacted. This fact is clearly established by Westport Stone Co. v. Thomas, 175 Ind. 319, 94 N. E. 406 (1911), and Denny v. Brady, 201 Ind. 59, 163 N. E. 489 (1928), cases cited in our original brief (Pl. Br. 61-2), but not even mentioned in the City's brief.

Its Articles and its Franchise gave Citizens Gas ample authority to make the Lease. Beyond that, all possible doubts as to the powers of Citizens Gas in this respect were removed by the grant of express statutory authority to enter into this Lease for 99 years (Pl. Br. 56-8, Subhead (a)).

(c) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding Upon the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 69-70.)

The Williams case conclusively determined, as a matter of Indiana law, that Citizens Gas had power to execute the Lease and make it binding on the trust for its full term of 99 years (Pl. Br. 69-70). The City argues that the judgment in the Williams case is not res judicata,* but it fails to answer the proposition advanced in our first brief (Pl. Br. 89) that the decision in that case established the law of Indiana applicable to the precise facts and issues here presented. The City does claim that "the enforceability of the lease against the City" was not litigated in the Williams case (City Br. 75-6), but this claim was shown to be without any foundation (Pl. Br. 76-9), before the City repeated it once more in its brief on the merits in this Court.

The decision in the Williams case—that the public charitable trust was not entitled to have removed this alleged "unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" (PX Stip. 35, II R. 772, Offered, II R. 328)—is an authoritative statement of the law of Indiana as to the binding effect of the Lease on the City as successor trustee. As such it is a binding precedent in all federal courts.

* There can be no doubt that the decision in the Williams case is res judicata in the case at bar (Pl. Br. 75-89, supra, pp. 28-30, infra, pp. 50-55).

(d) The Statutory Prohibitions on Which the City Relies Have No Application to the Case at Bar.

(Pl. Br. 93-8.) (City Br. 45-8.)

The City's contention (City Br. 47) that the Lease itself was prohibited by Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 (quoted Pl. Br. 147-9) is obviously absurd. These statutes relate solely to contracts to which a municipality is a party and, as the City points out (City Br. 44), the City was not originally a party to the Lease. Moreover, any prior prohibitions on this subject were swept aside by the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law in 1913, shortly before the Lease was executed. This Law defines "public utility" to include municipally owned or operated public utilities (Sec. 1, Pl. Br. 142), and under this Law the City itself could have entered into the Lease in 1913.

When the City took over the trust property in 1935, the question was not whether the City had the power to execute the Lease, but rather whether the City had the power to take over the trust property subject to the obligations under the Lease. The latter question must be answered in the affirmative. As we have seen (Pl. Br. 94-5), Section 53 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 (quoted Pl. Br. 147) gives cities express power to receive public trusts "and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out." The City accepted the public trust here in question and expressly stated that it "hereby agrees to the conditions and terms accompanying such trust and acknowledges itself bound to carry them out" (DX 8, III R. 1018-19, Offered, II R. 429). Beyond that, the validating acts of 1929 (quoted, Pl. Br. 150-5), prepared by counsel for the City for this very purpose (Pl. Br. 101-3), remove all possible doubt as to the power of the City to accept the trust property subject to the obligations under the Lease.

Here again, the City has adopted the expedient of ignoring the facts which disprove its contentions. With the exception of a footnote reference to Chapter 77 of the Acts of 1929 (City Br. 7), made in another connection, the City's brief makes no mention of Section 53 of Chapter 129 or of either of the validating acts of 1929 (Chapters 77 and 78). This is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the Circuit Court of Appeals laid particular emphasis upon the validating acts of 1929. Thus the court said (Opinion, IV R. 1288, footnote):

> "In fact this legislation expressly authorized the transfer of utility property (held in fee or by virtue of a lease) under circumstances peculiarly similar to the factual situation existing between Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas and the City in the instant case. If the legislators had had in mind the exact factual situation here involved, they could not have passed more appropriate legalizing and enabling legislation."

The City's contentions based on Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 (City Br. 45-48) are wholly unfounded.

IV. THE RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD CO v. TOMPKINS REQUIRED THE DECISION THAT THE LEASE IS VALID AND BINDING AND IN SUSTAINING THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FULLY COMPLIED WITH THAT RULE.

(Pl. Br. 74-92, 118-134) (Ind. Gas Br. 77-9) (City Br. 52-86).

The rule of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, on which the City relies, required the decision of the Court of Appeals that the Lease is valid and binding. In fact, the Court of Appeals could have come to a contrary decision only if it had completely disregarded that rule and the settled law of Indiana. Every Indiana decision and statute relevant to the issues raised in this case compels the conclusion that the Lease is valid and binding for its full term. The Williams case alone conclusively negatives, as a matter of Indiana law, all the City's present contentions as to the validity of the Lease (Pl. Br. 76, 89).

We have already discussed the City's contentions that the Court of Appeals did not follow the Indiana law that a grant by a municipality must be taken most strongly against the grantee (supra, pp. 33-7; Pl. Br. 58-66), and that the court refused to follow certain provisions of the Acts of 1905 (supra, pp. 40-41; Pl. Br. 93-8). There are three other questions as to which the City claims the court refused to follow the Indiana law, namely, the question of estoppel, the question of the effect of the approval of the Lease by the Public Service Commission, and the question of res judicata (City Br. 13, Par. 4). Since it is certain that the Court of Appeals reached its conclusion that the Lease was valid and binding independently of any of these principles, it is clear that the decision of that court would not be disturbed, even if the City were to prevail in its arguments on these questions. We shall, however, show briefly that the court did not depart from the Indiana law as to any of these questions.

(a) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Depart From the Indiana Law in Dealing With the Question of Estoppel of a Municipal Corporation.

(Pl. Br. 118-129; (Ind. Gas Br. 77-8) (City Br. 53-66).

One of the alleged errors assigned by the City is the supposed refusal of the Court of Appeals to follow the Indiana decisions on "the question of estoppel of a municipal corporation" (City Br. 13, Par. 4(a)). However, the City admits (City Br. 53, footnote): "The Circuit Court of Appeals made no express holding on the question of estoppel in pais." Thus, the City is assigning error for failure to follow the Indiana law with respect to a question on which the court below made no holding. Obviously, that court cannot have refused to follow the Indiana law on a question as to which it made no holding.

In our original brief we called attention to the fact that the City had made no reference to the importance of the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City during the 22-year period from 1913 to 1935 as (a) showing their practical construction of the powers of Citizens Gas, (b) showing their practical construction of the City's exercise in 1929 of its right to take over all the trust property, including the Lease, and (c) precluding them from denying the validity of the Lease, because of their laches (Pl. Br. 118). The significance of the City's extended argument on the question of estoppel lies in the fact that the City is still studiously avoiding any discussion of the conduct of Citizens Gas and the City from these points of view.*

Even the City's argument on the question of estoppel ignores many significant facts which are sufficient in them-

* The City's assertion (City Br. 63, Par. (j)) that it advised Citizens Gas of its intention to reject the Lease, a short time before it took over the trust property in September, 1935, is no answer to the laches of Citizens Gas and the City during the 22 years preceding any such announcement (Pl. Br. 129-132).

selves to estop the City. What the City actually does (City Br. 53-64) is to enumerate and later attempt to explain several things upon which plaintiff does not rely as a basis for an estoppel, but it fails to mention or explain many of the matters upon which plaintiff principally relies. For example, the City does not even mention its failure to object to the Lease until after it had been in effect for over 21 years, the insertion of at least one provision in the Lease at the instance of the City, the City's acts in requiring compliance with that provision, and its insistence upon the validity of the Lease in the Fishback case and in the Williams case (Pl. Br. 124-6).

The City contends (City Br. 63-4) that there can be no estoppel if the other party was not influenced by the acts pleaded as estoppel. This rule and the Indiana cases cited in support thereof do not preclude a decision that the City is estopped to deny the validity of the Lease. As we have shown in our original brief (pp. 123-4), where representations in regard to a material matter have been made in the course of a transaction, it is assumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the representations were relied on. The City cites no Indiana cases which purport to cast any doubt on the validity of this well established rule.

The representations that Citizens Gas had a 99-year Lease of the mortgaged property and that it guaranteed the payment of the interest and the refunding of the principal of the mortgage Bonds were, to say the least, material representations. The City and Citizens Gas bore the burden of showing that the representations in question were not relied upon, and no attempt was made to sustain that burden. It is, therefore, clear that a holding that the City is estopped to deny that the Lease is binding for its full term, based on the presumption that these representations were relied on, would be in complete accord with Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 150, 34 N. E. 865, 39 N. E. 732, and Hosford v. Johnson, 74 Ind. 479, the Indiana cases on which the City relies (City Br. 63-4), and with the rule for which they are cited.

The City's only other argument on the question of estoppel is that "an estoppel against a municipal corporation cannot be founded upon acts done by municipal officers in excess of their authority" (City Br. 64). Here, too, an acceptance of the City's contention and the Indiana cases on which the City relies would not preclude a holding that the City is estopped to deny the present binding effect of the Lease. The City does not point out which of the many acts of its municipal officers during the 22-year period in question are claimed to have been done in excess of their authority. Its only contention on this subject—that certain provisions of the Acts of 1905 prevented it from taking the trust property subject to the obligations under the Lease—has already been shown to be unfounded (supra, pp. 40-41). Moreover, the City's argument addressed to the "estoppel against a municipal corporation" overlooks the City's admission that Citizens Gas conveyed all its property to the City "subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company" (I R. 243), among which obligations are those predicated on the estoppel against Citizens Gas, which is not a municipal corporation.

There can be no doubt under the law of Indiana that a municipal corporation may be estopped when it has taken affirmative action influencing another which renders it inequitable for the corporate body to assert a different set of facts. Thus, in State v. Town of Hessville, 191 Ind. 251, 131 N. E. 46 (1921), the court said (pp. 47-48):

> "[5] For some purposes the doctrine of estoppel is applicable to municipal corporations, not because of the mere nonaction of its officers to assert a right, but because of some affirmative action influencing another, which renders it inequitable for the corporate body to assert a different set of facts."

Town of New Castle v. Hunt, 47 Ind. App. 249, 93 N. E. 173 (1910).

The City's assignment of error based on the alleged failure of the Court of Appeals to follow the Indiana law on "(a) the question of estoppel of a municipal corporation" (City Br. 13, Par. 4) presents no real issue. The Court of Appeals, as the City admits (supra, p. 43), did not base its decision as to the validity of the Lease upon estoppel, although it would have been fully justified in doing so and such holding would have been fully supported by Indiana law.

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission is a Conclusive Determination That the Lease is in the Interest of the Public Charitable Trust and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility and the Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Deviate from the Law of Indiana in Determining the Significance of that Order.

(Pl. Br. 90-92) (Ind. Gas Br. 39-45)
(City Br. 67-71).

The City does not claim that the Circuit Court of Appeals, in reaching its conclusion that the Lease is valid and enforceable, attributed any particular significance to the decision of the Public Service Commission. Hence, there is nothing in the City's argument (City Br. 67-71) which even tends to suggest that the Court of Appeals deviated in any respect from the settled law of Indiana by the attribution of any—or any improper—significance to the decision of the Public Service Commission. In this branch of its argument the City follows its characteristic procedure of attributing certain straw men to the plaintiff's argument and then proceeding to demolish them.

The City admits that under the law of Indiana a decision of the Public Service Commission "is conclusive upon the courts in a collateral action" (City Br. 71). The City also concedes that the Commission's order approving the Lease determined that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest" (City Br. 71, italics are the City's). This means that the Commission's order is conceded to be a conclusive determination that the Lease is "in the public interest." Since "the public" i.e., the inhabitants of Indianapolis, are the beneficiaries of the public charitable trust,* it necessarily follows that the Lease has been conclusively determined to be in the interest of the beneficiaries of that trust. Thus the City's admissions are in effect an admission of one of plaintiff's two claims in respect of the Commission's order.

Plaintiff's second claim is that the Commission determined that the Lease was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility (Pl. Br. 91-2). The state had delegated its power to control public utilities to the Commission and this determination was, therefore, an exercise of the state's paramount authority over the public charitable trust as a public utility (supra, pp. 37-9, Pl. Br. 66-9). As the Supreme Court of Indiana held in the William case (188 N. E. 215):

> "* * * Granting the existence of a trust relationship between the Citizens' Gas Company and a class of persons of which appellant is representative, that relationship cannot qualify the power of control of the state over the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility; * * *."

This is the rule of Indiana law on which plaintiff relies. This rule is in complete harmony with the Indiana decisions cited by the City (City Br. 70) for the propostion that the Commission's order was an administrative or legislative order.* The fundamental fact is that, as a matter of Indiana law, the Commission's order approving the Lease constituted an exercise of "the power of control of the state over the Citizens' Gas Company as a public utility."

Although the City has assigned no error to the holding of the Court of Appeals "that the lease contract covered a term of 99 years" (IV R. 1294), it argues that the Public Service Commission approved the Lease for some undetermined period less than 99 years (City Br. 69-70). The fact is, however, that the Commission expressly approved the making of the Lease "for a period of ninety-nine years" (Bill, Exhibit D, First Par., I R. 116, Offered, II R. 327). The significance of this fact is emphasized by the fact that Fishback had objected before the Commission concerning the length of the term of the Lease (PX Stip. 13, II R. 656-7, Offered, II R. 328, 331) and that he renewed this objection in his petition for a rehearing following the announcement of the Commission's decision (PX Stip. 13, II R. 660). Obviously, if it had been intended to limit the term of the Lease, provisions to that effect would have been included in the Lease and the Commission's order approving the Lease, whereas the fact is that both the Lease and the order contain provisions expressly providing for a term of 99 years.

* In discussing the Public Service Commission the City says (City Br. 68): "It is neither legislative nor judicial in character." Two pages later the City says (City Br. 70): "* * * the Public Service Commission is 'purely an administrative or legislative body without judicial power.'" It is the settled law of Indiana that the approval of a lease by the Public Service Commission is a legislative act. Thus, in Fishback v. Public Service Commission, 193 Ind. 282, 138 N. E. 346, the court said (p. 347):

> "[1, 2] The approval of a lease of the property of one public utility corporation by another is a legislative act, from which no appeal lies to the courts, * * *."

The act of the Public Service Commission in approving the making of the Lease "for a period of ninety-nine years" was an exercise of the state's power to control the public charitable trust as a public utility. Under the law of Indiana, its approval of the Lease is conclusive as to the power of Citizens Gas to enter into the Lease and make it binding for its full term of 99 years. It is clear that the Circuit Court of Appeals did not attribute any greater significance to the order of the Public Service Commission than is warranted under the settled law of Indiana.

(c) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Depart From the Indiana Law in Dealing With the Doctrine of Res Judicata.

(Pl. Br. 74-90, 92) (Ind. Gas Br. 45-54)
(City Br. 72-86).

The City assigns as error the alleged refusal of the Circuit Court of Appeals to follow the Indiana law on "(b) the doctrine of res adjudicata" (City Br. 13, Par. 4). However, it is clear that the Court of Appeals did not decide that the prior decisions were res judicata (supra, pp. 26-8), although it would have been warranted in doing so. The court's statement that "the few cases discussed in the opinion above are determinative of the immediate issue here" (City Br. 72) is undoubtedly correct and, as the court said, "No amount of verbal magic resorted to by counsel for the City will avail to brush aside the barrier these cases present to him" (IV R. 1300). In making these statements, however, the court was not holding that these cases were res judicata, but was recognizing that these Indiana decisions sustaining the validity of the very Lease here in question are controlling under the rule of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins. The City presents the amazing argument (City Br. 72) that in thus acknowledging these Indiana decisions as controlling upon it, the Court of Appeals failed to comply with the requirement that it must follow the decisions of the Indiana courts.

The City's extended argument that the Todd and Cotter cases are not res judicata (City Br. 79-86) is irrelevant. Plaintiff does not claim that the decision in those cases is in and of itself determinative of the validity of the Lease and plaintiff made no such argument in its original brief nor did the Circuit Court of Appeals so hold. Likewise, as we have pointed out (Pl. Br. 92), from plaintiff's point of view the primary importance of the Fishback case does not lie in its effect as res judicata. We shall, therefore, limit our discussion to the City's contention—that the Court of Appeals did not follow the Indiana decisions on the doctrine of res judicata—as it relates to the decision in the Williams case. The complete answer to this contention is that the Court of Appeals did not hold that the decision in the Williams case was res judicata. However, we shall show that such holding would have been in full accord with the law of Indiana.

1. Under the Indiana law, it is immaterial whether the City presents new issues as to the binding effect of the Lease on the trust, and in fact it presents no such new issues. (Pl. Br. 76-81) (City Br. 75-8).

The City's contention that the decision in the Williams case is not res judicata because "The issues in the Williams case were essentially different from the issues in this case" (City Br. 75) has no foundation either in law or facts. In our original brief we showed by numerous quotations from the pleadings in the Williams case that the supposed new issues—"The enforceability of the lease against the City" (City Br. 75-6), "the right of the initial trustee to bind the City to the terms of the lease" (City Br. 76), and "the validity of the lease after the transfer to the City" (City Br. 78, italics are the City's)—had in fact been determined in the Williams case (Pl. Br. 76-9). The City's argument, which is devoid of any record references to support it, contains no attempt to refute our proof of this fact.

It is also clear, as a matter of Indiana law, that even if the City were presenting new issues in this case, such fact would be wholly immaterial to the binding effect of the decision in the Williams case. This rule of law was fully discussed in our original brief (pp. 79-81). The City ignores our argument on this question, ignores the Indiana cases cited in our brief which established the rule on which we rely, and cites no Indiana case to support its theory that if there were some new issue in this case, the presence of such issue would have some effect on the question of res judicata.

It, therefore, clearly appears that there is no basis, either in fact or in the law of Indiana, for the City's claim that there are new issues in this case the presence of which destroys the binding effect of the decision in the Williams case.

2. The City's theory that the transfer of the trust property affected the conclusiveness of the decision in the Williams case is unsound and has no support in the law of Indiana. (Pl. Br. 82-3) (City Br. 76, 81-83).

The City contends (City Br. 81) that at the time of the Williams case "the rights of the City had not accrued and thus its rights were not and could not have been adjudicated." This contention finds no support in the Indiana law and is refuted by the following facts: (1) the City was expressly made a party to the Williams case in its capacity as "the trustee of said Public Charitable Trust" (PX Stip. 35, II R. 763, Offered, II R. 328), (2) when the defendants filed their first pleading in the Williams case (Stip. 14(b), II R. 631), the City had already demanded the transfer of the trust property (PX Stip. 22, II R. 670, Offered, II R. 327) and had procured a judicial determination of its right to enforce that demand (Stip. 13(b), II R. 630), and (3) the unsuccessful appeal from that determination was finally disposed of (Stip. 13(i), (j), II R. 630) before the defendants filed their demurrers in the Williams case (Stip. 14(d), (e), (f), II R. 632).

In addition, as we pointed out in our original brief (p. 82), the City's argument ignores the familiar rule of law that a transferee of property takes that property subject to any judgment which affected it while it was the property of the transferor. If the City's theory were accepted, any owner of property against whom a judgment was rendered affecting that property could free the property from the judgment by the simple expedient of transferring it to a third party. No such theory has been accepted by the courts, nor does the City cite any authority which supports any such theory.

It is significant that although the City purports to insist upon full compliance with the law of Indiana, it has not even mentioned the two Indiana cases cited in our original brief (p. 82) which show that in Indiana a transferee of property is bound by any judgment which affected that property in the hands of his transferor. Kitts v. Willson, 140 Ind. 604, 39 N. E. 313, one of the two cases cited in support of the City's argument on this question (City Br. 81-2), lends no support to the City's contentions but, on the contrary, fully supports the rule of law on which plaintiff relies. It should first be noted that, as shown by the City's quotation from the opinion (City Br. 82), the City is wrong when it says that Sarah Kitts brought her suit for partition after receiving the deed from Duncan (City Br. 82). The opinion specifically states that the suit for partition was filed in 1880 and that the deed from Duncan was delivered to Sarah Kitts in 1887 (39 N. E. 314).

The fact which distinguishes the above case from the case at bar is stated in the portion of the opinion quoted by the City (City Br. 82):

"* * * In this case she steps into the shoes of Duncan, who was not a party to the former suit. Whatever rights he would have, if appellant here, such rights, and no other, she has." (39 N. E. 314.)

In the case at bar, both Citizens Gas and the City were parties to the former suit and Kitts v. Willson does not, therefore, apply to this case. Beyond that, in Kitts v. Willson the Indiana court recognized the rule upon which plaintiff relies—that a transferee of property takes that property subject to any adjudications against it in the hands of the transferor—when it said (speaking of Sarah Kitts and Harden Duncan) "Whatever rights he would have, if appellant here, such rights, and no other, she has." To paraphrase this statement, as applied to the case at bar: Whatever rights Citizens Gas would have, such rights, and no other, does the City of Indianapolis have.

The only other case on which the City relies is Maple v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51 (City Br. 82), which is distinguishable because the parties in that case were not the same as the parties to the former suit there involved. This case is cited for the City's contention that (City Br. 82):

"The benefit to be derived from a judgment must be mutual before it can operate as an estoppel."

This proposition on which the City relies presents a good rule by which to test the City's theory as to the effect of the subsequent transfer of the trust property. If Williams had succeeded in obtaining a decision that the Lease was invalid, the City would undoubtedly rely on such decision as res judicata and would vigorously deny that the question of validity could be litigated again merely because the City had received the trust property after the Williams case was decided. Thus, the test of mutuality for which the City contends reveals the fallacy of the City's theory as to the effect of the transfer of the trust property.

3. Under the law of Indiana, the judgment in the Williams case binds the trust and any trustee thereof, although defendants therein presented no issues to the trustee and prospective successor trustee, their co-defendants.

(Pl. Br. 83-89) (City Br. 76, 81-84).

The City argues that the decision in the Williams case is not res judicata because the parties to this case were co-defendants in the Williams case and presented no issues between themselves in that case (City Br. 76. Par. 3). In arguing this proposition, the City makes no attempt to deal with the facts shown by the Williams case and the rule of law applicable thereto upon which plaintiff relies. In our original brief we showed that Williams was permitted to sue in behalf of the public charitable trust, that both the initial trustee and the successor trustee were parties to that suit, and that in such a situation the decree of the court binds the trust and any trustee thereof, without regard to whether the initial trustee or the successor trustee took a position adverse to its co-defendants (Pl. Br. 83-9). The City makes no mention of these facts or of this well established rule of law, and its argument is, therefore, irrelevant.

None of the authorities on which the City relies deals with a situation comparable to that presented in the case at bar and those authorities are, therefore, immaterial to the question under discussion. On the other hand, the City fails even to mention the authorities cited in our original brief (Pl. Br. 86-8) which clearly establish the rule of law directly applicable to this case, namely, that in a suit by a beneficiary of a trust in behalf of the trust, the judgment binds the trust and any trustee thereof, without regard to the issues, if any, raised between the trustee and its co-defendants. In our original brief we said (Pl. Br. 84): "The City has never cited any authority denying this well established rule," and that statement still stands.

The City's proposition that no binding decree can be entered in a suit brought by a beneficiary of a trust in behalf of the trust if no issues are presented to the trustee by his co-defendants is clearly unsound and finds no support in the law of Indiana.

As we have seen, the Circuit Court of Appeals did not hold that the decision in the Williams case is res judicata (supra, pp. 26-8) and, therefore, that court cannot have refused to follow the Indiana decisions as they relate to the effect of the Williams case as res judicata. We have, however, briefly considered each of the City's arguments in its attack upon our contention that the decision in the Williams case is res judicata and we have shown that the City's arguments on this question are wholly devoid of any foundation, either in fact or in the Indiana law.

V. THE INTEREST RATE ON THE COUPONS AFTER MATURITY AND ON THE JUDGMENT SHOULD BE SIX PER CENT.

(Pl. Br. 134-138.) (Ind. Gas Br. 82-83.)

We have no quarrel with the statement of the applicable Indiana law as expounded by the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1305), and by Indianapolis Gas (Ind. Gas Br. 82-83). The single issue is a question of fact whether a coupon attached to an Indianapolis Gas Bond is the same obligation as the Bond itself or a separate and distinct one. Obviously, it is the latter.

The Circuit Court of Appeals placed some emphasis on the language in the coupon: "being six months' interest on its First Consolidated Mortgage Five Per Cent Gold Bond No. ....." The quoted language is without significance in determining whether the coupon is the same obligation as the Bond or a distinct one. The language is merely descriptio obligationis and has no tendency to show that the coupon is merely part of the general obligation of the Bond.

We submit that the applicable rate of interest is six per cent, both on the coupons after maturity and on the judgment.

CONCLUSION.

The Lease here in question was made more than 27 years ago. During the first 22 years of that time Citizens Gas, as it admits (Bill, Par. 11, I R. 12, 224) accepted and enjoyed the profits and use of the property as granted under said 99 year Lease, and was relieved from the waste and expense of competition and duplication of facilities, and it operated and maintained the leased plant and property as a unified part of its own plant and system without regard to the preservation of the leased property as an independent, separable and competitive system. Throughout this period every one proceeded on the basis that there was a valid Lease for the full term of 99 years. As stated by the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1294):

> "* * * And until this litigation was started it appears that every one proceeded on the basis that the lease contract covered a term of 99 years."

During the entire period of 27 years the City of Indianapolis and the residents and inhabitants thereof have had the full benefit and advantage of such operations and of the profits produced thereby. The Lease was originally approved by both the directors and trustees of Citizens Gas Company and by the Public Service Commission of Indiana. There has never been a suggestion throughout this case that any director or trustee of Citizens Gas Company or the Public Service Commission was actuated by anything but the highest motives in making or approving this Lease. The reports of Citizens Gas to its stockholders issued at about the time the Lease was made (Pl. Br. 6-7) are eloquent of the advantages which would flow to Citizens Gas and to the public from the making of the Lease here in question.

We submit that Citizens Gas clearly had authority to make the Lease here in question and that the Lease is enforceable against the trust property and against the City as successor trustee. The technical objections urged by the City to the binding character of the Lease and to the procedure of the Court of Appeals are without substance and the judgment of the Court of Appeals (except as to the rate of interest just discussed) should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

IV. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN REFUSING TO STRIKE FROM THE CITY'S ANSWER AND COUNTERCLAIM THE ALLEGATIONS AS TO THE BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE.

Plaintiff moved the Court to strike from the City's answer and counterclaim all the allegations that the rentals required by the Lease are excessive or that the Lease is burdensome (II R. 317). This motion was overruled, but the Court directed that the evidence as to this alleged reason for the City's claim that the Lease is not enforceable against it should be deferred and presented for determination at a later date (II R. 320, 321-2). However, it is clear that none of these allegations is in any way material to the issue as to the validity and enforceability of the Lease, that no evidence in support of those allegations is admissible in this case, and that the District Court should have granted plaintiff's motion to strike.

1. Prior Determinations that the Lease is Not Burdensome are Binding upon the City.

We have already shown that the order of the Public Service Commission approving the Lease conclusively determined that the Lease is in the public interest. That order contains an express finding that the value of the lessor's properties justified the rental to be paid (I R. 118). It was within the Commission's jurisdiction to determine, and it did determine, that it was in the public interest for Citizens Gas to lease the property of Indianapolis Gas on the terms approved by the Commission, and that determination is conclusive in the case now before this Court. Since the "public interest" is synonymous with the interests of the residents of the City of Indianapons, the Commission's finding that the Lease was in the public interest was in effect a decision that the Lease was beneficial to the trust estate of which those residents were the beneficiaries.

In this connection it will be remembered that on the demurrers to the Williams complaint the Indiana courts held that the Lease was valid and binding, despite Williams' allegations (II R. 780) as to the burdensomeness of the Lease. Thus, in Williams v. Citizens' Gas Co., 206 Ind. 448, 188 N. E. 212 (1933), the court said (p. 216):

> "* * * Further it was within the jurisdiction of the public service commission to consider and approve the lease and the complaint discloses that the public service commission did approve it. The complaint does not make out a case for any relief on the basis of invalidity of the lease or of the action of the commission in approving the same."

Thus the Supreme Court not only held that the ruling of the Public Service Commission was binding and conclusive, but also held that any evidence as to the alleged burdensome character of the Lease would not establish the invalidity of the Lease and that no such evidence could be received. This decision upon the precise point here under consideration was made at the behest of the City itself (PX Stip. 38, III R. 813; PX 135, quoted infra, pp. 169-70).

2. The City is Precluded by its Laches and the Laches of Citizens Gas from Raising any Issue as to the Alleged Burdensomeness of the Lease.

The laches of Citizens Gas and the City have already been fully discussed (supra, pp. 73, 154), but a few additional details should be noted here.

When his petition for a rehearing was denied by the Public Service Commission, Fishback at once filed suit to set aside the Commission's order. Among other things, Fishback contended that (II R. 661):

> "4. The rental and fixed charges to be paid as part of the rental ordered and permitted to be paid by the terms of the lease and order, are unreasonable and unlawful, and their payment will result in a waste and misapplication of the funds, earnings and property of the Citizens Gas Company, and an irreparable injury to its stock and certificate holders, including plaintiff."

Fishback also alleged that (II R. 665-6):

> "* * * the obligation taken on by the Citizens Gas Company under said order and lease, * * * impairs the obligation of the contract existing between the Citizens Gas Company and this plaintiff and other stockholders, and between the company and the City of Indianapolis, in the following particulars:
>
> "2. It constitutes such lien and incumbrance upon the property and earnings of said company that the city can not at the end of twenty-five years from the date of the franchise of the company take over the plant and system of the company as provided in section 22 of the franchise of said company, as shown in Exhibit No. 2 hereto attached."

The City denied these allegations as to the burdensomeness of the Lease (Stip. 9(c), II R. 625) and thereby took a position directly opposed to the position it takes in the case at bar.

We submit that the laches of Citizens Gas and the City for a period of 22 years precludes both of them from contending that the Lease is burdensome or unfair in any respect.

3. The City, as Successor in Interest to a Party to the Lease, Could Not Escape the Obligations of the Lease Even if it Were Able to Show that those Obligations Were or Are Burdensome.

The law is well established that a party to a contract —otherwise valid—or the successor in interest to that party, cannot escape the obligations of that contract by proving that those obligations were burdensome in the first instance or became burdensome later.

If it could be shown that the Lease is now burdensome, that fact alone would be without legal significance. If the Lease was fair at the time it was made (the determination of the Public Service Commission that it was fair is conclusive on this point), it cannot be claimed that it is unfair now because it appears to be burdensome at the present time. It would be no evidence of unfairness to show that the leased property at the present time has depreciated in value, in the absence of some showing that this depreciation is due to some fault of the lessor, a showing which could not be made in view of the fact that it was the duty of the lessee "to maintain and keep the demised premises in as good order, repair and condition" as they were at the time the Lease took effect (I R. 64).

If it could be shown that the Lease was burdensome when executed (thus making a collateral attack upon the express finding of the Public Service Commission), that fact would also be without legal significance. The rule is clearly established that a contract binds the parties thereto, even though one of them comes to believe that he is paying far more than the consideration he receives is worth, and even though that is the fact.

1 Restatement of the Law of Contracts, Sec. 81;
Hamilton v. Hamilton, 162 Ind. 430, 70 N. E. 535, 537 (1904);
Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88, 75 N. E. 582, 592 (1905);
Smith v. Smith, 340 Ill. 34, 172 N. E. 32, 34 (1930).

Similarly, a lessor cannot set aside a lease because he considers the rent to be inadequate, and a lessee cannot avoid the obligations provided for in his lease because he thinks that they are burdensome.

Lowther Oil Co. v. Guffey, 52 W. Va. 88, 43 S. E. 101, 102 (1903); Smith v. Collins, 148 Ala. 672, 41 So. 825 (1906).

The rule which these cases announce is so clearly established as to require no further discussion at this time. The cases reviewed below (infra, pp. 166-7), involving municipal corporations, are, of course, additional authorities in support of the rules just referred to. Municipal corporations are in the same position as individuals in so far as their contractual obligations are concerned and are held just as responsible for performance of their contracts as are individuals or private corporations.

Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 66 Fed. 140, 144 (C. C. A. 4th, 1895) (certiorari denied 165 U. S. 720);
Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas-Light & Coke Co., 66 Ind. 396, 407 (1879);
Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 140 Ind. 107; 39 N. E. 433, 436;
State ex rel. v. Kansas City, 319 Mo. 386; 4 S. W. (2d) 427, 431.

Since municipalities and individual persons are on the same footing with respect to the necessity of fulfilling their contractual obligations, and since an individual cannot refuse to carry out his contract because he has not made a good bargain for himself, it, of course, follows that a municipal corporation may not refuse to comply with the provisions of a contract on the ground that it is, or is thought to be, burdensome.

Eau Claire Dells Improvement Company v. Eau Claire, 172 Wis. 240, 179 N. W. 2 (1920). This was an action to enjoin the city of Eau Claire from forfeiting plaintiff's contract with the city. The contract was entered into in February, 1877 and provided that the plaintiff should build and maintain a dam and that it should have a 99 year lease of any of the resulting water power not required for the city's uses. The city made no complaint about the lease until 1906, when it declared the contract forfeited.

The Supreme Court said that this contract was a business matter, as contrasted with the exercise of governmental functions, and that in matters of this sort a city is governed by the same rules as an individual. The court ruled that the city could enter into a contract of this sort for a period of 99 years and that it was estopped to object to the validity of the lease. The court also said (179 N. W. 7):

> "It may be from the present viewpoint, more than forty years after the contract has been in effect, that it could be said the city made an improvident contract. But it cannot be said that good judgment would have so pronounced at the time it was made. But be that as it may, it was entered into in good faith, without fraud, in furtherance of the legislative purpose and in a proprietary capacity. In such capacity it is deemed competent for a municipality, as well as for a private individual, to make a valid improvident contract."

In Fooshee & Hungerford v. Victoria, 54 S. W. (2d) 220, the Texas Court of Civil Appeals said (p. 223):

> "However inadvisable and shortsighted it may have been on the part of a city administration to have made the contract with appellants, it was executed by the city, and it has no more power to arbitrarily cancel and repudiate the contract than any citizen would have."

Terre Haute v. Terre Haute Water-Works Company, 94 Ind. 305 (1884). This case involved the city's sale of its shares of stock in a water-works company. Unfortunately the opinion omits many of the facts but it appears that the sale of the stock was upheld. At any rate, the Court held that the city had authority to make such a sale and that as an incident to such authority it had the right to decide upon what terms the sale should be made. On this point the Court further said (p. 307):

"Where a discretionary power is conferred upon a municipal corporation courts will not interfere with its exercise. Sales made by a municipal corporation, in the exercise of a discretionary power vested in it, can not be annulled upon the ground that the bargain was an improvident one."

Thus, it is clear that in September, 1935, the City could not for the first time attack the validity of the Lease because of its alleged burdensomeness. The advantageous or burdensome character of a contract is of no importance in determining whether the contract is binding, either before or after the transfer of the assets of one of the contracting parties.

We submit that the District Court erred in refusing to strike the City's allegations as to the burdensomeness of the Lease from its Answer and Counterclaim; and we submit that this Court should correct this error of the District Court to the end that there may be a speedy and final determination of this already too protracted litigation.

VI.

THE AVERMENTS OF THE CITY THAT IT HAS A RIGHT, AS SUCCESSOR TRUSTEE, TO REJECT THE LEASE AND AVOID LIABILITY THEREUNDER ON THE GROUNDS THAT SAID LEASE IS BURDENSOME AND NOT ADVANTAGEOUS TO THE TRUST, EVEN IF SAID FACTS ARE TRUE, PRESENTS NO VALID GROUND OF DEFENSE.

In the order of the District Court made on January 18, 1938 (II R. 321-2) it was provided that the trial be deferred on the one issue regarding inforcibility of the lease arising from the claim of the City that it had the right as successive trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the grounds that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to the trust.

Reference is made to this order and reserved issue only to point out that it is not such an issue as, upon reversal of the judgment appealed from, would require a new trial of the cause. The rule has been long established in Indiana, as it is elsewhere, that after parties have entered into a contract without fraud, no defense to the obligations thereof is created by reason of the fact that in subsequent course of events the consideration moving from one party may, either in the opinion of that party or in fact, have become excessive. No party to a contract may be relieved of obligations created thereby simply because he subsequently believes that his bargain was not so advantageous as he had supposed when entering into the agreement. This principle is elementary and without it all stability of value or contracts would end.

The rule is succinctly stated in Mullen v. Hawkins, 141 Ind. 363 at 366:

> "Where a party, voluntarily, and without fraud or deception enters into a contract and receives all he contracted for he can not be relieved on the ground of inadequacy or want of consideration."

Courts will not inquire into the adequacy of a bona fide consideration after it has been accepted and utilized for over twenty-three years.

When it is remembered that both the City and the Citizens Gas have defended this lease on every occasion it has been attacked during the first twenty-three years of its existence, realization is had of the actions and representations taken and made by the City from the time of the resolution of its Board of Public Works on March 29, 1929, until acceptance of the instrument assigning said lease and its taking possession of said property on the 9th day of December, 1935, this alleged "ground" of defense seems indeed amazing.

Furthermore this issue was specifically raised and adjudged in each the Fishback and Williams cases both. It was also decided by the City in determining whether it would or would not accept the trusteeship of said trust. Its decision was necessarily arrived at by weighing both the benefits and liabilities of the leasehold, as well as by determining the value of other parts of the trust estate. The action of the City on March 29, 1929, and in issuing its bond in order to effect its succession to the trusteeship is conclusive on that question.

The City's own statement as made in its brief in words to strike out (Todd v. Citizens Gas) is particularly pertinent.

> "Under the provision of Section 53 of the Act of 1905, the City Council has the power to determine whether to accept the trust and agree to the terms and conditions which bind the City. It is for the City Council to determine whether the offer to the City is of value and should be accepted."

Having determined that the trust in its entirety was of value, and having accepted the same, the City may not now deny its acts or the legal results following therefrom.

It is therefore respectfully submitted that upon reversal of the judgment here appealed from, said reserved issue is not such a one as would require the ordering of a new trial of this cause.

(pp. 118-119.)

VI. The District Court did not err in refusing to strike from the City's Answer and Counter-claim the allegations as to the burdensomeness of the lease. (Plaintiff's brief, p. 161.)

It is the well settled rule in Indiana that it is not reversible error to overrule a motion to strike out a part of a pleading.

Guenther v. Jackson, 73 Ind. App. 162, 164, citing Woodhouse v. Jennings, 164 Ind. 555, and also Ohio Valley Trust Co. v. Wernke, 179 Ind. 49.

While it is conceded that the manner of pleading is controlled by the adjective law of the state, the question of whether or not the refusal of the court to strike out parts of a pleading is erroneous is substantive law. That being true, this court is bound by the state rule.

Erie Railroad Co. v. Tomkins, 304 U. S. 64.

As the District Court reserved the question for future determination as to the burdensome of the lease, the ruling on the motion to strike could not have resulted in reversible error.

Reply Brief of Plaintiff-Appellant (Chase).

(pp. 54-55.)

VIII. THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN REFUSING TO STRIKE FROM THE CITY'S ANSWER AND COUNTERCLAIM THE ALLEGATIONS AS TO THE BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE.

(Pl. Br. 161-8.) (Ind. Gas Br. 176-8.) (City's Br. 118-19.)

The City does not attempt to support the District Court's ruling on the motion to strike; it argues merely that the decision is not reversible error. Thus plaintiff's contentions:—(1) that the City's allegations that the Lease is burdensome are not material to the issue as to the validity of the Lease, and (2) that no evidence should be admitted in support of these allegations—stand admitted for want of any attempt to refute them. (See Pl. Br. 161-8.) Moreover, it is clear that even the argument that the District Court's error is not reversible error is not well taken.

The error in refusing to strike these immaterial allegations was not cured by the Court's order that the evidence on these allegations should be presented at a later date, and the fallacy of the City's argument that the error is not reversible because of that order (City's Br. 119) is obvious. The alleged Indiana rule that such an error as this is not reversible (City's Br. 118) has no application in a federal court. On this point the City cites Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, and asserts that (City's Br. 119) "whether or not the refusal of the court to strike out parts of a pleading is erroneous is substantive law." Of course, the City's contention that a party may escape from a contract by showing that it has become burdensome does present a question of substantive law, but one which is settled in Indiana and elsewhere against the City (Pl. Br. 165-7). However, the alleged procedural rule in Indiana upon which the City relies has nothing to do with the merits of the question whether the Court's refusal to strike out parts of the City's answer and counter-claim was erroneous and relates solely to the question whether that error is reversible error. "The question whether an erroneous ruling on a motion to strike constitutes reversible error is a question of practice and procedure and the rule which still obtains as to such a question is clearly stated in Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Sullivan, 108 F. (2d) 581, 583 (C. C. A. 5th, 1940), as follows:

> "* * * all questions of preserving and assigning errors, and whether an error is harmless or reversible, are matters of procedure, and in regard to such matters, this court is governed by the rules of practice and procedure in the Federal Court rather than by those in the State Court."

The City does not deny that the District Court erred in refusing to strike the City's allegations as to the burdensomeness of the Lease. This error can be easily corrected merely by making a final determination of the validity of the Lease without remanding the case for evidence in support of the City's allegations that the Lease is burdensome. We submit that this Court should correct this error so that there may be a speedier determination of this already too protracted litigation and that there is no rule of law which precludes the Court from doing so.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK, TRUSTEE, RESPONDENT AND CROSS-PETITIONER.

In view of the fact that the City's counsel filed an addition to the appendix of their brief during the course of the oral argument and the fact that the Court raised one or two questions which had not been raised by the City or briefed by any of the parties, we are asking leave to file this short Supplemental Brief.

1. Section 249 of Cities and Towns Act of 1905.

The City's "Addition to Appendix" sets forth Section 2 of an Act of the General Assembly of Indiana of 1911 which amended Section 249 of the Act of March 6, 1905. This is the precise section of the statute upon which the plaintiff Todd relied in 1929 in seeking to enjoin the transfer of the Citizens Gas property to the City. In meeting this contention, the City's answer in the Todd case (II R. 737, Par. (1)) asserted that Section 249 of the Acts of 1905 was not applicable in view of the express provisions of Section 53 of the same Act, which authorized cities "To receive * * * public trusts and to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same and bind the corporation to carry them out." The significance of this section of the Indiana statute and the City's contention in the Todd case is dealt with in our original brief (Pl. Br. 93-6).

The Circuit Court of Appeals adopted the City's construction of the Indiana statutes and held that such statutes authorized the City to take over the trust property without a popular vote. Todd v. Citizens' Gas Co., 46 F. (2d) 855, 865-6 (1931).

2. Plaintiff's Independent Rights to Enforce Compliance with the Lease.

The Mortgage specifically vested all rights of action thereunder in the plaintiff (Trustee) and provided that they could be specifically enforced by any court (Section XIV, I R. 46). Also, the Lease contained this specific provision (I R. 72):

> "22. The Lessee covenants to perform and observe all the covenants and agreements of the Lessor, except those as to the payment of the principal of the bonds, contained in its mortgage * * *." (Emphasis supplied.)

Obviously the party entitled to enforce this obligation of the lessee must be the party who is entitled to enforce "the covenants and agreements of the Lessor [Indianapolis Gas], * * * contained in its mortgage," namely, the Trustee. One of the covenants which the lessor made expressly "to and with" the Trustee was that it would "provide for and pay" the interest on the Bonds (Section IX, I R. 44).

Under such circumstances, and particularly in view of the threat to plaintiff's rights as third party beneficiary under the Lease and to the security, arising from the agreement of March 2, 1936, between the City and Indianapolis Gas (I R. 205-7), it is clear that plaintiff had not only a separate and distinct right but an affirmative duty to protect its rights arising from the Lease.

Old Colony Trust Co. v. City of Omaha, 230 U. S. 100, 122 (1913);
Bankers Trust Co. v. Raton, 258 U. S. 328, 337 (1922);
Welden National Bank v. Smith, 86 Fed. 398, 401 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1898).

Plaintiff's independent position in this case is clear. Moreover, the City concedes that plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas are "adverse in attitude" as to a number of the issues presented (City Br. 15).

3. Effect of Amendments on Jurisdiction.

It is clear that amendments to a bill and enlargements of the original relief prayed for, in so far as they are based on facts in existence when the original bill was filed, are available in support of the jurisdiction of the court.

Norton v. Larney, 266 U. S. 511, 515-16 (1925);
Speh v. Ballard, 83 F. (2d) 809, 810 (C. C. A. 5th, 1936).

All of the conflicts between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas enumerated in our reply brief (pp. 9-11) are based on the facts as they existed when the Bill was filed, with the possible exception of part of No. 5, namely, the right to collect unpaid interest. However, a default in the payment of interest was inevitable in view of the contract of March 2, 1936, between the City and Indianapolis Gas.

4. Certain Corrections.

A. Counsel for the City stated during the oral argument that the City had entered into possession of the Citizens Gas property, including that under lease, under a standstill agreement. It is undisputed that the City went into possession of all the property, including that under lease, on September 9, 1935 (Stip. 6 (c), II R. 622; II R. 350). In support of the statement that there was a standstill agreement on September 9th counsel referred to an Indianapolis Gas letter of September 30th in which Indianapolis Gas indicated its willingness to enter into "a mutual stipulation" (PX Stip. 66, III R. 838). When the Court inquired whether such a stipulation had been entered into, the City's counsel referred to the agreement of March 2, 1936, made more than five months later.

The only agreement between the City and Indianapolis Gas prior to March 2, 1936 is that set forth in the two letters of September 30th relating to the interest payment of October 1, 1935 (DX Stip. 64, 65, III R. 968-9). These letters were written three weeks after the City had taken possession of the property. The significance of these facts is discussed in our original and reply briefs (Pl. Br. 110-111; Pl. Rep. Br. 3). It is important to note in this connection that in its original brief the City claimed only that "On September 30, 1935 Indianapolis Gas agreed to make an arrangement for temporary use" (City Br. 9).

Counsel for the City argued that Finding 51 of the District Court indicated that there had been an agreement "continuously in effect since September 9, 1935" (III R. 1185). This finding was adopted substantially verbatim from the City's Requested Finding 43 (III R. 1096-7), but there is absolutely no evidence to support it and the City has never attempted to support it by any record reference.

B. In discussing the motion to strike filed by the City and Citizens Gas in the Williams case, counsel for the City indicated that substantial parts of the Williams complaint relating to the Lease had been stricken out. The fact is, however, as shown by the Stipulation of the parties in this case, that only a single paragraph was stricken from the complaint and that related primarily to the formation of a conspiracy to have the Public Service Commission law passed and the purposes of such conspiracy. It was affirmatively stipulated that "At the same time said court overruled all other specifications of said motion" (Stip. 14(c), II R. 631-2).

The wide scope of this motion and the limited extent to which it was granted will be apparent from an examination of the motion itself (PX Stip. 37, II R. 804-812). Only specification 2 of the motion was granted (cf. Stip. 14(c), II R. 631-2, and II R. 805-6).

After this motion to strike was granted to this limited extent, the complaint (PX Stip. 35, II R. 761-802) remained unchanged except for the elimination of the italicized language appearing on page 778.

Thus the Williams complaint still contained:

(1) The Franchise and Articles of Citizens Gas (II R. 765).

(2) The joint petition of Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas before the Public Service Commission (II R. 779).

(3) The full text of the Lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas (II R. 780).

(4) The allegations relating to the invalidity of the Lease (Pars. 19, 20 (except the italicized language), 22, 23, 24, and 29) (II R. 776-791).

These were the allegations which the Supreme Court of Indiana held did not justify the admission of any evidence as to the alleged burdensomeness, improvidence, and invalidity of the Lease.

We have taken space to correct only these two of the more glaring inaccuracies in the City's oral argument.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM OF CITIZENS GAS COMPANY OF INDIANAPOLIS, RESPONDENT*

If, as the City of Indianapolis contends, Citizens Gas Company had no power or authority as Trustee to execute the 99-year lease, Citizens Gas relieved itself of all obligation to Indianapolis Gas Company, the named lessor, and to the mortgage trustee by delivering the possession of the property to the City on September 9, 1935. Both Indianapolis Gas, as owner, and Chase National Bank, as mortgage trustee, had accepted the payments made by Citizens Gas under the lease as sufficient compensation for the use of the property by Citizens Gas. And, without seeking any agreement from Citizens Gas, Indianapolis Gas acquiesced in the transfer of possession of its property to the City by the written agreement between the City and Indianapolis Gas of March 2, 1936 (I. R. 205-208).

---

* This memorandum is intended merely to supplement the brief heretofore filed by this respondent.

If, as Chase and Indianapolis Gas contend, the 99-year lease, being valid in its inception, is binding and is a charge against the trust property conveyed to the City on September 9, 1935, for the remainder of the term of 99 years, the question of the present liability of Citizens Gas has no practical importance. Since by Section 29 of the 99-year lease the liability of Citizens Gas is limited to the trust assets (I R. 78), the liability of the City and the liability of Citizens Gas coincide.

And, regardless of the liability or non-liability of the City, the liability of Citizens Gas can never exceed the limitation imposed by Section 29 of the 99-year lease (I. R. 78). Since no one denies that

(1) the Public Charitable Trust is valid,

(2) the City had the right to require the conveyance and transfer of all of the property of Citizens Gas to the City, and Citizens Gas was under the corresponding duty to convey and transfer all of its property to the City, subject to all of the legal obligations of Citizens Gas, and

(3) the conveyance and transfer were made strictly in accordance with such right and duty, liability cannot now be imposed upon Citizens Gas without altering the plain meaning of the lease contract between the parties. No one has ever suggested that there should be a reconveyance to Citizens Gas, but unless this is ordered and the execution of the admittedly valid Public Charitable Trust completely nullified, there is no legal basis to warrant the imposition of liability upon Citizens Gas.

In other words, if the trust property now in the possession of the City is not subject to the obligation of the 99-year lease, the lease has expired by reason of the fact that Citizens Gas had no authority to contract with reference to any period beyond the term of its own trusteeship. Otherwise Citizens Gas is made liable in violation of Section 29 of the 99-year lease (I R. 78). In such case, Section 32 of the lease (I R. 79-80) comes into play, making the lease binding upon the parties only "for the longest term for which the parties might lawfully contract."

As pointed out in the original brief of Citizens Gas (page 6, paragraph (3)), both Indianapolis Gas and the purchaser of the bonds had full knowledge of the terms and conditions of the Public Charitable Trust (I R. 62; II R. 583-586). The rights of the City and the legal duty of Citizens Gas were congenital in the existence of Citizens Gas.

The City's rejection of the assignment of the 99-year lease was obviously for the purpose of disavowing any purpose to accept the obligations of the lease and to permit the City to contest its validity. The formal rejection could have no other legal effect because the statute directing the conveyance to the City and authorizing the City to accept the conveyance provided as follows:

"Whenever any instrument of transfer or conveyance shall be executed, transferring or conveying the property, either real or personal, of any such corporation to such town or city the title to such property shall vest in such town or city, subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation."

Chapter 78, Acts Indiana General Assembly 1929, Section 1. (Burns' Indiana Statutes Annotated, 1933, Section 48-7218.)

Thus it is made clear again that there can be no possibility of imposing liability upon Citizens Gas separate and apart from the property conveyed and transferred to the City on September 9, 1935. This property is subject to all legal obligations of Citizens Gas presently existing under the 99-year lease.

As stated above, this memorandum is intended merely to supplement the original brief of Citizens Gas.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM G. SPARKS,
Counsel for Respondent Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis.

ANSWER TO PETITION OF CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, ET AL., RE LIMITATION OF OPENING STATEMENT AND ARGUMENT OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK.

The City's petition asks that the Court limit the Chase National Bank in the presentation of its opening statement and argument to the facts and arguments in respect to the limited questions raised by its cross writs of certiorari.

We are entirely willing to accommodate ourselves to any arrangement which the Court considers proper or most helpful to it in the presentation of these cases. We call attention, however, to certain considerations indicating the inappropriateness of the request made by the City.

Rule 28 of this Court, in so far as material, reads as follows:

> "1. The appellant or petitioner shall be entitled to open and conclude the argument. But when there are cross-appeals or cross-writs of certiorari they shall be argued together as one case, and the plaintiff in the court below shall be entitled to open and conclude the argument.
>
> "* * *
> "4. * * * The time allowed may be apportioned between counsel on the same side, at their discretion; but a fair opening of the case shall be made by the party having the opening and closing."

The first paragraph of Rule 28 is a provision which has customarily been adopted by appellate courts. Similar provisions have been adopted by each of the Circuit Courts of Appeals, including that for the District of Columbia, and are common in the courts of last resort of the several states. So far as we can discover there has never been any judicial interpretation or application of this provision in any reported decision. The purpose of the rule, however, is clear. Since both the plaintiff and defendant in the court below are objecting to the judgment under review, the plaintiff below is allowed the opening and closing arguments, just as he was in the lower court.

Since paragraph 4 of Rule 28 expressly provides that "a fair opening of the case shall be made by the party having the opening and closing," it is clear that the rule contemplates that the party entitled to the opening (the plaintiff below, in the present case) should make a full statement of the facts as a part of his opening argument.

The difficulty and confusion which would necessarily result from requiring the plaintiff below to make a restricted statement of facts, limited only to the errors upon which he relies, is too apparent to require elaboration.

Such an arrangement would entail a piecemeal statement of the facts—some by plaintiff's counsel and some by defendant's—which could hardly be helpful to the Court.

We respectfully submit that counsel for plaintiff below is entitled to make a full and fair opening of the case as contemplated by the fourth paragraph of Rule 28.

REJOINDER BRIEF OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK, TRUSTEE, RESPONDENT AND CROSS-PETITIONER.

Counsel for the City have filed a Supplemental Memorandum in which they reiterate many of their previous arguments. The Supplemental Memorandum presents no arguments not fully covered by the briefs already on file, with the single exception of the contention that the so-called "findings" of the trial court are unassailable (as to this contention see p. 14, infra). We shall, however, briefly discuss each of the ten propositions advanced by the City, in the order and under the numbers stated in its Supplemental Memorandum.

NOTE: Emphasis appearing in quotations throughout this brief is ours unless otherwise indicated.

For the convenience of the Court we attach hereto as Appendix A (infra, pp. 20 to 32) an Index and Analysis of Arguments, which contains a summary statement of our position and appropriate cross references to the various briefs of all the parties. A more complete answer to the City's arguments can be found in the earlier briefs, with the aid of this Index and Analysis of Arguments.

The City's Supplemental Memorandum is another example of the tactics adopted by the City throughout this litigation of attempting to evade the simple issues involved by presenting a host of spurious and wholly immaterial arguments. This case is very simple. It presents only a single issue, namely, whether the Lease became a part of the trust res in the hands of the corporate trustee. The determination of that issue must necessarily result in a finding that the Lease is binding on the public charitable trust and on the City as successor trustee.

This Case Presents Only One Fundamental Issue—Whether the Lease Became Part of the Trust Res in the Hands of the Corporate Trustee.

The City has made two fundamental admissions which are sufficient in and of themselves to establish that the Lease is binding on the City as successor trustee.

First, the City admits (I R. 243):

> "that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company, * * *."

This admission establishes that the City had the power to take over all the trust property, subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas, including those under the Lease, and that the City in fact exercised that power. It disposes of the issues raised by the City as to the effect of the statutory prohibitions on which it relies the nature and extent of its powers in this matter and the alleged burdensomeness of the Lease.

Counsel for the City understands the effect of this admission, as shown by the following colloquy during the oral argument:

> "Mr. Justice Reed: We have here, then, at least as one phase of it, to determine whether or not this lease became a part of the property of the corporate trustee.
> Mr. Thompson: Your statement is entirely correct. If it did, we are obligated by its terms. If it did not, we are not obligated by it."

There is the whole case in a nut shell. As counsel admitted, the sole issue to be determined is "whether or not this lease became a part of the property of the corporate trustee." The City answered this question in the affirmative by its second admission.

Second, the City admits (I R. 143):

> "that as to these defendants, no controversy ever existed as to the binding force and effect of said Lease for and during the term of trusteeship of said Citizens Gas Company."

This admission, which is further reinforced by a similar admission at the oral argument,* establishes that Citizens

---

* During the first oral argument the following colloquy took place between the Chief Justice and the City's counsel:

"The Chief Justice: Are you contending the lease was invalid as between the lessor and lessee?

"Mr. Thompson: Not if viewed solely as between the lessor and lessee.

"The Chief Justice: It was the Citizens Company that was established as this Charitable Trust, was it not?

"Mr. Thompson: As the original trustee.

"The Chief Justice: But it stood as the initial trustee at the time it took this lease?

"Mr. Thompson: That is true.

"The Chief Justice: Are you contending the lease from the Indianapolis to the Citizens in that capacity was invalid?

"Mr. Thompson: No, sir, I have admitted in my answer to the contrary."

Gas had power to execute the Lease and make it binding on the public charitable trust.

The City takes refuge in the theory that the Lease was no longer binding after it became trustee, but the City has never been able to show how a Lease admitted to be binding on the trust during the term of the trusteeship of Citizens Gas could become voidable merely because of the substitution of a new trustee. There can be no doubt that the Lease was in fact "a part of the property of the corporate trustee" and that as successor trustee the City is obligated by its terms.

We ask the Court to bear in mind, during the following discussion, the simplicity of the issues here presented as demonstrating the complete immateriality of most of the arguments advanced by the City in its Supplemental Memorandum.

I.

CORRECTIONS IN THE CITY'S FACTUAL SUMMARY.

(Supp. Mem. 4.)

The City asserts that it rejected the assignment of the Lease (Supp. Mem. 4, 6, 12). There is no evidence to support this statement except the bare fact that the Board of Directors for Utilities passed a resolution saying it rejected the assignment. This resolution is meaningless, for at the same meeting the Board took action which had precisely the contrary effect in law (Pl. Br. 107-11), that is,

(1) It accepted delivery of the assignment (II R. 467).

(2) It had the assignment recorded (II R. 330, 467).

(3) It retained possession of the assignment (II R. 468).

(4) It took possession of the leased property (II R. 350), with no arrangement authorizing it to do so except as assignee (Pl. R. Br. 3, Pl. Supp. Br. 4).

Various other acts of the Board at this same meeting of September 9, 1935, which had the legal effect of an acceptance of the assignment are summarized in our original brief (pp. 106, 111-117).

The statement (Supp. Mem. 4, 6) that the City Council ratified this supposed rejection is only a half truth. The Council ratified "all acts, steps and proceedings whatsoever relating to such matter" (DX 8, III R. 1018; offered, II R. 429), which necessarily means that it ratified all the acts to which we have just referred (Pl. R. Br. 4-5).

II.

THE CITY'S CLAIM THAT THE LEASE WHEN EXECUTED WAS NOT BINDING ON THE CITY IS WHOLLY IMMATERIAL.

(Supp. Mem. 5-6.)

The City's argument that it did not sign the Lease and is not named as a party obligated thereby (Supp. Mem. 5-6, 8-9) is too trivial to require comment. The liability of an assignee or successor trustee never depends upon his signing or being named in the original lease, but upon the subsequent action by which he accepts an assignment or accepts the trust.

The City's contention that it accepted the entire trust res but that the trust res did not include the Lease (Supp. Mem. 6) is completely at variance with the admissions made in its answer (I R. 145-6) and on the oral argument (footnote, p. 3, supra) to the effect that the Lease was a valid obligation of the public charitable trust as long as Citizens Gas continued as trustee. The question is whether the mere substitution of a new trustee for Citizens Gas had the effect either

(a) of invalidating a Lease which had been valid and binding on the trust for 22 years, or

(b) of separating the Lease from the other trust assets of which it had theretofore been a part.

III.

NO ISSUE HAS BEEN RAISED AS TO WHETHER "MUNICIPAL AUTHORITY COULD RATIFY OR VALIDATE THE LEASE" AND THE STATUTORY PROHIBITIONS UPON WHICH THE CITY RELIES HAVE NO APPLICATION TO THIS CASE.

(Supp. Mem. 6-9.)

The argument (Supp. Mem. 6-8) that the Lease itself was prohibited by Sections 85 and 254 of Chapter 129 of the Acts of 1905 (quoted, Pl. Br. 147-9) is absurd. These statutes obviously relate solely to contracts to which a municipality is a party and the City was not a party to the contract here in question.

The issue is not whether the City had power to execute the Lease in the first place, but whether it had power to take over the trust property subject to the obligations under the Lease.

III-A.

The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Accompanying Obligations, Including Those Under the Lease.

The "validating acts" of 1929 (quoted, Pl. Br. 150-5), prepared by counsel for the City for this very purpose (Pl. Br. 101-3), removed all possible doubt as to the City's power to take over the trust property subject to the obligations under the Lease (Pl. Br. 96-8). The City now admits its power to take over the leasehold estate together with the rest of the trust property* (Supp. Mem. 9-12).

---

* Thus, the City says that "a mere reading of the applicable statutes discloses that they are permissive in character and give authority to accept property or leases without the slightest indication of legislative intent that the City shall be required to do so." (Supp. Mem. 10, italics are the City's).

III-B.

The City Took the Necessary Action to Accept the Trust, Including the Leasehold and Its Accompanying Obligations.

The City asserts that it took no action agreeing to be bound by the terms of the Lease (Supp. Mem. 6), but the fact is that the Lease was in no way foisted on the City. The City admits that Citizens Gas "transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company" (I. R. 243). In addition, as we have previously shown (Pl. Br. 98-166, 107, 111-17; supra, pp. 4-5), the proper agencies of the City deliberately took the appropriate steps to take over all the trust property subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas, including those under this Lease.

IV.

THE CITY WAS REQUIRED TO ACCEPT THE LEASE IF IT ACCEPTED THE TRUST.

(Supp. Mem. 9-12.)

Section 1 of Chapter 78 of the Laws of 1929 (quoted, Pl. Br. 152-5), on which the City relies as merely permitting it to take over the Lease if it wished to do so (Supp. Mem. 10), provides (Pl. Br. 154):

> "Whenever any instrument of transfer or conveyance shall be executed, transferring or conveying the property, either real or personal, of any such corporation to such town or city the title to such property shall vest in such town or city, subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation * * *."

Thus, when the City took over the trust property, title to that property vested in the City "subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said corporation [Citizens Gas]," including those under the Lease.

Even in the absence of this statute, the City could not legally take over the trust property without at the same time taking all that property, including the leasehold, and taking that property subject to all the obligations incurred by the initial trustee, including those under the Lease (Pl. Br. 98-9, 111). Indeed, the City admits (I R. 243) "that defendant Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis conveyed and transferred all of its property to the City of Indianapolis subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company * * *."

V.

THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS WAS CORRECT IN HOLDING THAT CITIZENS GAS HAD POWER TO EXECUTE THE LEASE AND MAKE IT BINDING ON THE TRUST FOR THE FULL TERM OF THE LEASE.

(Supp. Mem. 12-19.)

The City contends that "grants by a municipality are to be strictly construed and that nothing passes by implication" (Supp. Mem. 13, 16-18). The cases cited all deal with grants of rights to use public property, whereas the question at issue is the nature and extent of the powers of Citizens Gas arising out of its contract with the City.

As shown by City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573, when, as in the case at bar, a franchise contains a contract with the municipality as well as a grant to occupy the streets, such contract is "construed and interpreted like any other written contract." The City once more disregards the City of Vincennes case, although we relied on it in our original brief (p. 58), and in our reply brief (p. 33) called the City's attention to its failure to mention that case. Evidently, the City cannot deny that the applicable law of Indiana is directly contrary to its contention.

The City's argument that power to make the Lease cannot be implied (Supp. Mem. 12, 16) also disregards the express statutory power of Citizens Gas to make the Lease (Pl. Br. 56). As the Supreme Court of Indiana held in the Williams case, this statutory power supersedes the limitations, if any, arising from the trust (Pl. Br. 66-9; Pl. R. Br. 37-9).

Likewise the City has consistently ignored the fact that for 22 years it construed the powers of Citizens Gas as including the power to make this Lease. On two different occasions while this case has been pending in this Court we have called attention to the City's failure to deal with this fact (Pl. Br. 118, Pl. R. Br. 32). Under the law of Indiana, "it is the duty of a court, where the language of a contract is indefinite or ambiguous, to adopt the construction and practical interpretation which the parties themselves have put upon the contract * * *." City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573, 576 (Pl. Br. 58, 72). Under these circumstances the City's continued silence on this subject is of great significance.

V-A.

The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard on the Question Whether the Alleged Burdensomeness of the Lease Would be a Good Defense if Proved and the Court of Appeals' Direction to Enter Final Judgment Without a Retrial of That Immaterial Issue Was in Full Accord With Due Process of Law.

(Supp. Mem. 14-16.)

The City is still complaining that the Circuit Court of Appeals held that the "issue of the burdensome character of the lease was res adjudicata" (Supp. Mem. 15). We have shown that the Court did not so hold (Pl. R. Br. 26) and that even if it did, such holding would be proper because the facts as to the Williams case and the legal effect thereof were fully presented to the trial court (Pl. R. Br. 28). If, as the City contends, the parties did not have an opportunity in the trial court to present all the facts as to the Williams case and to argue the question of their significance, why did the City request (No. 33, III R. 1092) and the trial court grant a finding of fact that (No. 40, III R. 1179):

> "None of the questions involved in this case were actually litigated in the Williams case nor could such questions have been litigated under the issues in that case."

The City's persistence in reiterating its complaint that it has been denied due process of law makes it advisable to give further consideration to what the City is demanding and what would happen if its demands were granted.

The lack of any foundation for the City's position on this question of burdensomeness clearly appears from an analysis of what the City is asking. The City demands (IV R. 1346) "an opportunity to prove the averments of its counter-claim and to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome" (italics are the City's). What if the City were successful in proving that "when executed this lease was in fact burdensome"? In its answer and counterclaim the City contends that in such event the Lease "was a lease which the initial trustee had no power to make beyond the definitely fixed term of its trusteeship" and that it "did not constitute an asset of said trust which it was bound to accept" (I R. 181, 186). The alleged reserved issue which the City wants tried states the City's claim in these words (II R. 322): "that the City * * * had the right as such successor trustee to refuse and reject an assignment of such lease on the ground that such lease was burdensome and not advantageous to such trust."

Thus the City's contention is that as successor trustee the City could reject this Lease after the parties thereto had operated thereunder with its consent for a period of 22 years, on the ground that the Lease was burdensome when executed. The City has never cited, and cannot cite, a single case to substantiate its claim that a successor trustee can refuse to take over an asset of the trust which it deems to be burdensome. Indeed, the City's only answer to the well established rule that a successor trustee must take all or none of the trust property is its assertion that it has in fact taken over the entire trust res (Supp. Mem. 6). Surely due process of law does not necessitate an opportunity to prove that one of the trust assets is a burden when, in any event, the City's only right was to take over all of the trust assets or none and it admits that it has taken them all.

As a matter of fact, it clearly appears that the Lease has not been the slightest burden to the City since it took over the trust property. The City has been putting in escrow sums equal to the rentals required by the Lease, and it asserts that (City Br. 26):

> "* * * From the escrowed fund, together with funds arising from the operation of the property (II R. 542, 543), the City will be required to and is abundantly able to pay the entire judgment, and Indianapolis Gas will be wholly insulated from any liability."

The leased property is two-thirds of the property which produced the escrow fund and the "funds arising from the operation of the property." (City Br. 46, Supp. Mem. 7.) Thus, the City's position is in reality that the operation of the trust property has been so successful as to leave no doubt that the obligations of the Lease can be easily met from the earnings. This reduces the City's contention to this, not that the Lease is a burden to the City, but that it would be even more profitable if more advantageous terms could be procured.

Further weaknesses in the City's position become clear when we visualize what would happen if this case were in fact sent back to the trial court for that court to ascertain whether the Lease was burdensome when executed.

(1) That court would have the practically impossible task of determining what the Indianapolis Gas properties were worth 28 years ago. The difficulties involved in such a task are indicated by the fact that even the formal pleadings before the Public Service Commission in 1913 cannot be located at this time (PX 88, III R. 846, offered, II R. 331).

(2) That court would be required to determine the value of intangible items which cannot be evaluated. For example, how could that court determine the value of the elimination of a competitor admitted (City Br. 46, Supp. Mem. 7) to be twice the size of Citizens Gas? A contemporaneous report by Citizens Gas to its stockholders (PX 91, III R. 886, 887, offered, II R. 342) stated that the competition from Indianapolis Gas was "dangerous to the company and the community" (Pl. Br. 6). When the City was ready to take over the trust property in 1935 it clearly revealed that it too realized the great value of the elimination of this competition. Thus the Board of Directors for Utilities formally covenanted with the purchasers of the City's Gas Plant Revenue Bonds that the City "will use all reasonable efforts to resist competition and maintain the exclusive right to serve gas" in the City and its environs (PX Stip. 47, III R. 822, 828, offered, II R. 327).

(3) That court would be required to take due cognizance of the fact that the Lease was an act of the initial trustee in the exercise of its discretion. Courts do not interfere with the exercise of discretion by trustees except in a clear case. There has never been a suggestion throughout this case that the Public Service Commission or any director or trustee of Citizens Gas was actuated by anything but the highest motives in making and approving this Lease.

(4) That court would also have to take into account the contemporaneous decision of the Public Service Commission, which the City admits includes the determination that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest" (City Br. 71, italics are the City's). Indeed, as the City also admits, this decision "is conclusive upon the courts in a collateral action" (City Br. 71).

(5) That court would also be bound to give due weight to the City's own contemporaneous belief in the value of the Lease. In the case at bar all defendants have admitted (I R. 137, 149, 223) plaintiff's allegations that (I R. 10): "No objection by petition to said Commission or otherwise was ever made by said City of Indianapolis either to the execution of said lease or to the orders made by said Commission * * *."

Furthermore, all this effort would be wasted, for under the law of Indiana neither a municipality nor any other party to or assignee of a contract or lease can escape its obligations thereunder by showing that they were originally burdensome or have become burdensome (Pl. Br. 53). Due process of law does not involve the necessity of attempting to determine a question of fact which would have no legal significance when determined (Pl. Br. 55).

VI.

THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS DID NOT DEPART FROM INDIANA LAW IN DEALING WITH THE ESTOPPEL OF THE CITY TO ASSERT THE UNENFORCEABILITY OF THE LEASE.

(Supp. Mem. 19-21.)

On this subject the error assigned by the City is the supposed failure of the court below "to follow the controlling Indiana decisions on (a) the question of estoppel of a municipal corporation" (City Br. 13). The complete immateriality of this assignment is shown by the City's admission that "The Circuit Court of Appeals made no express holding on the question of estoppel * * *." (City Br. 53, footnote).

The City's arguments on this question have already been fully answered (Pl. Br. 124-9; Pl. R. Br. 43-6). If the Circuit Court of Appeals had held the City estopped to deny the enforceability of the Lease for its full term, such holding would have been fully warranted by the facts and the Indiana law applicable thereto.

VII.

THE TRIAL COURT'S FINDINGS OF FACT AGAINST THE PLAINTIFF ARE CONTRARY TO THE FACTS ESTABLISHED BY THE RECORD AND ARE NOT BINDING ON PLAINTIFF.

(Supp. Mem. 21.)

The City now contends for the first time that the so called "findings" of the trial court in its favor are unassailable.* Most of the findings and conclusions upon which the City relies (Supp. Mem. 5, 6, 16, 20) are not findings of fact as to which there was a contradiction or dispute in the evidence, but are merely inferences of fact or law drawn by the trial court from the admitted facts.† Under such circumstances the Circuit Court of Appeals and this Court are entirely free to draw their own inferences from these undisputed facts.

Harkin v. Brundage, 276 U. S. 36, 53;
United States v. South Georgia Ry. Co., 107 F. (2d) 3 (C. C. A. 5th, 1939); United States v. Mitchell, 104 F. (2d) 343, 346 (C. C. A. 8th, 1939);

* The City's lack of confidence in the "findings of the trial court" is shown by the fact that its briefs heretofore filed in this Court contain only one citation to any of the trial court's findings. Even that one citation was not made until after the first oral argument in this Court (City Ans. Br. 4).

† Counsel for the City concede that this is the situation. Thus in their letter of September 23, 1941, to the Clerk of this Court with respect to the enlargement of time for oral argument they say:

"While in the main, the facts are undisputed, counsel for Indianapolis Gas, Chase and the City disagree in respect of the inferences to be drawn from the facts."

Kaeser & Blair, Inc. v. Merchants Association, Inc., 64 F. (2d) 575, 576 (C. C. A. 6th, 1933);
Bianchi v. Vere, 17 F. (2d) 22, 25 (C. C. A. 1, 1927)

The trial court's findings and conclusions (III R. 1160-92) were nearly all taken substantially verbatim from the City's requests (III R. 1078-1103). Moreover, the findings on the contested issues of fact are wholly unsupported by any evidence. Neither plaintiff nor any reviewing court is bound by such findings and we are fully warranted in making use of the facts shown by the record to substantiate our contentions.

VIII.

THE JUDGMENT IN THE WILLIAMS CASE IS A CONCLUSIVE DETERMINATION, AS RES JUDICATA AND AS AN AUTHORITATIVE STATEMENT OF THE LAW OF INDIANA, THAT THE LEASE IS BINDING ON THE TRUST AND ON THE CITY AS SUCCESSOR TRUSTEE.

(Supp. Mem. 22.)

The City's assertion that "The validity of the 99-year lease against the City as successor trustee was not actually litigated in the Williams case" (Supp. Mem. 22) has already been shown to be devoid of any foundation (Pl. Br. 76-9). As we have there shown, the Indiana Supreme Court refused to disturb the Lease, which Williams sought to have removed as "an unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" (II R. 772). This refusal was in December, 1933, and it is clear that the court held that the Lease was binding on the trust, not only during the short period between its decision and the City's taking over of the trust property, but for the full term of the Lease. The Indiana Supreme Court thereby conclusively determined that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust and of the City as successor trustee. This determination is binding on the parties to that case and is also an authoritative statement of the Indiana law as to the issues presented by the City in the case at bar.

IX.

THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY REFUSED TO REALIGN INDIANAPOLIS GAS WITH CHASE AS A PARTY PLAINTIFF.

(Supp. Mem. [illegible])

The City's theories that plaintiff cannot make Indianapolis Gas a defendant to this suit because (1) Indianapolis Gas cannot in good faith deny its liability for the unpaid interest and (2) plaintiff claims that the City is also liable for the unpaid interest, have already been shown to be groundless (Pl. Br. 38-45; Pl. R. Br. 12-14).

The alleged insulation against the liability of Indianapolis Gas, on which the City relies (Supp. Mem. 23), arises out of the judgment against the City which the City is seeking to have reversed. Under the City's theory, if it should be successful in this Court on the merits, federal jurisdiction would once more be restored by the decision of this Court. It is thus clear that the City's contention is directly contrary to the well established rule that federal jurisdiction is in no way dependent on the outcome of a case on its merits (Pl. R. Br. 12-13).

The sole authority on which the City relies is Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, which is fully reviewed in our original brief (pp. 41-2). The City claims that this case holds that parties must be aligned according to their attitude toward "the main and the controlling controversy" (Supp. Mem. 23). Actually, in that case the alignment of the defendant, Cora Spencer, was based on the only controversy between her and the plaintiffs, namely, that as to the distribution of the property sought to be recovered in that suit. That controversy was not "the main and the controlling controversy," for it was one in which the other defendants had no interest whatever and one which would be material only in the event of a recovery from those other defendants.

In reality Sutton v. English holds that there should be no realignment if there is a single substantial controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant sought to be realigned. We have previously enumerated the substantial controversies between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas (Pl. R. Br. 9-11). We repeat the statement in our original brief (p. 40) and our reply brief (p. 11) that "The City has never cited a single case in which the plaintiff had even one substantial controversy with a defendant and such defendant was realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes."

X.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE FISHBACK CASE.

(Supp. Mem. 24.)

The City still argues that the decision in the Fishback case is not res judicata, despite our statement that plaintiff does not rely on that decision as a binding adjudication between it and the City (Pl. Br. 92).

In the Fishback case the City and Citizens Gas upheld the validity of the Lease during the eight years the case was pending in the trial court (Pl. Br. 8-10). This is compelling evidence in support of plaintiff's claims as to laches (Pl. Br. 129), estoppel (Pl. Br. 120, 124; Pl. R. Br. 43) and practical construction of the Franchise and Charter of Citizens Gas as they relate to the power of Citizens Gas to make the Lease (Pl. Br. 70).

CONCLUSION.

As we have seen, the City concedes (1) that the City is obligated by the Lease if it was "part of the property of the corporate trustee," and (2) that the Lease was valid and binding during the trusteeship of the corporate trustee (supra, pp. 2-4). The City's contention is that the Lease became voidable when Citizens Gas was replaced as trustee.

The City, however, has never been able to show how a trustee's contract, admittedly valid when executed and for a number of years thereafter, becomes a nullity merely because a new trustee takes over the trust property.

We submit that the Lease is binding on the City as successor trustee and that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is correct in all respects except as to the rate of interest on the unpaid coupons and on plaintiff's judgment.

(Infra, p. 30.)

ANALYSIS OF ARGUMENTS.

I. CITIZENS GAS HAD POWER TO EXECUTE THE LEASE AND MAKE IT BINDING ON THE TRUST FOR THE FULL TERM OF THE LEASE.

(Pl. Br. 56-74; Pl. R. Br. 32-41; Cit. Gas Br. 6-7; Ind. Gas Br. 62-75; City Br. 43-52; Supp. Mem. 5-6, 12-13, 16-19; supra, pp. 8-9.)

The City admits (I R. 145-6) that the Lease was valid during the 22 years in which Citizens Gas was trustee. The mere change in trustees could not affect the validity of the Lease.

(a) Citizens Gas Had Express Statutory Authority to Make the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 56-8; City Br. 49-50; supra, pp. 8-9.)

The Lease was authorized by § 95[1] of the Public Service Commission Law (quoted, Pl. Br. 144-5).

(b) The Franchise and Charter Powers of Citizens Gas Included the Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding on the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 58-66; Pl. R. Br. 33-7; City Br. 43-52; Supp. Mem. 16-19; supra, p. 8.)

Since Citizens Gas was originally given no express powers, some powers had to be implied, such as power to lease or otherwise acquire property. Also, under Indiana law the charter powers of Citizens Gas included the express power, conferred by statute in 1913, to enter into the Lease.

(c) The Statutory Power to Make the Lease Overrode the Limitations, If Any, Arising From the Public Charitable Trust.

(Pl. Br. 66-9; Pl. R. Br. 37-9; City Br. 49-50.)

The Williams case established, as a matter of Indiana law, that the public charitable trust is subject to the power of the state to control as a public utility. This power was exercised by the enactment of the Public Service Commission Law and by the Commission's approval of the Lease pursuant to the provisions of that law.

(d) The Williams Case Conclusively Determined That Citizens Gas Had Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding on the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 69-70, 75-90; Pl. R. Br. 39-40, 50-55; City Br. 75-8, 81-6; Supp. Mem. 22; supra, p. 15.)

The decision in the Williams case that Citizens Gas had power to execute the Lease is a binding adjudication between the parties and a controlling authority as to the Indiana law.

(e) The Practical Construction of the Franchise and Charter By the City and Citizens Gas Shows That Those Instruments Gave Citizens Gas Power to Execute the Lease and Make It Binding on the Trust For the Full Term of the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 70-4; Pl. R. Br. 32; supra, p. 9.)

For 22 years the City and Citizens Gas construed the Franchise and Charter of Citizens Gas as granting the power to make the Lease. This practical construction of the contract between the City and Citizens Gas by the parties themselves is of great, if not controlling, significance.

II. THE CITY HAD AMPLE AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT THE TRUST AND ITS ACCOMPANYING OBLIGATIONS, INCLUDING THOSE UNDER THE LEASE, AND TOOK THE NECESSARY ACTION TO EXERCISE THAT AUTHORITY.

(Pl. Br. 93-117; Pl. R. Br. 40-1; Ind. Gas Br. 70-74; City Br. 43-8; Supp. Mem. 6-9; supra, pp. 6-7.)

(a) The City Had Ample Authority to Accept the Trust and Its Accompanying Obligations, Including Those Under the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 93-8; Pl. R. Br. 40-1; Ind. Gas Br. 70-74; City Br. 43-8; City Ans. Br. 1-4; Supp. Mem. 6-12; supra, p. 6.)

The City had power to accept trusts and "to agree to conditions and terms accompanying the same." As the City admits (Supp. Mem. 9-12), the "validating acts" of 1929 (quoted, Pl. Br. 150-5) gave the City authority to accept this very trust, including the leasehold estate and its accompanying obligations.

(b) The City Took the Necessary Action to Accept the Trust, Including the Leasehold and Its Accompanying Obligations.

(Pl. Br. 98-107; Supp. Mem. 5-12; supra, pp. 2-4, 7.)

The City admits that it took over all the trust property (I R. 243). Since it also admits that the Lease was valid during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas (I R. 145-6), the leasehold was part of the trust property taken by the City.

(c) In Succeeding Citizens Gas As Trustee, the City Became Liable For All the Obligations of Citizens Gas, Including Those Under the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 111-17; City Br. 62; Supp. Mem. 9-12; supra, pp. 2-4, 7.)

The City admits that it took the property of Citizens Gas "subject to all outstanding legal obligations of that Company" (1 R. 243) and that the obligations under the Lease were valid and binding obligations of that Company (1 R. 145-6). This necessarily means that the obligations under the Lease were among those to which the trust property remained subject in the hands of the City.

The trust property taken over by the City remained subject to the obligations under the Lease, for (1) the statutes under which the City took over the trust property expressly provided that it should remain subject to the obligations of Citizens Gas; (2) pursuant to statute and the Citizens Gas Franchise and Charter, the instruments conveying the trust property stated that it was being transferred subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas; (3) the City gave Citizens Gas an Indemnity Agreement in which it agreed to protect Citizens Gas from all liability arising from any acts or omissions to act by Citizens Gas; (4) since Citizens Gas was left with no assets out of which to satisfy its obligations, the property of Citizens Gas taken over by the City remained subject to those obligations.

(d) The City Accepted the Assignment of the Lease and Took Possession of the Leased Property and Thereby Became Liable By Privity of Estate For the Obligations Under the Lease.

(Pl. Br. 10-11; Pl. R. Br. 3-5; City Br. 44-5, 57-62; City Ans. Br. 4-6; Supp. Mem. 4; supra, p. 4.)

The City's ex parte resolution saying that it rejected the assignment of the Lease is meaningless in view of the acts whereby it in fact accepted the assignment. Since the City had no agreement with Indianapolis Gas authorizing it to take possession of the leased property, it had the right to take possession only as assignee of the lease.

III. THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE AND ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE PUBLIC CHARITABLE TRUST HAVE BEEN CONCLUSIVELY ESTABLISHED BY THE JUDGMENT IN THE WILLIAMS CASE AND OTHER DECISIONS.

(Pl. Br. 74-92; Pl. R. Br. 46-55; Ind. Gas Br. 39-54; City Br. 67-86; Supp. Mem. 22, 24; supra, pp. 15, 17.)

(a) The Judgment in the Williams Case is a Conclusive Determination, As Res Judicata and As an Authoritative Statement of the Law of Indiana, That the Lease is Binding on the Trust and on the City As Successor Trustee.

(Pl. Br. 75-90; Pl. R. Br. 49-55; Ind. Gas Br. 51-54; City Br. 75-86; Supp. Mem. 22; supra, p. 15.)

The refusal of the Indiana Supreme Court to remove the Lease as an alleged "unlawful cloud upon the title of said Municipal City, as trustee" is a conclusive determination that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust and of the City as successor trustee.

The City presents no issues which were not adjudicated in the Williams case and the judgment in that case would be conclusive even if the City were relying on new grounds of attack. Likewise, the mere transfer of the trust property did not affect the conclusiveness of the decision that the Lease is a binding obligation of the trust.

Williams was permitted to present the case on behalf of the trust. Hence it makes no difference what issues, if any, were raised between the trustee (the City) and its co-defendants. The City had the opportunity to support the contentions presented by Williams in behalf of the trust. It elected to oppose them.

Entirely aside from the question of res judicata, the Williams case settles the law of Indiana as to the very facts now presented to this Court.

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission Conclusively Determined That the Lease is in the Public Interest (Consequently in the Interest of the Trust Also) and in Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas As a Public Utility.

(Pl. Br. 90-2; Pl. R. Br. 46-9; Ind Gas Br. 39-45; City Br. 67-71.)

The City admits that the Commission has conclusively determined that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest" (City Br. 71). This decision is also a conclusive determination that the Lease was in fulfillment of the duties of Citizens Gas as a public utility and therefore superseded the limitations, if any, arising from the public charitable trust.

(c) The Fishback Case.

(Pl. Br. 92; Ind. Gas Br. 45-51; City Br. 72-5; Supp. Mem. 24; supra, p. 17.)

In this case the City and Citizens Gas upheld the validity of the Lease during the 8 years immediately following its execution, before the trial court entered judgment.

(d) The Todd and Cotter Cases.

(Pl. Br. 13-14; Pl. R. Br. 50; City Br. 79-86.)

IV. THE CONTINUED ACQUIESCENCE IN THE VALIDITY OF THE LEASE BY CITIZENS GAS AND THE CITY FOR 22 YEARS, THEIR ACCEPTANCE OF ITS BENEFITS, AND THEIR REPRESENTATIONS AS TO ITS BINDING EFFECT ON THE TRUST PRECLUDE THEM FROM ATTACKING IT AT THIS TIME.

(Pl. Br. 118-32; Pl. R. Br. 43-6; Ind. Gas Br. 56-60, 77-8; City Br. 53-66; Supp. Mem. 19-21; supra, pp. 13-14.)

(a) Citizens Gas Is Estopped From Denying That the Lease is Valid For Its Full Term, and the Trust Property is Subject to the Obligations Arising Out of this Estoppel.

(Pl. Br. 120-124; City Br. 54-6.)

Before the Public Service Commission, in the Fishback case, and in the Williams case, Citizens Gas insisted that the Lease was valid for its full term and in each instance this contention was sustained. Also, it represented to the investing public that it had a 99-year lease on the property of Indianapolis Gas, under the terms of which it guaranteed the interest on the Indianapolis Gas Bonds. The general public was thereby induced to buy the $2,000,000 of Indianapolis Gas Bonds sold by Citizens Gas and to continue to hold the outstanding Bonds.

The trust property is subject to all the obligations of Citizens Gas, including those arising out of this estoppel.

(b) The City is Estopped From Denying That the Lease is Valid For Its Full Term.

(Pl. Br. 124-9; Pl. R. Br. 43-6; Ind. Gas Br. 77-8, City Br. 53-66; Supp. Mem. 19-21; supra, pp. 13-14.)

For 22 years the City represented, and stood by while Citizens Gas represented, that the Lease was valid and binding for its full term. When beneficiaries of the trust attacked the Lease, the City affirmatively insisted that the Lease was valid. As late as June, 1935 it sold its Revenue Bonds on the representation that it was taking over the entire system operated by Citizens Gas, including the property leased from Indianapolis Gas.

(c) The City is Precluded By Its Own Laches and the Laches of Citizens Gas From Denying That the Lease is Valid and Binding For Its Full Term.

(Pl. Br. 129-132; Ind. Gas Br. 56-60; City Br. 63.)

The trust had the benefit of the Lease for a period of 22 years before the City asserted that the Lease was no longer binding. The City was a party to several proceedings in which it should have spoken if it ever intended to repudiate the Lease. In each instance the City took the position that the Lease was a binding obligation of the trust.

V. THE INTEREST RATE ON THE COUPONS AFTER MATURITY AND ON THE JUDGMENT SHOULD BE SIX PER CENT.

(Pl. Br. 134-8; Pl. R. Br. 55-6; Ind. Gas Br. 82-3.)

Under the Indiana statutes plaintiff is entitled to 6% interest on (1) the overdue coupons, from the dates of their maturities, and (2) the judgment itself. The fact that the Bonds bear interest at 5% is immaterial with respect to the rate on the overdue coupons and on plaintiff's judgment.

VI. THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS PROPERLY REFUSED TO REALIGN INDIANAPOLIS GAS WITH CHASE AS A PARTY PLAINTIFF.

(Pl. Br. 38-45; Pl. R. Br. 9-14; Ind. Gas Br. 27-9; City Br. 22-32; Supp. Mem. 23; supra, p. 16.)

Plaintiff has several controversies with Indianapolis Gas, in one of which it obtained a judgment which would now amount to more than $2,100,000. Plaintiff was entitled to make Indianapolis Gas a defendant in order to obtain an adjudication against it on these matters.

A defendant with whom the plaintiff has one or more controversies is not realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, even when plaintiff and such defendant are in accord as to some other phase of the same suit.

VII. THE CITY HAD AMPLE OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD ON THE QUESTION WHETHER THE ALLEGED BURDENSOMENESS OF THE LEASE WOULD BE A GOOD DEFENSE IF PROVED AND THE COURT OF APPEALS' DIRECTION TO ENTER FINAL JUDGMENT WITHOUT A RETRIAL OF THAT IMMATERIAL ISSUE WAS IN FULL ACCORD WITH DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

(Pl. Br. 45-56; Pl. R. Br. 14-31, 58-69; Ind. Gas Br. 29-61; City Br. 32-43; Supp. Mem. 13-16; supra, pp. 9-13.)

The complete immateriality of this question is shown by the City's admission that it took over all the trust property (supra, pp. 2-4), whether burdensome or not.

(a) The City Had Ample Opportunity to be Heard in Both Lower Courts on the Question Whether Burdensomeness Would be a Valid Defense—Moreover the Hearing in the District Court Was Not Essential to Due Process of Law.

(Pl. Br. 47-9; Pl. R. Br. 17-25, 58-69; City Br. 36-43.)

(b) To the Extent, If At All, That the Circuit Court of Appeals Based Its Decision on the Williams Case, It Was Fully Justified In Doing So, For the Parties Were Fully Heard in the District Court As to the Effect of That Adjudication.

(Pl. Br. 52-3; Pl. R. Br. 26-30; City Br. 39-42; Supp. Mem. 15-16; supra, p. 15.)

There is no indication that the court below held that the question of burdensomeness is res judicata. In any event, the facts as to the Williams case were fully presented to the District Court and there is no factual basis for the City's contention that it was denied a hearing in the trial court as to the effect of that case.

(c) The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals That the Alleged Burdensomeness Would not be a Valid Defense If Proved Is Obviously Correct.

(Pl. Br. 50-54; Ind. Gas Br. 29-61; supra, p. 9.)

Since the City has taken over all the trust property, the issue of burdensomeness is moot and wholly immaterial. The Williams case conclusively determined that the Lease would be binding on the trust even if it were proved to be burdensome. Further, as the City admits, the Public Service Commission has conclusively determined that the Lease "was advisable and in the public interest." (City Br. 71.)

Under the law of Indiana, neither a municipality nor other party to or assignee of a contract or lease can escape its obligations thereunder by showing that they were originally or have become burdensome.

(d) The Circuit Court of Appeals Having Correctly Determined That Burdensomeness Would Not Be a Valid Defense If Proved, Its Direction to Enter Final Judgment Was In Full Accord With Due Process of Law.

(Pl. Br. 55-6; City Br. 36-7.)

The right to prove allegations which would be unavailing even if proved is not an element of due process of law.

VIII. THE RULE OF ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY v. TOMPKINS REQUIRED THE DECISION THAT THE LEASE IS VALID AND BINDING AND IN MAKING THAT DECISION THE CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FULLY COMPLIED WITH THAT RULE.

(Pl. Br. 69-70, 75, 89, 132-4; Pl. R. Br. 42-55; Ind. Gas Br. 77-9; City Br. 52-86; Supp. Mem. 19-22; supra, p. 15.)

Every Indiana decision bearing upon the question compels the conclusion that the Lease is valid for its full term. The City's present contentions were all conclusively negatived, as a matter of Indiana law, in the Williams case.

(a) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Hold That the City is Estopped to Deny the Validity of the Lease, but Under the Law of Indiana It Would Have Been Fully Warranted In Doing So.

(Pl. Br. 120-9; Pl. R. Br. 43-6; City Br. 53-66; Supp. Mem. 19-21; supra, p. 13.)

(b) The Order of the Public Service Commission is a Conclusive Determination That the Lease is In the Interest of the Public Charitable Trust and In Fulfillment of the Duties of Citizens Gas as a Public Utility and the Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Deviate From the Law of Indiana in Determining the Significance of That Order.

(Pl. Br. 90-2; Pl. R. Br. 46-9; Ind. Gas Br. 39-45; City Br. 67-71.)

Under the law of Indiana as announced in the Williams case the public charitable trust is subject to the power of the state to control as a public utility. (supra, I(c), p. 22.) The act of the Public Service Commission in approving the Lease was an exercise of this power and was a conclusive determination that the Lease is in the public interest (III (b), supra, p. 26).

(c) The Circuit Court of Appeals Did Not Hold That the Validity of the Lease is Res Judicata, But Under the Law of Indiana It Would Have Been Fully Warranted In Doing So.

(Pl. Br. 74-90; Pl. R. Br. 49-55; Ind. Gas Br. 45-54; City Br. 72-86; supra, p. 15.)

The Circuit Court of Appeals did not hold that the Indiana decisions to which it referred were res judicata, but that those decisions sustaining the validity of the Lease are controlling under the rule of Erie Railroad Company v. Tompkins.

The Circuit Court of Appeals would have been fully warranted in holding that the question as to the validity and present binding effect of the Lease is res judicata (see point III(a), p. 25 above).

(d) The Circuit Court of Appeals' Construction of the Franchise and Charter of Citizens Gas is in Complete Accord With Indiana Law.

(Pl. Br. 56-74, 133-4; Pl. R. Br. 32-40; City Br. 49-52; Supp. Mem. 16-19; supra, p. 8.)

Under the law of Indiana when, as in this case, a franchise contains a contract with the municipality as well as a grant to occupy the streets, such contract is construed like any other contract.

The Circuit Court of Appeals' construction of the Franchise and Charter of Citizens Gas was required by the construction of the same Franchise and Charter by the Indiana Supreme Court in the Williams case and by the Indiana law applicable to the facts here presented (Point I, supra, p. 21).

(e) The Statutory Prohibitions on Which the City Relies have No Application to This Case.

(Pl. Br. 93-8, 134; Pl. R. Br. 40-1; Ind. Gas Br. 70-74; City Br. 45-8; City Ans. Br. 1-4; Supp. Mem. 6-9; supra, pp. 6-7.)

This matter is discussed under point II(a), page 23 above.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER BRIEF OF INDIANAPOLIS GAS COMPANY, RESPONDENT

[NOTE: All propositions advanced in respondents' original brief are still relied on and this memorandum is intended merely to supplement that brief by replying to the supplemental brief filed by the City, et al., September 1, 1941.]

* 1. All emphasis ours unless otherwise stated.
2. The several appendices at the end of this brief recite the language of Indiana Statutes cited.

I.

Factual Summary Correcting Statements of Petitioner City on Page 4 of Its Supplemental Memorandum.

The Todd case held only that the stockholders had created a charitable trust in their own excess profits above amounts invested plus 250% (Indianapolis Gas Brief, pp. 68, 69).

The law (Appendix A) authorized these two public utilities to execute this lease precisely as they did (I R. 116 to 122; offered II R. 327).

The "articles" (I R. 99) and stock certificates (II R. 768) and statutes (Appendices C and D) and the deed (III R. 834) and assignment (I R. 144(4)) from Citizens Gas all make the City's title "subject to legal obligations" of its grantor. Under authority of Appendix B, the City by ordinance (III R. 1018-1019, offered II R. 439) accepted the entire public trust, and also by the resolution for temporary use (I R. 200, 201; offered III R. 1037, 1042). Citizens Gas was bound to so extend its plant that all inhabitants be supplied (I R. 89(17); offered II R. 327).

The same promoters, trustees and directors who organized Citizens Gas executed this lease, doubtless for the same ultimate trust purpose (II R. 336 to 338).

II.

The Decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The opinion and judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals here for review (113 Fed. 2nd 217) is definite and unambiguous. Its rational may be briefly stated in the following conclusions reached by that Court:

1. The lease of 1913 between Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas was one for 99 years and not for an indefinite or shorter term.

2. Citizens Gas, as trustee of a trust which was a public utility, was empowered to acquire for the trust estate the leasehold interest in the property of Indianapolis Gas upon the approval of the Public Service Commission of Indiana, which was had.

3. The leasehold estate validly acquired became and remains for its term of 99 years part and parcel of the trust estate.

4. The validity of the lease for its term had been adjudged by the Supreme Court of Indiana in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., and by the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana, in Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al.

5. The lease obligations of the trust are not affected or destroyed by reason of the substitution or change of trustees.

6. City in declaring its intention to succeed Citizens Gas as trustee, and in so doing, is obligated to accept the entire trust subject to all the legal obligations which had been created by Citizens Gas, initial trustee, during its period of trusteeship.

7. The liability for payment of past due bond interest on Indianapolis Gas bonds is that, of the City as present trustee and the trust, Citizens Gas and Indianapolis Gas in the order named.

8. Plaintiff below for bondholders is entitled to interest on unpaid interest coupons of Indianapolis Gas bonds from the date of their respective defaults at the rate of

5% per annum, per the contract rate and in accordance with Indiana statutory provisions.

Each of the above conclusions followed and is in complete accord with the settled law of Indiana, as discussed at pages 77-79 of original brief.

The statement in City's memorandum on page 15 that the Court held the lease to be enforceable against the City if not burdensome in character, but unenforceable if burdensome, is not correct. The judgment that the lease was valid and enforceable was subject to no conditions. The Court did say, as dictum in discussing generally the powers of a trustee, that "in making a long term lease a trustee is under a duty to act with prudence. If a trustee makes a lease which is unreasonable under the circumstances it thereby commits a breach of trust and incurs liability to beneficiaries who may have such a lease set aside."

This is a correct statement of a general principle; one which was not violated by Citizens Gas in the execution of the lease. By no interpretation can it be construed to mean that the lease in question was held to be enforceable only if not now burdensome. Even if the lease had been burdensome from its creation, which is judicially denied by the judgments in the Williams and Fishback cases as well as by the findings of the Public Service Commission, the Court did not hold that its validity could now be challenged by the lessee, or its successor, upon such ground after being utilized and accepted for 22 years. That such an attack would be defeated by the rule of laches is discussed in our original brief at pages 56-60.

The decision furthermore need not rest on implied powers of Citizens Gas, initial trustee, as contended in City's memorandum (p. 4). Had the Court of Appeals held that the power in Citizens Gas, trustee, to execute the lease was one expressly given, it would have been equally sustainable. Direction was expressly given Citizens Gas in its franchise to "secure, acquire or construct" the gas plant for the purposes of supplying gas to all the citizens of Indianapolis (I R. 85).

An express direction to "secure" or "acquire" such gas property can be none other than a granting of an express power to secure or acquire such facilities. This could only be exercised by purchase or lease and in the present case the latter method was adopted as most advantageous to the trust.

III.

Citizens Gas Was a Public Utility Incorporated by General Law Which Empowered It to Execute the Lease.

Each party to the lease was a public utility gas company with the right to an indeterminate permit (Appendix G) which each took, and statutory power to make this lease (Appendix A). The City by express authority of statutes (Appendices B, C and D) took the property over subject to all the lessee's legal obligations (I R. 124; III R. 834; Indianapolis Gas Brief, pp. 32 to 38). This binds the City by such obligations to the extent of the trust property.

No. 2. The general law under which, alone, Citizens Gas could be (Const. Ind Art. 11, sec. 13) and actually (Appendix F) was incorporated (II R. 622, No. 6(a); offered R. 326) expressly limited the purpose for which it was formed "to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power," and expressly authorized a lease to a competitor (Appendix A). Anything in the "articles" that is not from the general law was void (Indianapolis Gas Brief, pp. 67 to 69).

The trust duty under the franchise contract, was to "secure, acquire or construct" (I R. 85, No. 3), a plant such "that all inhabitants of said City may be supplied with gas" (I R. 89(17)), and by leasing was the only way Citizens Gas could get the plant that served most of the City.

No. 7. The "trust" expressly requiring extension of the lines of Citizens Gas to "supply all the inhabitants with gas" (I R. 89(17)), subject to repaying investors 350% (I R. 84, f) and subject to all legal obligations (I R. 85 (i); 93 (22)), and it having by that means acquired lines reaching four-fifths of its customers through taking this lease (III R. 901; II R. 535), such lease is an essential part of the trust.

Section 95½ of Chapter 76, Acts 1913 (Appendix A) had authorized a lease binding on Citizens Gas and its grantee, and conferred on the Public Service Commission express power to confirm this lease (March 4, 1913) before it was executed, October 1, 1913 (I R. 116-122; offered II R. 327) and by section 130 had repealed all inconsistent laws (Appendix L). And section 53 of the City Charter (Appendix B) had empowered the City to accept this public trust and bind itself to carry out its conditions, and Chapters 77 and 78 of Acts Indiana 1929 (Appendices C and D) expressly authorized the City to accept the gas plant property from Citizens Gas subject to all legal obligations and to do all the acts which were done by the City in binding it as trustee to perform the lease.

All provisions in the franchise (I R. 93 (22)), and the stockholders' agreements (I R. 99, XII), and the conveyances to the City of both personal (I R. 125) and real (II R. 834) property were that the property should be taken "subject to all legal obligations" which was also named as a condition in both of the enabling statutes, Chapters 78 (Appendix C) and 77 (Appendix D) of Acts Indiana 1929, subject to which each of said instruments of conveyance recited that it was made.

How this Board of Directors for Utilities could accept the gas plant worth $13,431,230 otherwise than subject to the grantor's contract obligations, including this lease, does not appear.

"Purpose" of Organizing Citizens Gas Was Not "Competition."

Citizens Gas was organized under the general corporation laws of Indiana and its purpose as stated in its Articles of Incorporation was "to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power" (I R. 95; offered II R. 327). The suggestion that its primary purpose was to provide and continue indefinitely competition with Indianapolis Gas is wholly fatuous. Competition may or may not be an incident to carrying out an avowed purpose, but it is not per se the end sought. Whether the objective supplying gas to a community might be more effectively obtained through competition or without it, were matters to be determined by the judgment of the corporation under all existing circumstances.

The law under which Citizens Gas was incorporated (Appendix F) only authorized its articles to contract that its purpose should be "to furnish light, heat and power" to a city "for the term of 50 years," which they did (I R.

95, III R. 99, XIII). And all "trust provisions" not authorized by the statute are void.

Indiana Bond Co. v. Ogle, 22 Ind. App. 593, 595.

It was by this lease on two-thirds of the gas mains serving for fifths of the meters (and of the proposed beneficia[illegible]s) in the City (I R. 195, 196: offered II R. 327) that competition with Indianapolis Gas was ended, being the only possible way.

IV.

City, Existing Only Under the General Law and Subject Thereto, by Accepting the Public Trust Bound Itself to Carry Out Its Terms and Conditions.

Meeting City's Supplemental Memorandum, pages 6 to 9.

Special Charters for municipal corporations as of all other corporations are forbidden by the Constitution of Indiana.

Const. Ind. Art. 11, sec. 13.

The "franchise contract" relied on was made by the City only as an agency of the State and its surrender in 1921 in exchange for an Indeterminate Permit from the State (II R. 622, f) under express legislative authority (Appendices E and G) had the effect that thereby the City franchise contract "was abrogated and rescinded in toto as to both parties."

Greensburg Water Co. v. Lewis, 189 Ind. 439, 454.

Sections 85 and 254 were repealed. So far, if at all, as Chapter 129, Acts Indiana 1905, sections 85 and 254, were in conflict with the Public Service Commission Act (Appendix A) they were repealed by the last section (130) of Chapter 76, Acts 1913 (Appendix L), which expressly repealed all prior legislation "so far as inconsistent therewith." This included repeal of all statutes (if any) which forbade the execution of this lease "at a price and on terms fixed by the Commission" (Appendix A).

Citizens Gas was a public utility corporation (Appendix F) formed for the sole statutory purpose "to supply the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants with light, heat and power" (I R. 95, III). The City was a municipal corporation. Neither had or could have any special charter rights (Ind. Const. Art. 11, sec. 13). The law made void as against creditors any trust the stockholders might create for their own benefit (Appendix K), and this trust reserved to the creators 350% of their investment, but "subject to legal liabilities." The City could not have any rights in the trust that would violate those laws.

NOTHING WAS DECIDED AS TO RES ADJUDICATA.

The Circuit Court of Appeals did not find anything was res adjudicata. It only held, in strict compliance with Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64, and cases following it, that the validity and binding effect of this lease upon the City being strictly a question of Indiana State law, the State decisions cited "are determinative of the immediate issue here, i. e. as to the validity of the 99-year lease" (IV R. 1300).

See Brief of Indianapolis Gas, pages 15 to 18.

The cases of Fishback v. Public Service Commission as decided by the Superior Court of Marion County, Indiana (II R. 648 to 668), and Williams v. Citizens Gas Company (II R. 761 to 812), reported on appeal in 206 Ind. 448, were cited and relied on by the Circuit Court of Appeals as determining what is the law of Indiana concerning the matters there determined when again in issue, in a Federal Court.

West v. American T. & T. Co. (Dec. 9, 1940), 311 U. S. 223;

Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co. (June 2, 1941), 85 L. Ed. (Adv.) 969.

In Williams v. Citizens Gas all parties now before the court filed demurrers to the complaint and supplemental complaint which were all sustained and final judgment entered (II R. 630 to 633, No. 14) that was affirmed on appeal as Williams v. Citizens Gas, 206 Ind. 448. The City's demurrer (III R. 813) and the complaint (II R. 761 to 802) and supplemental complaint (R. 802, 803) are in the record. They alleged substantially the facts proved in this case, including the City Franchise and Articles of Incorporation of Citizens Gas (II R. 765), the stock subscriptions and certificates (R. 766, 767), its acquisition of property (R. 774), the enactment of the Public Service Commission Act (R. 776 to 779), the making of this lease and its approval by the Commission (R. 779, 780), surrender of the City franchise for an Indeterminate Permit (R. 783, 784), the enactment of Chapters 77 and 78 of Indiana Acts of 1929 (Appendices C and D), and the declared purpose of the City to accept the trust property, including the leasehold (R. 791 to 793), with many allegations that the lease will be a great burden upon the trust.

The law of Indiana as declared by the State courts with reference to those facts is binding here as to the same facts (Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U. S. 64).

All said facts to and including the execution of the lease and its approval by the Public Service Commission were alleged in the several paragraphs of complaint by Fishback set out in the record (II R. 648 to 668) to which numerous demurrers were sustained, including those by all parties here except this plaintiff and the City (II R. 624 to 627, No. 9), which demurrers were all sustained and final judgment was rendered thereon that is in full force (II R. 625, 626, No. (e) and (i)). This also determines the law of Indiana.

West v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Dec. 9, 1940), 311 U. S. 223.

STATUTES EXPRESSLY PROVIDED FOR LEASE AFTER CHANGE OF TRUSTEES.

In the Indiana Acts of 1929, Ch. 78 (Appendix C), express provision is made for the City to succeed Citizens Gas as Trustee and to "accept, hold and own * * * any right, title or interest such transferring corporation may have in any lease upon any other property." Thus is here found a denial by the General Assembly that this lease should terminate upon the change of trustees. The mains of both Gas Companies as well as their entire facilities were intermingled and they were both equally utilized for the performance of the purposes of the trust, viz., to supply light, heat and power to the City of Indianapolis and its inhabitants.

STATUTES DIRECT THAT TITLE VESTS IN CITY "SUBJECT TO LEGAL OBLIGATIONS"

To question the power of the City to accept the lease by assignment of property subject thereto is a sheer denial of Chapter 77 of Indiana Acts of 1929 (Appendix D), and to assert that the City in taking title to property of Citizens Gas might do so without assuming the lease obligation is directly contradictory of Chapter 78 (Appendix C). The Act of 1929, Chapter 78 (Appendix C) is both mandatory and explicit. It states that when such trust property is conveyed by the Corporation to the City "the title to such property shall vest in such town or city subject to all outstanding legal obligations of said Corporation."

The express power to accept the lease was obviously provided in the Statute to ensure the effectiveness of the further provision that title to all the property and assets "shall vest subject to all legal obligations."

POSSESSION TAKEN OF LEASED PLANT WAS AS TRUST LESSEE.

Possession could not have been lawfully taken by the City under the Resolution of its Directors for Utilities referred to "as one for temporary use." No right exists in the Department of Utilities to take possession of property belonging to another under any such resolution, and counsel for City has offered no authority supporting such a right. City's possession of the leasehold property during the months before it had any contract with Indianapolis Gas was therefore lawfully obtained only through its undertaking to operate under the lease which necessarily accompanied the acceptance of the lessee's property "subject to all legal obligations."

V.

Relative to Issue of "Burdensomeness."

During argument counsel for City was asked: "What is the test as to burdensomeness"? The question is pertinent but no answer has been made to it by City either in argument or supplemental memorandum. Certain observations as to this issue are proper:

First. This issue was presented only as a ground for an alleged right in the City to refuse and reject an assignment of the lease (II R. 321-322). If City did in fact accept the assignment of said lease and take possession of said leased property thereunder, as has been shown was in fact done, then obviously the issue is not properly present for consideration.

Second. The time at which the test of burdensomeness is sought to be made has been definitely fixed by City both in its petition for a rehearing before the Court of Appeals (4 R. 1310) and in its petition for certiorari presented to this Court (p. 6). City seeks the right to offer evidence that the lease was burdensome, not on March 20, 1929, when it elected to succeed to the trusteeship, nor on September 9, 1935, when it took over all property and assets of the trust, but at the time the lease was executed in 1913. It now seeks in fact "to have the lower Court determine whether when executed this lease was in fact burdensome." (IV R. 1310.)

It is therefore upon refusal of the Court to order a trial of that issue, to now determine whether this lease was in fact burdensome some 28 years ago, that City predicates its contention that its constitutional rights of due process have been violated.

In view of City's admission that the lease was valid from 1913 until 1935 during the trusteeship of Citizens Gas, it may be asked how the lease being admittedly valid in the hands of one trustee for 22 years could then suddenly become invalid in the hands of a successor trustee because "when made the lease was in fact burdensome." Surely a lease, whose validity could not for 22 years be successfully attacked on the ground that it was burdensome when made, would not thereafter be subject to successful attack upon such ground.

Whatever test of burdensomeness might be urged, it is certain that no obligations under the lease are in any degree either increased or changed by the substitution of trustees. No burden is placed either upon the trust or the present trustee which was not borne and accepted by the initial trustee. Neither may the value of the property of Indianapolis Gas in 1913, upon which the lease was approved by the Commission, nor the reasonableness of the rental charges be in any wise affected by the fact that City has now succeeded Citizens Gas as trustee.

If the test of burdensomeness were whether or not the trust benefited from the lease, the record offers a definite answer.

Aside from the value of the physical property of Indianapolis Gas, undoubtedly the value to the trust of the elimination of competition was real and was given definite consideration by Citizens Gas and also the Public Service Commission in its findings that the terms and provisions were fair and equitable and that the lease itself was in the public interest.

This value, in connection with other values, may now in retrospect be more accurately appraised than it could have been in 1913 by briefly viewing the increased annual net earnings of the trust following the execution of this lease.

For 1913, before obtaining this lease, Citizens Gas reported net earnings of $202,584.24 (II R. 614); for 1915, the second year of operation under the lease, net earnings had increased to $368,973.18 (II R. 605); for 1929, when City elected to succeed to the trusteeship, net earnings were $680,055.91; for the year 1934, last preceding the change of trustee, net earnings were $668,813.00 (II R. 542); and for 1935, the year of the succession, net earnings were $752,250.00 (II R. 542).

Thus is presented conclusive evidence of the soundness of the judgment of Citizens Gas in seeking a local ownership of Indianapolis Gas so that the lease might be made, securing to the trust the elimination of competition and sole control of a unified gas system for a period of ninety-nine years.

In this retrospect is also seen a factual verification of the judgment of the Public Service Commission that the rentals and terms of the lease were fair and reasonable, and that through its execution both the best interests of the trust and the public would be served. Also of its finding that

> "the two plants are so constructed and laid out as to adapt the two to a single working plant of great efficiency and under one management they can be operated at a great saving as compared with the cost of operating them as separate and competitive plants." (I R. 117; II R. 623.)

Time has also proved correct the Supreme Court of Indiana when it stated in its opinion in the Williams case at p. 457,

> "the lease was one that the Citizens Gas Company and Indianapolis Gas Company had power to execute and one which would result in great advantage to the Citizens Gas Company."

We shall not here discuss the conclusiveness of the findings of the Public Service Commission as to the fairness of the lease terms as against the present collateral attack City now seeks to make, nor the binding determination of this issue by the Supreme Court in Indiana in Williams v. Citizens Gas Company, et al., and Fishback v. Public Service Commission, et al. These matters are discussed in original brief of Indianapolis Gas on pages 29-61.

Whatever other test of burdensomeness might be employed, it is submitted that this trust is now, after 22 years of benefit and use of the lease, precluded from attacking the same on grounds that it was burdensome either "when made," as urged by the City, or that it is so now.

CONCLUSION.

It is respectfully submitted that no error is present in the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and that it should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

Louis B. Ewbank,
William R. Higgins,
Counsel for The Indianapolis Gas Company, Respondent.

Indiana Acts 1913, Chapter 76, Sections 100, 101, pages 201, 202:

"Sec. 100. Every license, permit or franchise hereafter granted to any public utility shall have the effect of an indeterminate permit subject to the provisions of this act, and subject to the provision that the license, franchise or permit may be revoked by the commission for cause or that the municipality in which the major part of its property is situated may purchase the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at any time as provided herein, paying therefor the then value of such property as determined by the commission and according to the terms and conditions fixed by said commission, subject to all the provisions as to hearings and appeals set out in section one hundred and five (105) and section one hundred and six (106) hereof. Any such municipality is authorized to purchase such property and every such public utility is required to sell such property at the value and according to the terms and conditions determined by the commission as herein provided. If this act should be repealed or annulled then all such indeterminate franchises, permits or grants shall cease and become inoperative and in place thereof such utility shall be reinstated in the possession and enjoyment of the license, permit or franchise surrendered by such utility at the time of the issue of the indeterminate franchise, permit or grant; but in no event shall such reinstated license, permit or franchise be terminated within a less period than five years from the date of the repeal or annulment of this act.

"Sec. 101. Any public utility operating under an existing license, permit or franchise shall, upon filing at any time prior to the expiration of such license, permit or franchise and prior to July 1, 1915, with the clerk of the municipality which granted such franchise and with the commission, a written declaration, legally executed, that it surrenders such license, permit or franchise, receive by operation of law, in lieu thereof an indeterminate permit as provided in this act; and such public utility shall hold such permit under all the terms, conditions and limitations of this act."

APPENDIX H.

"No license, permit or franchise shall be granted to any person, copartnership or corporation to own, operate, manage or control any plant or equipment of any public utility in any municipality where there is in operation a public utility engaged in similar service under a license, franchise or permit without first securing from the commission a declaration after a public hearing of all parties interested, that public convenience and necessity require such second public utility. Any existing permit, license or franchise which shall contain any term whatsoever interfering with the existence of a second public utility is hereby declared to be against public policy and is hereby amended in such manner as to permit a municipality to grant a license, franchise or permit for the operation of such second public utility pursuant to the provisions of this act."

APPENDIX I.

"Every municipal council shall have power, (a) to determine by contract, ordinance or otherwise the quality and character of each kind of product or service to be furnished or rendered by any public utility furnishing any product of service within said municipality and all other terms and conditions not inconsistent with this act upon which such public utility may be permitted to occupy the streets, highways, or other public property within such municipality, and such contract, ordinance or other determination of such municipality shall be in force and prima facie reasonable. Upon complaint made by such public utility or by any qualified complainant as provided in sections 57 to 71 the Commission shall set a hearing as provided in sections 57 to 71, and if it shall find such contract, ordinance or other determination to be unreasonable, such contract, ordinance or other determination shall be void. (b) To require of any public utility by ordinance or otherwise such additions and extensions to its physical plant within said municipality as shall be reasonable and necessary in the interest of the public, and to designate the location and nature of all such additions and extensions, the time within which they must be completed and all conditions under which they must be constructed subject to review by the commission as provided in subdivision (a) of this section. (c) To provide for a penalty for noncompliance with the provisions of any ordinance or resolution adopted pursuant to the provisions hereof. (d) The power and authority granted in this section shall exist and be vested in said municipalities anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, Whenever after a request by petition in writing of any public utility, the city or other political subdivision or other body, having jurisdiction of the matter, shall refuse or fail for a period of thirty (30) days, to give or grant to such public utility permission and authority to construct, maintain and operate any additional construction, equipment, or facility reasonably necessary for the transaction of the business of such public utility, and for the public convenience or interest, then such public utility may file a petition with said commission for such right and permission, which petition shall state with particularity the construction, equipment or other facility desired to be constructed and operated, and show a reasonable public necessity therefor, and also the failure or refusal of such city, political subdivision or other body to give or grant such right or permission; and the commission shall thereupon give notice of the pendency of such petition, together with a copy thereof, to such city or other political subdivision or body of the time and place of hearing of the matter set forth in such petition; and such commission shall have power to hear and determine such matters and to give or grant such right and permission and to impose such conditions in relation thereto as the necessity of such public utility and the public convenience and interest may reasonably require."

ADDITIONAL AUTHORITIES OF CHASE NATIONAL BANK, TRUSTEE, ON JURISDICTIONAL QUESTION.

During the oral argument, the Court inquired whether the Plaintiff's counsel had any authorities dealing with the realignment of parties to determine Federal jurisdiction where a creditor brought suit against both the principal and surety. In response to that question, we submit the following authorities.

Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 187 (1884). This was an action by citizens of New York brought in a State Court in Michigan to foreclose a mortgage originally executed by F. S. Ayres, Learned and Wiswall. Wiswall had conveyed his interest to F. S. Ayres, who agreed to pay the mortgage debt. Learned had sold his interest to E. R. Ayres, and in this transaction, F. S. Ayres, James Ayres and E. R. Ayres agreed to pay the mortgage debt. The defendant, Wiswall, was a citizen of New York. The other defendants were citizens of Ohio and Michigan.

Defendants, Wiswall and Learned, two of the original mortgagors, admitted the mortgage and the debt but asked that their grantees be declared to be primarily responsible for the indebtedness. F. S. Ayres and James Ayres admitted part of the liability but did not agree that they were liable for the full amount claimed. The three Ayres who had agreed to pay the mortgage indebtedness removed the case to the Federal Court on the ground that they were citizens of states other than New York. The District Court remanded the case to the State Court and on direct appeal to this Court the judgment was affirmed. This Court held that, although Wiswall did not contest his liability and sought to have the Ayres adjudged primarily responsible for the indebtedness, he could not be realigned as a party plaintiff because plaintiffs were seeking judgment against him. Speaking through Chief Justice Waite, the Court said (P. 191):

> "... The matter in dispute between the parties on the opposite sides of the suit to enforce the mortgage was the amount due on the mortgage debt. The complainants, citizens of New York, and the defendant Wiswall, a citizen of New York, and the other defendants, citizens of Michigan and Ohio, on the other side, were not in dispute. The controversy is entirely between the complainants and all the defendants. It does not appear that any of the relief that was asked ... was sought by the defendant Wiswall. ... [illegible] ... Similarly, in Coney v. Winchell, 116 U. S. 227 (1886), the Supreme Court affirmed an order of the Circuit Court remanding the case to the State Court. The plaintiff mortgagee had sued to foreclose the mortgage and had joined both the original mortgagor, Carll, and the mortgagor's grantee, Coney, as defendants. Both the mortgagor and the mortgagee were citizens of Connecticut. The Court held that the mortgagor could not be realigned with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, but must remain as a defendant, since the plaintiff was seeking a judgment against him.

The two cases cited are just the converse of the situation here before the Court. In each of these cases, the mortgagor and the mortgagee were citizens of the same state and in both cases the Court held that the mortgagor could not be aligned with the mortgagee, although the grantee was the party primarily liable and the mortgagor in one of the cases was asking the Court to determine that the grantee was primarily liable. It follows from these cases that Indianapolis Gas, against whom the Plaintiff seeks a judgment in this case, can not be realigned with the Plaintiff merely because the City or the trust property may be primarily liable.

See also Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association v. Farmer, 77 Fed. 926 (C. C. A. 8th 1896).

In Feidler v. Bartleson, 161 Fed. 30 (C. C. A. 9th 1908), the Court sustained Federal jurisdiction. Plaintiff, a nonresident of Washington, had recovered judgment against F. J. Feidler in the State Court. He thereupon brought suit in the Federal Court in Washington against F. J. Feidler and the administratrix of the Estate of Ed Feidler, claiming that the two brothers had been partners and that the partnership assets were the debtor's only assets. The bill alleged that the defendant administratrix denied the fact of the partnership.

Both of the defendants were citizens of Washington. The administratrix attacked the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the plaintiff was attempting to establish a claim which his judgment debtor, F. J. Feidler, had against a citizen of Washington. Jurisdiction was sustained in the District Court and, on appeal, the judgment was affirmed. In sustaining jurisdiction, the Circuit Court of Appeals said (P. 35):

> "It is urged, further, that the demurrer should have been sustained for the reason that the appellee sought by his bill to compel the defendants therein, who are both residents of the state of Washington, to litigate in the Circuit Court a demand which one had against the other. To this it is only necessary to say that the bill is not brought to permit or to compel the defendants therein to litigate between themselves. It is a bill to establish the existence of a partnership between Ed. L. Feidler and F. J. Feidler, only for the purpose of subjecting the interest of the latter in the partnership funds to the payment of the appellee's judgment."

These cases like the cases previously cited (Pl. Br. 41-3) establish that as long as plaintiff is asserting any claim against a defendant that defendant will not be realigned with plaintiff in determining federal jurisdiction. The claims asserted by the plaintiff determine federal jurisdiction, not the attitude of the defendants among themselves.

CROSS-PETITION FOR WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

To the Honorable Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

This cross-petition of The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, respectfully shows to this Honorable Court:

A.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF THE MATTERS INVOLVED.

The petitioner contends that there is no occasion for granting a writ of certiorari in these causes and presents its cross-petition for the sole purpose of obtaining a review of the rulings of the Circuit Court of Appeals adverse to it, in the event this Court grants the petitions for certiorari filed by the City of Indianapolis, et al., so that in such event all questions presented to the lower Court will be before this Court.

In 1902 defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, gave an open mortgage upon its plant and property to one of the plaintiff's corporate predecessors to secure an authorized bond issue of $7,500,000. (Bill, Exhibit A, I R. 23; Offered, II R. 327.) In 1913 The Indianapolis Gas Company leased its property to defendant, the Citizens Gas Company, as lessee, for 99 years, the lessee agreeing as part of the rental to be paid by it to pay the interest on the outstanding mortgage Bonds of The Indianapolis Gas Company and on any additional Bonds which might subsequently be issued. (Bill, Exhibit B, I R. 51; Offered, II R. 327.) Citizens Gas Company paid the interest on the mortgage Bonds from 1913 to 1935 (II R. 627, Stip.* par. 11(a)), and sold about $2,000,000 of the Bonds to the public on representations that it had a 99 year lease on the property and had agreed to pay the interest on the Bonds as part of the rental. (II R. 627, Stip. par. 10(a); II R. 573, 592-605; III R. 899-922.) On September 9, 1935 it conveyed all of its property, including the Lease in question, to the City of Indianapolis, the entire consideration being paid to the bondholders and stockholders of Citizens Gas Company, leaving it without assets. (II R. 634-5, Stip. pars. 16-17.)

The City accepted and recorded the various instruments of transfer, including an assignment of the Lease, went into possession of the Citizens Gas property, including the leased property, and has operated all of said property and received the revenues therefrom continuously since September 9, 1935. (II R. 330, 350, 467-8; II R. 622-3, Stip. par. 6(c).) The City claimed, however, that it had not accepted a transfer of the leased property and that it was entitled to keep and operate the leased property without any liability under the provisions of the Lease which had been assigned to it. The City paid the Bond interest due on October 1, 1935 and on April 1, 1936, but no interest has been paid since April 1, 1936.

The petitioner, The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, brought this action in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, suing as Trustee under the Indianapolis Gas mortgage and joining Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City as defendants. Plaintiff sought to recover judgment for the overdue interest on the Bonds, with interest on unpaid interest, against all the defendants and against the property once owned by Citizens Gas and transferred by it to the City of Indianapolis. Plaintiff also sought a declaratory judgment to establish that the Lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas was and is binding on all the defendants and on the property transferred to the City by Citizens Gas. Federal jurisdiction was based on diversity of citizenship.

The District Court denied plaintiff any relief except a judgment against Indianapolis Gas alone in the amount of the unpaid coupons, but without interest on unpaid interest. The District Court held, however, that the judgment for overdue interest against The Indianapolis Gas Company bore interest at the rate of 6% per annum. (III R. 1193.)

Separate appeals were taken by plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. These two causes, Nos. 7143 and 7144, were heard together on the same record. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the District Court and held that plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed for, including interest on unpaid interest. The Court of Appeals held, however, that the unpaid interest coupons bear interest at the rate of 5% from maturity to the date of judgment and that the judgment itself bears interest at the same rate (IV R. 1305-6), whereas plaintiff contends that the correct rate in each instance is 6%. The difference between the 5% and 6% rates up to October 1, 1940, amounts to something over $30,000.

This cross-petition is filed to the end that all the questions presented to the lower Court may be before this Court in the event it grants the City's petitions for writs of certiorari. Petitioner believes that there are no questions involved in these cases warranting the granting of a writ, either at the request of the City or this cross-petitioner, but in the event certiorari is granted it wishes to have all the questions decided by the lower Court here for decision.

The District Court made findings of fact (III R. 1160) and conclusions of law (III R. 1190) and wrote an opinion. (III R. 1122.)

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals (IV R. 1281-1306) is reported in 113 F. (2d) 217.

B.

JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. § 347(a)).

The judgments of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit were entered on June 6, 1940. (IV R. 1307-8.) The City's petition for a rehearing and its petition for a reargument were denied July 19, 1940. (IV R. 1336.) The City's second petition for a rehearing was denied August 15, 1940. (IV R. 1405.)

C.

THE QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

This cross-petition presents the following questions for determination, in the event that the City's petitions for certiorari are granted:

(1) Are the sums due on the unpaid coupons in these cases "money due on any instrument in writing," within the meaning of the Indiana statute (§ 19-2003, Burns Indiana Statutes)* which provides that the rate of interest on such money shall be 6%?

(2) Do the unpaid coupons contain any agreement as to the rate of interest thereon which precludes the collection of interest thereon after maturity at the legal rate of 6%, in accordance with the provisions of the aforesaid statute?

(3) Do the unpaid coupons contain any agreement as to the rate of interest thereon, so as to preclude the application of the Indiana statute (§ 19-2002, Burns Indiana Statutes)† which provides that the rate of interest on judgments shall be 6%, if the contract sued on contains no agreement as to the rate of interest on the contract itself?

* Section 19-2003, Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, in so far as material, reads as follows:

> "On money due on any instrument in writing, * * * interest shall be allowed at the rate of six dollars [$6.00] a year on one hundred dollars [$100.00]."

† Section 19-2002, Burns Indiana Statutes, 1933, reads as follows:

> "Interest on judgments for money, whenever rendered, shall be from the date of the return of the verdict or finding of the court, until the same is satisfied, at the rate per cent agreed upon in the original contract sued upon, not exceeding eight [8] per cent where the obligor in such contract is a person other than a corporation; and if there be no contract by the parties, then at the rate of six [6] per cent per annum."

(4) Is there any warrant for reading into the coupons an implied agreement that the rate of interest on the coupons after their maturity shall be 5%, merely because the coupons themselves represent 5% interest on the Bonds?

REASONS RELIED ON FOR THE ALLOWANCE OF THE WRITS.

Plaintiff contends that these cases present no grounds for the exercise of this Court's discretionary power to grant a writ of certiorari. This cross-petition is filed for the sole purpose of anticipating the situation which would be presented if this Court grants the City's petitions for certiorari and brings these cases to this Court for review, in which event plaintiff desires a review of the rulings by the Circuit Court of Appeals which are adverse to it.

If the City's petitions for certiorari are granted, plaintiff wishes to present for consideration certain errors by the Circuit Court of Appeals as follows:

(1) Its error in holding that the rate of interest on the unpaid coupons shall be 5%, whereas the Indiana statute (§ 19-2003, Burns Indiana Statutes) provides that the rate of interest on "money due on any instrument in writing" shall be 6%.

(2) Its error in holding that the coupons themselves specify the rate of interest to be paid on the coupons after their maturity, and thereby preclude the collection of interest thereon at the legal rate of 6%.

(3) Its error in holding that the rate of interest on the judgment itself shall be 5%, whereas the Indiana statute (§ 19-2002, Burns Indiana Statutes) provides that the rate of interest on a judgment shall be 6%, if the obligation sued on contains no agreement as to the rate of interest to be paid on the obligation itself.

(4) Its error in holding that the coupons themselves specify the rate to be paid on the coupons after their maturity, and thereby preclude the collection of interest on the judgment at the rate of 6% per annum, the rate provided by statute when the obligation sued on contains no provision as to the interest to be paid on the obligation itself.

(5) Its error in holding that the coupons contain an implied agreement that the rate of interest on the coupons after their maturity shall be 5%, merely because the coupons themselves represent 5% interest on the Bonds.

WHEREFORE, your petitioner respectfully prays, in the event the petitions for writs of certiorari filed by the City of Indianapolis, et al., in this Court on the 12th day of September, 1940, Nos. 421 and 422, October Term, 1940, or either of them, or any other petition for certiorari in either of these cases, is granted, and only in such event, that your petitioner may also be granted writs of certiorari to be issued out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, requiring that Court to certify and send to this Court for its review and determination a full and complete transcript of the record and proceedings in the case numbered and entitled on its docket The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis, et al., Defendants-Appellees, No. 7143, and in the case numbered and entitled on its docket The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. The Indianapolis Gas Company, Defendant-Appellant, No. 7144; that this Court require the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to modify its opinion, decision, and order in said causes so as to provide for plaintiff's recovery of interest on the unpaid coupons from the dates of their respective maturities to the date of the judgment at the rate of 6% per annum. and interest on the judgment itself at the rate of 6% per annum until the judgment is satisfied; and that your petitioner be granted such other and further relief in these premises as to this Honorable Court may seem meet and just.

PETITION OF THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK, TRUSTEE, FOR REHEARING.

TO THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Now comes the above named The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, Trustee, respondent in causes 10 and 11 and cross-petitioner in causes 12 and 13, and presents this, its Petition for Rehearing in each of the above entitled causes, and in support thereof respectfully shows:

SUMMARY OF GROUNDS OF PETITION.

FIRST: The opinion of the Court is based upon mistakes of fact as to the record and the issues presented in the trial court, and therefore overlooks the many "collisions of interest" between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas which make a realignment wholly improper.

SECOND: The opinion of the Court is based on a manifest misapprehension of the law as laid down in the decisions of this Court and consistently followed by the lower federal courts, in that in no prior case has any federal court either

(a) required a defendant, against whom a money judgment was either sought or obtained, to be realigned with plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, or

(b) tried to determine the most important controversy in a case involving several parties and a number of issues, and realigned the parties in accordance with their attitude toward that one controversy, without regard to their position as to the remaining controversies in the case.

THIRD: This petitioner has not had an adequate opportunity to present its position as to the authorities relied upon by the Court, almost all of which had never been cited in the briefs of any of the parties and all of which are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.

FOURTH: The rule laid down by the Court—that in a case involving several parties and multiple issues an attempt must be made to determine the "primary and controlling matter" in dispute and that the various parties must be realigned in accordance with their attitude toward that single issue, without regard to their position as to the other issues in the case—is wholly impracticable and impossible of application.

GROUNDS URGED IN SUPPORT OF PETITION WITH SUPPORTING REASONS.

First: The opinion of the Court is based upon mistakes of fact as to the record and the issues presented in the trial court, and therefore overlooks the many collisions of interest between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas which make a re-alignment wholly improper.

The Court's conclusion (Opinion, pp. 4-5) that everything in this case is merely "incidental" to the so-called "dominating controversy" between plaintiff and the City as to the validity of the Lease is based on mistakes as to the facts shown in the record and the issues presented in the lower courts. The "realities of the record" are clear. Chase, a citizen of New York, representing the bondholders for whom it was trustee, sought judgments against each of the three defendants, citizens of Indiana, aimed at:

(1) Collecting the overdue interest from each of them.

(2) Protecting the security against encroachments and other threatened encroachments by all three of the defendants.

As to each of these objects specific relief was sought against each of the defendants, and particularly against Indianapolis Gas and the City. Since the majority opinion refers to these objects as "window dressing designed to satisfy the requirements of diversity jurisdiction," they deserve more than passing consideration.

1. Plaintiff sought an order, pending final judgment, restraining Indianapolis Gas from interfering with the Lease in any way (Prayer 4, I R. 21). This prayer was supported by the allegations of paragraph 23 of the Bill. During the oral argument the City's counsel stated that the evidence showed these allegations to be "absolutely untrue." The facts are exactly the contrary. Let us detail some:

July 23, 1935 (III R. 836). City offered "to enter into negotiations with" Indianapolis Gas "looking toward a revision of this lease."

September 27, 1935 (III R. 967). City refers to its "repeated requests for an opportunity to negotiate a lease" and inquires whether Indianapolis Gas is "willing to undertake to negotiate such an agreement."

September 30, 1935 (III R. 838). Indianapolis Gas says that it "will, of course, be glad to take part in such a discussion."

September 30, 1935 (III R. 839). City requests Indianapolis Gas to fix time for conference.

February 8, 1936 (III R. 839). Indianapolis Gas requests City to submit specific "prices, terms and conditions."

February 10, 1936 (III R. 840-2). City offers $7,500,000 to Indianapolis Gas with interest from March 9, 1936, for Indianapolis Gas property.

In the face of such evidence it can hardly be denied that the City and Indianapolis Gas were carrying on negotiations looking "toward a cancellation of said lease and the destruction and waste" of plaintiff's security.

2. Plaintiff prayed that the Lease be declared "a valid and binding obligation in all its terms and conditions" as against Indianapolis Gas as well as Citizens Gas and the City (Prayer 2, I R. 20-21). What has just been said reveals the necessity of this relief against all the defendants. The rights of plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas under the Lease are separate and distinct and any new arrangement between Indianapolis Gas and the City might have sacrificed rights enjoyed by the Bondholders in order to protect the interests of the stockholders.

3. Plaintiff sought a declaration that the contract of March 2, 1936, had no effect on the rights of the bondholders under the Lease (I R. 259, Par. (4)).

The Lease required the lessee to pay the bond interest to the bondholders (I R. 69, Par. 21; I R. 72, Par. 22) but this contract made all the rent payable to Indianapolis Gas (I R. 206, Par. (b)), thus subjecting these payments, in the hands of Indianapolis Gas, to being seized by other creditors of that company. There was no doubt in the City's mind that this contract of March 2, 1936, was disadvantageous to the Trustee and the Bondholders. Indeed, the City sought by its counter-claim to have a declaration that the agreement of March 2, 1936, was "binding according to its terms upon plaintiff" and that the resulting use of the property was binding "upon plaintiff and the bondholders represented by it" (I R. 187).

There was grave danger that performance under this agreement of March 2, 1936, would, if it were binding upon plaintiff, be a full performance of the City's obligations under the Lease. This might well have deprived the bondholders of their right to secure interest on overdue coupons, an item which now amounts to almost a quarter of a million dollars.

The Court's opinion purports to answer this argument by stating (p. 5, note 3) that the Lease contained "no provisions requiring payment of the interest direct to Chase or the bondholders." The Court of Appeals held exactly to the contrary and no party assigned any error to such holding.

As a matter of fact, the Lease provided specifically that the lessee would perform all the obligations of the mortgagor except that as to the payment of the principal of the Bonds (Lease, Par. 22, I R. 72). The mortgage contained a covenant whereby Indianapolis Gas expressly agreed "to and with" the Trustee that it would provide for and pay the principal and interest on the Bonds (I R. 44) and further provided that the Trustee could compel specific performance of all covenants of the mortgage (I R. 46). Citizens Gas admitted that while it held the mortgaged property it had paid the interest "by making payment directly to the Trustee of said bonds or to the bondholders themselves" (I R. 257, 270). The Circuit Court of Appeals specifically held that the Trustee had the right to recover the interest from Indianapolis Gas (IV R. 1362-3) and the rent from Citizens Gas and the City (IV R. 1306). No party assigned error to this determination and yet, in deciding the jurisdictional question, this Court assumed a state of facts directly opposite to that adjudicated by the Court of Appeals.

4. Plaintiff sought a decree ordering the City to pay to plaintiff all the interest payments becoming due thereafter (Prayer 7, I R. 21). Since this relief directly contravened the agreement of March 2, 1936, between Indianapolis Gas and the City, by which those two defendants sought to deprive plaintiff and the Bondholders of rights secured under the Lease, Indianapolis Gas was obviously a necessary defendant in the securing of such relief.

5. Plaintiff sought a judgment against all the defendants for the unpaid interest, with interest on the unpaid interest, and for plaintiff's expenses and attorneys' fees (Prayer 8, I R. 21; Prayer 10, II R. 301). Indianapolis Gas vigorously contested plaintiff's right to any personal judgment against it and successfully contended, in the District Court, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest on the unpaid coupons. Indianapolis Gas appealed from the judgment against it and urged in the Court of Appeals that plaintiff, as Trustee, was not the proper party to recover a personal judgment on the unpaid coupons, that plaintiff had no right to interest on interest, that the rate of interest was in any case not more than 5%, and that plaintiff could not have both a declaratory judgment and a coercive judgment. These questions were dealt with in detail by the Court of Appeals (IV R. 1301-6) and that court sustained the position of Indianapolis Gas as to the proper rate of interest on the judgment and on the overdue coupons.

The Court states that plaintiff did not bring this suit to obtain a declaration that Indianapolis Gas is responsible for the interest payments (p. 5, note 3). This is true but wholly immaterial. Plaintiff did sue to obtain judgment against Indianapolis Gas for the unpaid interest, with interest on interest, and was successful against the vigorous opposition of Indianapolis Gas. This relief, in no way dependent upon the validity of the Lease, was obviously of importance in plaintiff's efforts to obtain actual payment of those items, particularly if the Lease were held invalid, since it would then be necessary for plaintiff to reach the assets of Indianapolis Gas, such as its rights against the City for use and occupation.

6. Plaintiff sought a judgment against each of the defendants for all losses caused by the failure to make or cause to be made the repairs and renewals necessary to maintain the mortgaged premises (Prayer 10, II R. 301). In so far as these failures occurred before September 9, 1935, the liability of the defendants did not depend in any way upon the continuing validity of the Lease. Indianapolis Gas was liable for such failure as mortgagor. Citizens Gas was liable by the terms of the Lease (I R. 64), which it admitted to be valid as long as it held possession. The City was liable for these defaults of Citizens Gas by reason of

(a) Accepting the property of Citizens Gas subject to all liabilities of Citizens Gas;

(b) Executing the Indemnity Agreement (II R. 306-7).

Here was a direct collision of interest in which all three of the defendants had precisely the same interest, namely, to claim that the property had been properly maintained. The determination of this issue did not depend in any way upon the continuing validity of the Lease.

7. Plaintiff sought an order compelling Indianapolis Gas to apply to the satisfaction of any judgments recovered against it all of its assets, including its right to recover from the City for the use of its property, whether under the Lease or otherwise (Prayer 12, II R. 302). The right thus asserted did not depend in any way upon the validity of the Lease. If the Lease was valid, plaintiff sought to reach as an asset of Indianapolis Gas the rental due under the Lease.

If the Lease was not valid, plaintiff sought to reach any amounts which were due to Indianapolis Gas for the City's use and occupation of the mortgaged property. In this branch of the case Indianapolis Gas was the primary debtor and the City merely a garnishee and the case is governed by Merchants' Cotton Press Co. v. Insurance Co., 151 U. S. 368, cited in the majority opinion, in which case the court held that the primary debtor and the garnishee were properly aligned as defendants.

The right to join in one action a claim for money and a creditor's bill to reach the assets of the judgment debtor was specifically conferred by Rule 18(b) of the new Rules of Civil Procedure and this branch of plaintiff's case was strictly in accordance with the provisions of that rule.[1]

8. Plaintiff sought a declaration that any of the assets of Indianapolis Gas remaining after the satisfaction of the judgments against it were to be treated as part of the security for the Bonds and sought a sequestration of such assets (Prayer 12. II R. 303-4). It appeared specifically from the Bill that Indianapolis Gas owned $120,000 of the Mortgage Bonds and plaintiff sought to deny Indianapolis Gas the right to participate in any distribution of funds to the Bondholders until it had fully performed its obligations under the Mortgage, including those to repair and maintain the property (Prayer 12, II R. 304).

Clearly, these various objects of plaintiff's suit presented a number of very real and significant controversies between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas which cannot be dismissed as mere "window dressing" or "illusive artifices." The Court's opinion indicates that the majority overlooked the importance of these objects and was led to do so by

[1] The first sentence of Rule 18(b) reads:

"Whenever a claim is one heretofore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court shall grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties."

the fact that the validity of the Lease was the only important question presented to the Supreme Court. This is shown by the Court's reliance (Opinion, p. 5) on plaintiff's statement in its rejoinder brief in this Court that "This case presents only one fundamental issue—whether the lease became part of the trust res in the hands of the corporate trustee" (p. 2). The importance attached to this statement is warranted only on the assumption that the Court was directing its consideration of the jurisdictional question to the issues presented in the Supreme Court and not to those presented in the lower courts. Undoubtedly the issue thus stated in plaintiff's rejoinder brief was the fundamental issue between plaintiff and the City as the case was presented in the Supreme Court, but plaintiff never admitted, and it is not the fact, that the case contained only that issue in either of the lower courts.

That the issue thus stated in plaintiff's rejoinder brief was the principal question presented to this Court resulted from the following wholly fortuitous circumstances:

(1) That Citizens Gas filed no petition for certiorari.

(2) That Indianapolis Gas filed no petition for certiorari.

(3) That the City did not raise by its petition for certiorari many questions ruled adversely to it by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

(4) That the District Court reserved for later determination certain issues which were not dependent in any way upon the continuing validity of the Lease.

Under these circumstances, it was only natural for the Court to overlook the many important issues between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas which were presented to the District Court for determination or were reserved by that court for later determination. The fact that the Court did overlook these issues is, we submit, a persuasive ground for a rehearing.

Second: The opinion of the Court is based on a manifest misapprehension of the law as laid down in the decisions of this Court and consistently followed by the lower federal courts, in that in no prior case has any federal court either

(a) required a defendant, against whom a money judgment was either sought or obtained, to be realigned with plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, or

(b) tried to determine the most important controversy in a case involving several parties and a number of issues, and realigned the parties in accordance with their attitude toward that one controversy, without regard to their position as to the remaining controversies in the case.

Entirely aside from the many other conflicts of interest between plaintiff and Indianapolis Gas outlined above (pp. 3-8), which are in themselves ample to sustain jurisdiction, this case presents a simple question:

When a mortgagee sues a mortgagor and a transferee of the mortgaged property, claiming that the transferee has assumed the mortgage, and seeking to collect the indebtedness from both the mortgagor and the transferee, does the fact that the mortgagor admits or even insists upon the primary liability of the transferee require the realignment of the mortgagor as a plaintiff?

To put the question in more general terms, when a creditor sues a principal and surety, seeking to collect the debt from both, and the surety takes the position that the principal is liable as principal, must the surety against whom a judgment is sought by the plaintiff be realigned for jurisdictional purposes?

Until the decision of the present case no federal court had ever required such realignment. On the contrary, every decision of any federal court which has ever dealt with the problem has held that the mortgagor or the surety cannot be realigned, since the plaintiff is seeking a judgment against him.

Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 187 (1884);
Coney v. Winchell, 116 U. S. 227 (1886);
Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association v. Farmer, 77 Fed. 929 (C. C. A. 8th, 1896).

In the first case cited the mortgagee and mortgagor were citizens of the same state and the transferee of the mortgaged property sought removal, urging that the mortgagor, Wiswall, should be realigned with plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes, since the mortgagor was supporting the plaintiff's contention that the transferee was liable. This is precisely the same contention as to realignment which is now being advanced by the City. The court denied that contention, saying in the Ayres case (112 U. S. 191):

"* * * In order that the complainants may get all the relief they ask, and which, upon their showing in the bill, they are entitled to, Wiswall is a necessary and substantial party to the suit, and on the opposite side from them."

In distinguishing the Removal Cases, 100 U. S. 457, and Pacific Railroad v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289, relied upon in the majority opinion, in both of which no relief was asked against the party sought to be realigned, Chief Justice Waite said (p. 192):

"* * * Here, however, relief is asked against Wiswall, and it grows directly out of the subject matter of the action, to wit, the collection of the mortgage debt which Wiswall owes jointly with the other debtors."

The decision in Coney v. Wiswall, supra, was to the same effect. It follows from these cases that a party must remain as a defendant if the plaintiff asks relief against him, otherwise the relief sought could not be granted. This proposition conclusively establishes that Indianapolis Gas should remain as a party defendant.

In no case cited by this Court or the City's counsel, and so far as we know in no case decided by any federal court, has it been held that a defendant against whom a money judgment was either sought or obtained could be realigned with plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes.

Beyond that, no case has been cited by the City's counsel or the Court involving several parties and multiple issues in which the court has attempted to determine the most important controversy presented and then has realigned the parties in accordance with their attitude toward that one controversy, without regard to their position as to the remaining controversies in the case. Whenever anyone has contended that federal jurisdiction should be determined in this way the courts have denied such contention and have refused to realign a defendant against whom relief was sought, even though that defendant favored the relief asked against another defendant.

The same view was adopted in the Fourth Circuit in an opinion announced between the first and second arguments of the case at bar.

Mayor of Baltimore v. Crown Cork & Seal Co., 122 F. (2d) 385, 391-2 (C. C. A. 4th, August, 1941).

The cases cited in the majority opinion are either remote from the question at issue or clearly distinguishable. They may be roughly subdivided into four categories:

(1) Those in which the realignment was based on the fact that no relief was asked against the defendant realigned and the relief sought would have benefited that defendant.[2]

(2) Those in which the court refused to realign a merely nominal defendant which had no independent interest in the controversy.[3]

(3) Those involving suits by a minority shareholder in behalf of his corporation in which the corporation, controlled by those adverse to plaintiff, was held to be a proper defendant.[4]

(4) Those in which the court refused to realign as plaintiffs defendants against whom the plaintiff sought affirmative relief.[5] These cases support rather than deny jurisdiction in the case at bar, since they recognize the impossibility of realigning as a plaintiff a defendant against whom affirmative relief is sought.

The Court has cited a number of cases in which this Court or other federal courts have referred to the "actual controversy" or the "principal purpose of the suit" or the "primary and controlling matter in dispute." This language was not used to distinguish between the relativ importance of various controversies, and if there were several issues to be determined no single controversy was selected for the purpose of determining realignment. In most of the cases such language was merely used in connection with a general statement that the formal arrangement of the parties by the plaintiff is not controlling and that jurisdiction will be determined after "arranging parties according to the actual controversy." In some of the cases cited such language has been used in determining whether there was a separable controversy between plaintiff and one or more defendants so that there could be a removal in spite of the lack of complete diversity. In no case cited has any such expression been used to determine the relative importance of the issues presented against the various defendants and to deny federal jurisdiction on the basis of such determination.

There was no realignment of the parties in Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, relied upon in the Court's opinion, so that at most the case involves only a dictum by implication that parties might be realigned according to their "attitude towards the actual and substantial controversy." As a matter of fact that case demonstrates the existence of federal jurisdiction of the case at bar. In that case the single controversy between plaintiff and defendant Cora Spencer was adequate to prevent her realignment despite her unity of interest with plaintiffs as to the remaining issues.

The majority opinion (p. 6, note 4) seeks to distinguish Sutton v. English on the ground that plaintiffs had to establish their rights as against Cora Spencer before they had any standing in the case. The fact is, however, that plaintiff in the case at bar is in precisely the same situation with respect to Indianapolis Gas. In order to recover the sums demanded, either from Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, or the City, plaintiff had to establish:

(1) that it was the proper party to sue for a personal judgment on the unpaid coupons;

(2) that it was entitled to interest on the overdue coupons;

(3) that such interest should be at the rate of six rather than five per cent.

Each of these propositions was vigorously contested by Indianapolis Gas and it prevailed as to the third contention. Every contention that Indianapolis Gas advanced necessarily inured to the benefit of the City, since plaintiff's rights against the City could not be any greater than its rights against Indianapolis Gas. As to those contentions Indianapolis Gas and the City stood in precisely the same position, both of them adverse to the plaintiff. As to those issues plaintiff was under precisely the same necessity of establishing its case against Indianapolis Gas that the plaintiffs in Sutton v. English were under of establishing their case against Cora Spencer.

If we look through the form and regard the realities of the record, it is clear that plaintiff was attempting to recover the overdue interest from all of the defendants and to protect the security against the encroachments of all of them. Since relief of precisely the same character was sought against all the defendants, there is no justification for realigning Indianapolis Gas with the plaintiff.

The rule laid down by the Court—that in a case involving several parties and multiple issues an attempt must be made to determine the "primary and controlling matter" in dispute and that the various parties must be realigned in accordance with their attitude toward that single issue, without regard to their position as to the other issues in the case—is a wholly new rule which is based on a manifest misapprehension of the intention of Congress as heretofore consistently interpreted by the Courts.

Third: This petitioner has never had an adequate opportunity to present its position as to the authorities relied upon by the Court, almost all of which had never been cited in the briefs of any of the parties and all of which are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.

Although the briefs of all the parties and the arguments before the Court have been taken up primarily with the merits of the controversy, we are now advised for the first time (Opinion, p. 4) that certiorari was granted more than a year ago "because of the important jurisdictional issue involved."

When this case was first before this Court on certiorari in October, 1938, we, in effect, requested this Court to grant the City's petition for certiorari if there were any doubt as to jurisdiction.[6] In spite of this request certiorari was denied and we assumed, apparently erroneously, that this Court agreed with us that there was no doubt as to federal jurisdiction.

When this case was first argued to this Court in February, 1941, we pointed out, in answer to certain specific questions from the Court:

> (1) That plaintiff secured a judgment against Indianapolis Gas for over a million dollars;

[6] Our brief opposing certiorari opened with the following statement (Chase's brief opposing certiorari, No. 168, October Term, 1938, pp. 1-2):

> "The decree to which the City takes exception is an interlocutory decree and this Court grants certiorari to review such decrees only 'in extraordinary cases.' However, the question of jurisdiction urged by the City would, if well founded, present an insuperable obstacle to plaintiff's recovery and if there were any doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Federal Court, the ends of justice would best be served by determining that question now, before the time of the courts and the parties has been devoted to a protracted trial. Our opposition to the petition for certiorari is therefore confined to the proposition that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining jurisdiction is unquestionably correct and is in accord with the decisions of this Court and of every Circuit Court of Appeals that has passed upon the question."

(2) That under the decision of this Court in Re Metropolitan Railway Receivership, 208 U. S. 90, 107 (1908), jurisdiction of a federal court is not destroyed even when there is a confession of judgment by a defendant, and that there was no confession of judgment in the case at bar.

(3) That plaintiff sought an injunction against Indianapolis Gas to prevent its interfering with plaintiff's rights under the Lease.

We assumed, apparently erroneously, from the interest thereafter displayed by the Court in the merits of the controversy, that the Court's questions as to jurisdiction had been adequately answered.

When, in May, 1941, the Court set this case down for re-argument, there was no indication that the question of jurisdiction was either uppermost in the Court's mind or considered of any particular importance. Since that question must be met at the threshold of every federal case, we assumed, again erroneously, that the jurisdictional questions were satisfactorily disposed of. This opinion was apparently shared by the City's counsel, since there was only a perfunctory discussion of the jurisdictional question in the briefs filed between the two arguments.[7]

During the second oral argument only one or two members of the Court indicated that they had any doubt as to federal jurisdiction and counsel for Chase was expressly invited by the Court to turn his attention to other questions.

In spite of this situation the majority opinion of the Court denied jurisdiction and rested its conclusion upon some thirty-six cases, only three of which had at any time been called to this Court's attention by the City's counsel.

As we have pointed out in the preceding pages, the Court's decision represents such a complete departure from every decision of this Court and every lower federal court in determining questions of alignment and lays down a rule which is so impracticable and impossible of application that it should be adopted only after thorough and complete consideration. We recognize, of course, that lack of federal jurisdiction was one of the grounds relied upon for certiorari, but in the effort to confine our briefs to a reasonable compass, and particularly in view of the perfunctory way in which the jurisdictional question was treated by the City, we have never done more than summarize our position as to jurisdiction. In view of the far-reaching effect of the Court's decision, the complete departure from all prior decisions, and the new cases relied upon in the opinion, we submit that a more thorough consideration of the questions presented should be accorded the parties.

Fourth: The rule laid down by the Court—that in a case involving several parties and multiple issues an attempt must be made to determine the "primary and controlling matter" in dispute and that the various parties must be realigned in accordance with their attitude toward that single issue, without regard to their position as to the other issues in the case—is wholly impracticable and impossible of application.

The rule laid down by the majority opinion is not only novel and manifestly at variance with the intention of Congress, as heretofore interpreted by the courts, but is wholly impracticable and impossible of application. The fundamental unsoundness of the rule so laid down becomes apparent when an attempt is made to apply it to specific situations involving several parties and multiple issues. The direct conflict between the unanimous decision of this Court in Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 187, and the majority opinion in the case at bar is a helpful illustration. It was suggested during the oral argument that the Ayres case is distinguishable because the transferee of the mortgaged property admitted his liability and merely disputed the amount thereof. Such a distinction is wholly unsound. The principal and indeed the only controversy in that case was the amount due. The mortgagor, Wiswall, admitted that plaintiff's claim as to the amount due was correct. If jurisdiction must be determined in accordance with the attitude of the parties toward the principal controversy, it should have been determined in Ayres v. Wiswall in accordance with their attitude as to the amount due. Chief Justice Waite, however, pointed out the impossibility of realigning as a plaintiff the mortgagor against whom the plaintiff sought a personal judgment.

In personal injury cases there are generally two principal issues or controversies—first, as to liability, and, second, as to the damage sustained. Where there are several joint tort feasors the liability may be clear as to one and doubtful as to others and the extent of the liability will probably be disputed by all. If a joint tort feasor who is clearly liable admits his liability but contends that the other defendants are also liable so that he may receive contribution, must he thereupon be realigned as a plaintiff and has the issue as to the liability of the other defendants become the "principal controversy" on the basis of which the parties must be realigned?

In every suit on a contract there are multiple issues and if there are several parties to the contract different issues may be important in determining the liability of each of the different parties. There may be issues as to:

(1) whether a particular defendant was a party to the contract;

(2) the proper construction of the contract;

(3) whether there was a breach of the contract, and this may be a separate issue as to each of the defendants;

(4) the extent of the damage suffered;

(5) which defendants are responsible for each particular item of damage.

Is it possible for any district court to determine from the pleadings which of these many issues is the "actual and substantial controversy" and what the ultimate attitude of each of the parties will be as to each of those controversies, so as to determine the proper alignment of the parties? Perhaps the majority intended that this question be determined, as actually happened in the present case,[8] only from the issues which happen to remain in the case when it finally reaches the Court of last resort? Such a rule would require that the case be tried and appealed on the merits before the jurisdictional question could be tested, and would be obviously absurd.

When a creditor's bill is filed, as in Merchants' Cotton Press Co. v. Insurance Co., 151 U. S. 368 (1894) complicated questions are frequently presented as to

(1) the liability of the primary debtor,

(2) the liability of the primary debtor's debtor, and

(3) as in the Cotton Press case, the liability of a party who agreed to indemnify the primary debtor's debtor.

How, in such a case, is the court to determine the "primary and controlling matter in dispute"? An examination of the opinion in the Cotton Press case shows that the Court attempted to do no such thing, but followed the well-established practice of retaining as defendants all of the parties against whom the plaintiff sought any relief.

[8] The statement in the Court's opinion (p. 5) that Chase admits "That the case presents 'only one fundamental issue'" is warranted only on the assumption that the Court is confining its consideration of the jurisdictional question to the issues presented in the Supreme Court. Chase never admitted, and it is not the fact, that the case contained only that issue in either of the lower courts.

In these various situations and in the many other situations in which there are multiple issues and a number of parties it is not possible for any district court to determine from the pleadings which of the many issues is the "actual and substantial controversy." Moreover, the relative importance of the various issues presented frequently varies from time to time as the case progresses and in such cases it is obviously impossible for the trial court to determine the ultimate attitude of each of the parties as to each of the various controversies. In such cases is the proper alignment of the parties to be determined, as in the present case, on the basis of the issues which happen to remain in the case when it finally reaches the court of last resort?

It frequently happens that many of the issues vigorously contested in the early stages of the case are not presented to the reviewing courts, because one or more of the litigants did not appeal from the decision of the trial court or did not ask this Court for certiorari, or because those who did seek a review omitted some of the issues decided against them, or because certain issues of fact or law have become unimportant in view of the determination of other issues.

No rule for determining federal jurisdiction can be practicable unless it is susceptible of application at the threshold of the litigation, that is, by the trial court before trial, or, at the latest, when any disputed jurisdictional facts have been determined. The rule laid down in the majority opinion is not practicable because it is not susceptible of application in this way. One or two illustrations will demonstrate this fact.

In Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199 (1918), reviewed in detail in our original brief (pp. 41-2), this Court sustained jurisdiction because there was a conflict between the seven heirs who were plaintiffs and the eighth heir, Cora Spencer, as to whether the community property, if recovered, would be divided among the eight heirs or would go to Cora Spencer alone. Now, suppose that the plaintiffs had been successful in all four of their objects in the District Court so that they had a judgment for the recovery of the $100,000 and the distribution of it among themselves and Cora Spencer, and Cora Spencer then, either through inadvertence or otherwise, failed to appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals or to seek certiorari in this Court. Then, the only issues remaining on appeal or on certiorari would have been the first two (relating to the recovery of the community property) and the conflict between plaintiffs and Cora Spencer would have disappeared. Could the failure of one litigant to appeal in such a situation destroy the jurisdiction which had originally existed in the District Court? It must be clear that since the jurisdiction originally existed, it could not be impaired by the failure of any party to appeal.

Let us apply a similar test in the case at bar. In the District Court Indianapolis Gas denied that plaintiff was entitled to any relief against it and prayed "that as to it the Bill of Complaint be dismissed" (I R. 140). Plaintiff recovered a judgment of more than $1,000,000 (with interest at 6% after judgment) against Indianapolis Gas in the District Court and failed to recover any judgment against either of the other defendants (III R. 1193). As pointed out above (pp. 6-7), Indianapolis Gas appealed from the judgment against it and vigorously urged in the Court of Appeals that plaintiff as Trustee was not the proper party to recover a personal judgment on the unpaid coupons, that plaintiff had no right to interest on interest, that the rate of interest was in any case not more than 5% and that plaintiff could not have both a declaratory judgment and a coercive judgment. These contentions were considered in detail and disposed of by the Court of Appeals (IV R. 1301-6). If the Circuit Court of Appeals had affirmed the judgment of the District Court and refused to render any judgment against the City or Citizens Gas, and Indianapolis Gas alone had petitioned for certiorari to dispute its liability, this Court would of course have held that Indianapolis Gas, the only defendant against whom plaintiff had a judgment and the only one contesting the judgment of the lower court, should not be re-aligned with plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes.

Thus the decision of this Court means that if plaintiff had been successful as to some of the objects sought and unsuccessful as to the others there would have been jurisdiction, but that since plaintiff was successful in the Circuit Court of Appeals as to all the objects which it sought there was no jurisdiction. From the City's point of view this means that there was jurisdiction if the City won and no jurisdiction if the City lost. Any such rule would deprive the parties of the mutuality of protection which is essential to the even-handed administration of justice.

Jurisdiction of the federal courts has never depended and never should depend on success or failure on the merits of the controversy or on the controversies which happened to remain in a case when it finally reached this Court. The lower federal courts could not possibly apply any such criterion as this and it would make federal jurisdiction something shadowy and shifting, appearing and disappearing as the case progresses.

We submit that the impracticability or impossibility of any court, and particularly a trial court, applying the rule which has been laid down in the case at bar for the determination of jurisdictional questions—that the supposed dominant controversy must be found and the parties all aligned in respect of their attitude, if any, toward that controversy—is a convincing explanation as to why no such rule has been adopted during the more than one hundred fifty years since the first Judiciary Act was enacted, and furnishes a strong reason why no such rule should be adopted at this time.

CONCLUSION.

Perhaps the two most important reasons for federal jurisdiction in controversies between citizens of different states are:

> First, the fear that a state court might not administer justice impartially in controversies between citizens of that state and citizens of foreign states,[9] and
> Second, fears arising from the methods of selecting the judiciary in the several states.[10]

These reasons apply with peculiar force in a case such as the one at bar, in which a large municipal corporation of a state is one of the principal litigants, the issues affect in some degree practically all the residents of such municipality, and such residents constitute a large proportion of the electorate who select the judges both in the trial and appellate courts.

If, as the authority cited in the majority opinion suggests,[11] the time has come to eliminate or seriously curtail federal jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship, such jurisdiction should be eliminated or curtailed by Congress and not gradually worn away by the uncertain and irregular erosion of judicial interpretation. The right of a mortgagee, in enforcing the mortgage obligation or protecting the mortgage security, to join both the mortgagor and a transferee from the mortgagor as defendants in a federal court and to have them treated as defendants for the purpose of jurisdiction was settled by this Court in two cases decided more than fifty years ago.[12] We submit that the

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

[November 10, 1941.]

Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a suit instituted by the Chase National Bank, a New York corporation, in the federal District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, naming as defendants the Indianapolis Gas Company, the Citizens Gas Company of Indianapolis [redacted] (Indiana corporations), and the City of Indianapolis. (For brevity's sake the parties will be referred to as Chase, Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City, respectively.) The power of the District Court to entertain this litigation was sustained by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit under the provision of the Judicial Code conferring upon the district courts jurisdiction "Of all suits of a civil nature . . . where the matter in controversy exceeds . . . three thousand dollars, and . . . is between citizens of different States ' . . . .'' 36 Stat. 1091; 28 U. S. C. § 41(1). The correctness of this jurisdictional ruling must be determined before the merits of Chase's claims can be considered. The specific question is this: Does an alignment of the parties in relation to their real interests in the ''matter in controversy'' satisfy the settled requirements of diversity jurisdiction?

As is true of many problems in the law, the answer is to be found not in legal learning but in the realities of the record. Though variously expressed in the decisions, the governing principles are clear. To sustain diversity jurisdiction there must exist an ''actual'', Helm v. Zarecor, 222 U. S. 32, 36, ''substantial'', Niles-Bement Pond Co. v. Iron Moulders Union, [redacted] U. S. 77, 81, controversy between citizens of different states, all of whom on one side of the controversy are citizens of different states from all parties on the other side. Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 3 Cranch 267. Diversity jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon the federal courts by the parties' own determination of who are plaintiffs and who defendants. It is our duty, as it is that of the lower federal courts, to ''look beyond the pleadings and arrange the parties according to their sides in the dispute''. Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, 180. Litigation is the pursuit of practical ends, not a game of chess. Whether the necessary ''collision of interests'', Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., supra, at 181, exists, is therefore not to be determined by mechanical rules. It must be ascertained from the ''principal purpose of the suit'', East Tennessee, etc., Railroad v. Grayson, 119 U. S. 240, 244, and the ''primary and controlling matter in dispute'', Merchants' Cotton Press Co. v. Insurance Co., 151 U. S. 368, 385. These familiar doctrines governing the alignment of parties for purposes of determining diversity of citizenship have consistently guided the lower federal courts[1] and this Court.[2]

English, 246 U. S. 199.

And so we turn to the actualities of this litigation.

Chase is the trustee under a mortgage deed to secure a bond issue executed by Indianapolis Gas in 1902. In 1906 Citizens Gas was formed to compete with Indianapolis Gas in the distribution of light, heat, and power to the people of Indianapolis. Its franchise provided that after the expiration of twenty-five years and the performance of certain specified conditions, the company should be wound up and its property conveyed to the City subject to the company's "outstanding legal obligations". The competition between the two gas companies continued until 1913, when Indianapolis Gas leased all of its gas plant property to Citizens Gas for a term of ninety-nine years. Citizens Gas agreed to pay as rental (a) the interest on the lessor's outstanding bonded indebtedness, and (b) annual sums equal to a six per cent return on Indianapolis Gas's common stock. For twenty-two years thereafter Citizens Gas operated the mortgaged property and paid the interest on the bonds. In 1935, pursuant to its franchise, Citizens Gas conveyed its entire property, including that covered by its lease from Indianapolis Gas, to the City. But the City refused to regard itself bound by this lease. On March 2, 1936, the City and Indianapolis Gas agreed that, pending the settlement of the "presently existing controversy" between them as to whether the lease was valid and binding upon the City, the latter would deposit in escrow sums equal to the interest and dividend payments falling due. The agreement expressly provided that it was made without prejudice to either party's "position or rights".

Chase thereupon filed a bill of complaint in the District Court, naming as defendants Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City. It prayed that the lease from Indianapolis Gas to Citizens Gas be declared valid and binding upon the defendants, and as such be deemed part of the security for the performance of the mortgage obligations; that the City be ordered to perform all of the lessee's obligations in the lease and to pay directly to the plaintiff all of the interest payments as they shall become due; that judgment for overdue interest be entered against the defendants "liable therefor"; and that the plaintiff be awarded costs and attorneys' fees. The City and Citizens Gas specifically denied that the lease was valid and binding upon them; they alleged, further, that the controversy existed solely between Indianapolis Gas and the City, "citizens" of the same state. In its answer, Indianapolis Gas denied that it had "ever contended or admitted that the said ninety-nine year lease was not and is not a valid and binding obligation" upon the defendants.

Finding "no collision between the interests of the plaintiff and the interests of the Indianapolis Gas Company", the District Court realigned the latter as a party plaintiff, and finding identity of citizenship between some of the plaintiffs and the remaining defendants, dismissed the suit for want of jurisdiction. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, one judge dissenting, 96 F. (2d) 363, and certiorari was denied, 305 U. S. 600.

On remand to the District Court Chase filed a supplemental bill alleging default as to interest payments falling due and praying judgment against the defendants in the amount of the unpaid coupons. It alleged that "neither The Indianapolis Gas Company nor Citizens Gas Company, nor both of them, have property sufficient to pay their interest in default on the Bonds, other than the property now in the possession and under the control of the City of Indianapolis". This was admitted by Indianapolis Gas. The District Court held on the merits that the lease was not enforceable against either Citizens Gas or the City, that the former had no power under its franchise to bind the latter to the lease, and that by conveying the leased property to the City, Citizens Gas thereby discharged itself of its lessee obligations. Accordingly, the Court ordered that judgment be entered only against Indianapolis Gas for the amount of the unpaid interest.

Asserting that the District Court erred in not holding the lease valid and enforceable against the defendants, both Chase and Indianapolis Gas appealed. The Circuit Court of Appeals sustained their position and again reversed, 113 F. (2d) 217. The Court held, further, that Chase was entitled to a judgment for unpaid interest against the parties in the following order of liability: the City, Citizens Gas, and Indianapolis Gas. We granted certiorari, 311 U. S. 636, because of the important jurisdictional issue involved in the litigation.

The facts leave no room for doubt that on the merits only one question permeates this litigation: Is the lease whereby Indianapolis Gas in 1913 conveyed all its gas plant property to Citizens Gas valid and binding upon the City? This is the "primary and controlling matter in dispute". The rest is window-dressing designed to satisfy the requirements of diversity jurisdiction. Everything else in the case is incidental to this dominating controversy, with respect to which Indianapolis Gas and the City, "citizens" of the same state, are on opposite sides.[3] That the case presents "only one fundamental issue" and that that is the obligation of the City under the lease, Chase admits and indeed insists upon in its brief on the merits. Chase and Indianapolis Gas have always been united on this issue: both have always contended for the validity of the lease and the City's obligation under it. The opinion of the District Court lays bare the heart of this controversy:

"There can be no doubt that both plaintiff and the defendant, The Indianapolis Gas Company, have at all times asserted that the lease in question is valid and is binding upon the City, as Trustee. Neither is there any doubt as to their interest in sustaining the validity of such lease at the time of the institution of this action, prior hereto, and at all times subsequent thereto, and that many conferences have been held by and between them, through their attorneys, and many letters have passed between them relating to this subject. . . . Later, when the parties [i. e., Indianapolis Gas and the City] were unable to adjust their differences and arrive at an agreement, it was decided by The Indianapolis Gas Company and the plaintiff that a suit should be instituted. The common stockholders of that company, of course, had a vital interest in the question of the validity of the lease because, if the lease is valid, they are assured of a six per cent return upon their stock for many years. If, however, a foreclosure suit should have been begun, or if the lease is invalid, no such return is assured. It was natural, therefore, that the Gas Company should take an active interest in the litigation and attempt to guide it along the course that would be most advantageous to it and to its stockholders."

Plainly, therefore, Chase and Indianapolis Gas, are, colloquially speaking, partners in litigation. The property covered by the [3] It is contended that, notwithstanding their indissoluble bond on the controlling issue, there are "sufficient matters in controversy" between Chase and Indianapolis Gas to preclude their alignment on the same side. Chase of course did not bring this suit in order to obtain a declaration that, regardless of the validity of the lease, Indianapolis Gas is still ultimately responsible for the interest payments on its bonded indebtedness. That was not really in issue, and by its answer, Indianapolis Gas took it out of the case. The further argument is made that, by entering into the escrow agreement with the City, Indianapolis Gas has asserted a claim to the interest payments adverse to that of Chase and the bondholders. But the facts are against this contention. The agreement deals merely with the disposition of the interest falling due during the pendency of the litigation. Moreover, the lease between Indianapolis Gas and Citizens Gas contains no provisions requiring payment of the interest direct to Chase or the bondholders. Nor can diversity jurisdiction be rested upon so flimsy a basis as Chase's prayer for reimbursement of costs and attorneys' fees. The tail flies with the kite.

lease is now in the City's possession; Chase is simply acting to protect the bondholders' security. As to Indianapolis Gas, if the lease is upheld, it will continue to receive a six per cent return on its capital, and the burden of paying the interest on its bonded indebtedness will be not upon it but upon the City. What Chase wants Indianapolis Gas wants and the City does not want. Yet the City and Indianapolis Gas were made to have a common interest against Chase when, as a matter of fact, the interests of the City and of Indianapolis Gas are opposed to one another. Therefore, if regard be had to the requirements of jurisdictional integrity, Indianapolis Gas and Chase are on the same side of the controversy not only for their own purposes but also for purposes of diversity jurisdiction. But such realignment places Indiana "citizens" on both sides of the litigation and precludes assumption of jurisdiction based upon diversity of citizenship. We are thus compelled to the conclusion that the District Court was without jurisdiction.[4] And, of course, this Court by its denial of certiorari when the case was here the first time could not confer the jurisdiction which Congress has denied.

[4] Compare Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178, a suit by a Pennsylvania mortgagee of a Georgia waterworks company to restrain a Georgia city from building a new waterworks and to compel specific performance of the city's contract with the waterworks company. The latter was joined as a defendant, on the theory that it was a party to the contract sought to be enforced. The Court held that the bill should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction: "... the courts will look beyond the pleadings and arrange the parties according to their sides in the dispute. When that is done, it is obvious that the waterworks company is on the plaintiff's side." 197 U. S. at 180. Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 187, and Coney v. Winchell, 116 U. S. 227, are not applicable here. They hold merely that in a foreclosure suit the mortgagee may join the mortgagor and his assignee as defendants; they did not involve any controversy between the mortgagor and the "assignee" as to whether the assignment is binding upon the latter.

Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, clearly holds that the parties must be aligned according to their "attitude towards the actual and substantial controversy". 246 U. S. at 204. The plaintiffs, who included all of the heirs of Mary Jane except Cora, sought to establish their right to certain property claimed to have belonged to Mary Jane. The claimants could not recover unless they proved that a residuary bequest to Cora was invalid—and with respect to this issue, their position was completely adverse to Cora's. "But, as already pointed out, even could complainants succeed in showing that Mary Jane Hubbard at the time of her death was entitled to the community property, her will giving all the residue of her property to Cora D. Spencer still stands in the way of their succeeding to it as heirs-at-law, and hence their prayer to have that will annulled with respect to the residuary clause is essential to their right to any relief in the suit." 246 U. S. at 207. If the plaintiffs prevailed on this issue of the validity of the residuary gift to Cora,

This is not a sacrifice of justice to technicality. For the question here is not whether Chase and Indianapolis Gas may pursue what they conceive to be just claims against the City, but whether they may pursue them in the federal courts in Indiana rather than in its state courts. The fact that Chase prefers the adjudication of its claims by the federal court is certainly no reason why we should deny the plain facts of the controversy and yield to illusive artifices. Settled restrictions against bringing local disputes into the federal courts cannot thus be circumvented.

These requirements, however technical seeming, must be viewed in the perspective of the constitutional limitations upon the judicial power of the federal courts,[5] and of the Judiciary Acts in defining the authority of the federal courts when they sit, in effect, as state courts. See Madisonville Traction Company v. Mining Company, 196 U. S. 239, 255, and Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 377. The dominant note in the successive enactments of Congress relating to diversity jurisdiction is one of jealous restriction, of avoiding offense to state sensitiveness, and of relieving the federal courts of the overwhelming burden of "business that intrinsically belongs to the state courts" in order to keep them free for their distinctive federal business. See Friendly, The Historic Basis of Diversity Jurisdiction, 41 Harv. L. Rev. 483, 510; Shamrock Oil Corp. v. Sheets, 313 U. S. 100, 108-09; Healy v. Ratta, 292 U. S. 263, 270. "The policy of the statute [conferring diversity jurisdiction upon the district courts] calls for its strict construction. The power reserved to the states, under the Constitution, to provide for the determination of controversies in their courts may be restricted only by the action of Congress in conformity to the judiciary sections of the Constitution. Due regard for the rightful independence of state governments, which should actuate federal courts, requires that they scrupulously confine their own jurisdiction to the precise limits which the statute has defined." Healy v. Ratta, supra, at 270. In defining the boundaries of diversity jurisdiction, this Court must their interests and hers would then be the same with respect to the remaining issues in the case. But the Court held that in relation to the "actual and substantial controversy", Cora and the plaintiffs were on opposite sides, thereby sustaining diversity jurisdiction. In Sutton v. English, alignment of the parties with respect to their real interests sustained diversity; such alignment here precludes jurisdiction. That case and this are applications of the same principle.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

[November 10, 1941.]

Mr. Justice Jackson.

The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Roberts, Mr. Justice Reed and I are unable to concur in this disposition of these writs, in view of what we consider to be the controlling facts of this controversy.

Chase is trustee under a mortgage executed in 1902 by Indianapolis Gas to secure a bond issue. The mortgage covered a public utility gas plant and distribution system, together with after-acquired property, including intangibles.

In 1913 Indianapolis Gas turned the mortgaged utility system over to Citizens Gas, a competitor, under a lease for a term of ninety-nine years. Citizens Gas undertook among other things to pay the interest "as the same shall from time to time fall due" on the bonds secured by the mortgage and also to pay certain sums, subject to some variation by reference to the price received for gas, to the stockholders of Indianapolis Gas. Citizens Gas unified this leased plant with its own, and in 1935 conveyed to the City the entire property in conformity to statute which it is contended obligates the City to assume the obligations of the lease. The City took possession of the property but refused to accept the obligations of the lease. The City and Indianapolis Gas then agreed that pending settlement of the controversy thus precipitated, sums payable under the lease as interest should be deposited in escrow, instead of being paid to Chase. Accordingly there was default in the payment to the trustee of interest on the bonds.

For jurisdictional purposes Indianapolis Gas, the mortgage debtor, and the City, whose possession of the property under the circumstances was alleged to result in an assumption of the debt, as well as Citizens Gas, the intermediate owner (who seems of no consequence to the issues under discussion), were all citizens of the State of Indiana, while Chase, the trustee, was a citizen of New York. Under these circumstances Chase began an action in the federal District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, joining Indianapolis Gas, Citizens Gas, and the City as defendants. It asked that the interest of Indianapolis Gas in the lease be adjudged a part of its security for the performance of the mortgage obligations; that the lease be declared valid and binding upon all the defendants; that the City be ordered to pay directly to the trustee all of the interest payments as they fell due; that judgment for overdue interest be entered against the defendants liable therefor, including Indianapolis Gas; and that plaintiff be awarded costs and attorneys' fees.

This Court now destroys federal jurisdiction of the case by a transposition of parties, the radical nature of which appears most clearly from the judgments rendered below. It forces into the position of co-plaintiff one party which the District Court adjudged entitled to recover over a million dollars and another which the District Court adjudged solely liable to pay that sum. This same adversity was found by the Circuit Court of Appeals, which held the one entitled to receive and the other obligated to pay this sum with increase due to the lapse of time. It modified the judgment only by including two additional judgment debtors on whom it fixed primary and secondary liability, but continued the judgment against Indianapolis Gas with a tertiary liability for its satisfaction. The subtlety by which a judgment debtor is transfigured into a creditor for jurisdictional purposes deserves analysis, if for no other reason than because of its novelty.

The Court cannot resort to a decision of the merits of the case over which it holds itself to be without jurisdiction in order to justify its characterization of some of the trustee's claims as "window dressing" and "artifice." The measure of jurisdiction should be taken from the pleadings unless the claims are frivolous on their face. That is not the case here. In ultimate effect Chase alleged a cause of action and sought judgment against the City upon its personal undertaking to assume and pay the indebtedness upon the mortgage given by Indianapolis Gas to the plaintiff. It also alleged a cause of action and sought judgment against Indianapolis Gas for the amount of the coupon interest. Both demands were in excess of $3,000. If the plaintiff had asserted these demands in two separate actions, no one would doubt that both were within the jurisdiction of the District Court. In each there is an adequate diversity of citizenship and each involves the requisite jurisdictional amount and each is "actual" and "substantial" enough to support the jurisdiction, if this means anything more than that a demand for $3,000 must be involved. A United States district court is not without jurisdiction to render a judgment for $3,000 on confession if there is the requisite diversity of citizenship. Re Metropolitan Railway Receivership, 208 U. S. 90 at 108. The trustee's right to judgment against the mortgagor, even though uncontested, is a matter of substance, for the judgment is the important—indeed indispensable—means of pursuing the mortgaged property into the hands of the City in the event that it should turn out in the suit against the City that it had not become personally liable for any part of the mortgage debt.

Jurisdiction of the federal courts is indeed a variable and illusory thing, if the jurisdiction which a District Court admittedly has of two separate causes of action is lost when they are united in one, agreeably to the federal rules of procedure, because the one defendant as a surety seeks to enforce its equitable right to be exonerated by the other who is alleged to be the principal debtor.

The doctrine of realignment permits and requires a nominal defendant to be treated as a plaintiff for the purpose of defining the real controversy where no real cause of action is asserted against him by the plaintiff, but it does not admit of such treatment of a defendant against whom the plaintiff asserts a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court. The plaintiff cannot rightly be deprived of the benefit of that jurisdiction, conferred upon him by laws enacted pursuant to the Constitution of the United States, because the court may think that such a cause of action is relatively less important than that asserted against another defendant or because one action "dominates" the other or because one is more "actual" or "substantial" than the other. The statute itself sets up the criterion of substantiality by fixing the jurisdictional amount at $3,000. Moreover, in this case whether either of the rights asserted is more substantial than the other depends on the outcome of the litigation, which can hardly be used to determine jurisdiction which must exist at the beginning of the litigation.

If we examine this controversy in detail it appears that the conflicts between the trustee and its mortgagor were not feigned or merely formal. While the mortgage and the debt, which created the opposition inherent in the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee or between debtor and creditor, were undenied, Chase was asking that its lien be judicially construed to cover not merely the physical property described therein but also the entire interest of Indianapolis Gas in the lease which required payments to stockholders over and above the interest payments for the bondholders. Furthermore, Chase asked the Court to set aside the escrow agreement by which Indianapolis and the City had assumed to exclude Chase from dominion over the escrow funds. Chase demanded that Indianapolis Gas be denied future control over such funds and that they be paid directly to itself. These were conflicts as to the extent of its interest in and control over any cause of action against the City. They existed betwen Chase and the defendant Indianapolis Gas and concerned them alone.

There was also an issue as to the aggregate amount of the trustee's claim, which all defendants had a common interest in minimizing. The trustee claimed to be entitled to interest at 6% after default on coupons which bore a 5% interest rate, and it also claimed interest on overdue interest. This Court has held that where the only issue concerns the amount of the debt, as to which a mortgagor agrees with the plaintiff, but the issue is contested only by another mortgagor who has assumed the entire mortgage debt, the mortgage and the debt are the real subject matter of the controversy; that the decree when the amount is ascertained must run against all debtors; and that the uncontesting mortgagor is a necessary party on the side opposite the mortgagee. Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 187.

There were other issues on which the defendants were in sharp conflict between themselves. Indianapolis Gas and Chase both served their respective interests by contending against the City that its acts had the legal effect of binding it to the terms of the lease. But their common attitude in relation to this issue sprang from different legal origins. The rights of Chase had their source and their measure in the mortgage. The mortgage might or might not, depending upon the outcome of the litigation, be construed to give Chase a right to enforce for its own benefit the lease terms as against the City. Indianapolis Gas, on the other hand, derived no rights against the City from that instrument and was not, like Chase, limited by it. Indianapolis Gas's rights had no other measure than that found in the terms of the lease itself.

We would be diligent no less than the majority to prevent imposition on the jurisdiction of the federal courts by means of "window dressing" or "artifice." We find in this case nothing that warrants either characterization, and we think that the precedents invoked to support today's action reveal the gap which divides the doctrine of realignment as heretofore applied by this Court from the application made of it today.

The majority opinion leans heavily on Dawson v. Columbia Trust Co., 197 U. S. 178. Mr. Justice Holmes in that case said: " . . . it is obvious that the water works company is on the plaintiff's side and was made a defendant solely for the purpose of reopening in the United States Court a controversy which had been decided against it in the courts of the State." And he said again: " . . . when the arrangement of the parties is merely a contrivance between friends for the purpose of founding a jurisdiction which otherwise would not exist, the device cannot be allowed to succeed." And so say we, but there is not the slightest indication of this kind of connivance in the case before us.

In Helm v. Zarecor, 222 U. S. 32, this Court refused to align with the plaintiff a corporation although its board and officers were in entire agreement with the position of complainants on the merits of the case. Another of the cases invoked is Niles-Bement Co. v. Iron Moulders Union, 254 U. S. 77. Here a New Jersey corporation sought to break a strike by filing a bill in an Ohio District Court against labor unions, individual strikers, and an Ohio corporation, all citizens of Ohio. The New Jersey plaintiff owned a controlling interest in the Ohio defendant, the two had common officers and directors, and no relief whatever was asked against the Ohio company, which the bill alleged was being delayed in delivery of goods because of the strike. The Court refused to allow such an imposition on its jurisdiction. In Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, this Court held it to be error to align one of the defendants with the plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes where her interest was adverse to plaintiff on one out of four issues, although with plaintiff as to three of the four.

We take the statement in the opinion of the Court that its basis is "not in legal learning but in the realities of the record" to be another way of saying that it disagrees with the lower court's view of the facts rather than with its view of the law. Review of facts is not the conventional function of this Court, and resort to it at this stage of this litigation is somewhat less than fair to the courts below as well as to the litigants.

Three years ago this Court refused to review the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals that this controversy was within the federal jurisdiction. City of Indianapolis v. Chase National Bank, 305 U. S. 600. Of course a denial of certiorari is not to be taken as a ruling on the merits of any question presented. However, where the case is again brought here after some years of litigation, jurisdiction ought not to be overturned on light or inconsequential grounds or on disagreements with the court below on matters of fact. To do so here is likely to result in further and, as we see it, needless delay in settling the status of an important utility and the obligations and rights of a populous municipality. We think it the duty of the Court to end this controversy by proceeding to judgment on the merits and that nothing in this record justifies ousting these parties from the federal courts. If, as the opinion intimates, the forefathers are thought to have been unwise in creating a federal jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship, we would think the remedy of those so minded would be found in Congressional withdrawal of such jurisdiction rather than in the confusing process of judicial constriction.

We would follow the words of the jurisdictional statute when it is sought to restrict its application, quite as faithfully as when the effort is to enlarge it by recourse to doctrines which conflict with its words. Compare Healy v. Ratta, 292 U. S. 263, 270.
